Biology Course Damages School's Academic Standards

To the Editor:

I have read, with interest, the recent letters concerning the Biology 105 course, I am making the following comments, because this course, at one time or other, affects most of the students at FSU.

I agree with Mr. Steinberg, and his reasons, that this is a ridiculous course, but this course is more than that; it is deplorable. It is deplorable for two main reasons. First, it is damaging to this school's standards. A school's rate of standing is based on many things, one of which is the quality of its courses and of those teaching them. Biology 105, in my opinion, must be rated "low on the totem pole" in both respects.

The course is listed as a basic requirements course and, as such, should offer to the student basic, general concepts concerning the field of biology.

Biology 105, however, does not do this. The freshman is not interested in an organic approach to living matter, nor should he be expected to show interest. He is interested in fundamental macromolecular interactions, both in respect to the workings of his body and to other living matter.

In short he wants a basic foundation in biology. The unfortunate thing, however, is that he does not get this foundation.

Instead he gets a hodge-podge of specific ideas, many of which he can't grasp, either because they are too advanced for his background, or because they are explained in class in such a manner as to add only more confusion.

The book is well-written, but it could be made better use of in a general biochemistry course. The freshman must wade through the many complicated specifics to come

Even should he be fortunate enough to accomplish this task, the general concepts he receives are so muddled because of the bricks in his foundation. Thus, the course fails to accomplish the purpose of a basic course.

Second, and more important, this course is deplorable because of the tremendous waste as concerns the students. What useful thing has been accomplished by coming to class three days a week.

Perhaps the student plans to major in biology; that is, if someone gets to him in time to convince him that all biology courses are not like this one. If, therefore, he is not disillusioned, he may start off with Zoology 206.

The student is fortunate. This course is exceedingly congested. In addition the professor, in the finest sense of the word, is a teacher.

Even with these advantages, however, the student is in for a rough time, for he must dig and scrape to acquire in this course the basic foundation in biology that he missed as a freshman.

He, therefore, must study two to three times as hard to reach the same level of competency as a student who had the basic foundation before coming to this course.

What a waste, gentlemen, of the biology department; for you see, the time to initially stimulate a student's interest in the field of biology is, curiously enough, in a basic course. I'm sure you would be interested in knowing the huge percentage of the numerous students to whom I've talked who decided, after half a trimester, that they were considering a major in biology; that is, until they took Biology 105.

For the student who is taking Biology 105 only to fulfill a school requirement, the waste is just as evident. What does he get out of the course besides the facts on the molecular and submolecular level, many of which he could not comprehend, and most of which he will forget upon termination of the course. Even those facts which he is fortunate enough to retain are of little use in later life.

This person has no basic understanding of the overall picture in the field of biology. Does he really know the basic concepts of complete organisms, such as the difference between a plant and an animal, how, as a living organism, functions, or the relations between animals and plants and their environment? Those who are taking and those who have taken this course can testify to their ability to answer these important general questions.

No, if he sees an Arthropod he would be surprised to learn that this is the phylum name of the insect he is observing, he could not rate its relative evolutionary position in relation to other phyla, nor could he answer even a few basic questions about its relation to its environment.

He simply does not have the very necessary basic tools required to answer these questions. Of course, he can cite, on the molecular level, theories as to how DNA and RNA are synthesized in the insect's cells and how ATP is formed in the drogen transfer of respiration. These are basic, general concepts which give him a clear understanding of the insect?

For those in the biology department who set policy, may I suggest you think about the meaning of basic requirements course. I have been here for a year now and I have seen the freshman biology class go steadily downhill.

If one didn't know better, it would seem that you don't know what is happening within your own department.

Gentlemen, it's high time someone took an active interest in raising the quality of your course, if for other reason than for your students' sakes. It seems to me that this is a pretty important reason.

In conclusion I will say that, were to again major in biology, I probably would not see me in the field for more than three trimesters. I would be scared stiffed the first awaiting me in future courses.

No, I would perhaps major in history, I hear that they are fortunate old fashioned, for they still learn that the best way to beat a student is to give him, when he is a freshman, a general course on the field of history.

'Liberalism' Does Not Mean Ethnocentrism

To the Editor:

Perhaps it is never occurred to Paul Snyder that in calling liberal and leftist groups extremists, saying that "They are usually extremely biased and ethnocentric and seek out scapegoats for their immense hatred" that he is committing the very same mistake for which he is castigating them.

Perhaps some liberal or leftist groups do exhibit the tendencies he accuses them of. I do not know, and doubt that he does. Until he has made a careful survey of all the groups that would fall into this category, how can he responsibly make blanket statements about them?

Speaking for myself alone, the only person for whom I am qualified to speak, being a liberal, or leftist if you wish, does not mean being biased and ethnocentric or indulging in hate, or making a living off the segregation issue.

It means looking at our society and our world with as nearly unprejudiced eyes as possible, becoming concerned about the problems around, and trying to solve them as morally, equitably, and efficiently as possible, regardless of the dictates of tradition, realizing always that problems solved in one generation may pop up again the next and that one generation's answers do not fit another's problems.

This credo means that such groups as the American League, such persons as Gen. Walker incur my enmity because they threaten not only to perpetuate certain problems, but to squelch the source of possible solution. Squelching freedom of thought and expression. But opposition to such groups and persons is not the basis for my striving, nor is my striving cease when these elements are gone.

Mr. Snyder makes the error of supposing that the liberal movement arose as a response to certain specific trends, groups, and individuals. In all likelihood, as long as there are social problems, there will be somewhere a liberal group to grapple with those problems. This, not hate nor the wish for glory, is the basis of the liberal movement as I see it.

As for persons in beards, sunglasses, etc., may I remind Mr. Snyder that the greatest liberal of them all had a beard and would most likely have worn sunglasses had he been able to get them, because it's frightfully hot out there in Israel.

S.A.P. Position Clarified

To the Editor:

This is a letter to clarify the position of the Students Act for Peace as regards a petition sent by the Committee of Cultural Freedom to guests of the University for the Artist and Lecture Series.

In the first place, Students Act for Peace has in no way endorsed or supported this petition. The organization through its office and membership has not taken any stand concerning the petition.

The Students Act for Peace main interest on campus is to promote the cause of World Peace through education and non-violent action. Students seeking to help promote these goals are always welcomed to join S.A.P. and help carry out its ideas. When students wish to promote other specific goals they can participate in other groups such as the Young Democrats, Socialists, Y.A.F., or the Committee for Cultural Freedom.

The point to be remembered is that S.A.P. is in no way responsible for the actions other organizations may take.

Pritchett Outstanding In Drills

By JOHN WOOD
Sports Writer

Ed Pritchett, a 6-2, 177 pound junior quarterback, has been the outstanding performer so far in spring drills for the 1964 edition of the Seminole Football team.

Pritchett, a late-season flash who starred in the final three games last season, currently holds down the signal-calling post on the White (Chief) both way unit.

Pritchett, who started every game after his first appearance with the Tribe gridders, paused a minute from his spring practice duties to reflect on the progress of the team toward the September 18 opener with Miami.

Said Pritchett, as he warmed up before the beginning of drills Monday, "Spring Practice is coming along real well. There is a lot of spirit and the attitude of the team is real good."

"It's really too early to say," he continued, "how the team is looking, for we are still changing the offense around and giving the younger players a chance to show their stuff." "We are getting used to the new coaches we have this spring and I feel we have made a great deal of improvement in our performance."

Pritchett feels that the new substitution rule enacted in January by the NCAA Rules Committee will allow the Seminoles to specialize more, building around one offensive team and one defensive team. "Of course," he is quick to point out, "each team will have to be able to go both ways."

Tossing the pigskin back and forth with Steve Tensi, who quarterbacks the Gamet (offense) team, Pritchett remarked that the spirit "has been real good so far, everybody is hustling. There are no gripes after practice is over. Instead the fellows talk about how the others did in the practices."

"So far, few weak points have shown up in the drills, but we can always improve. Our timing is still a little off, but that can be ironed out in the fall."

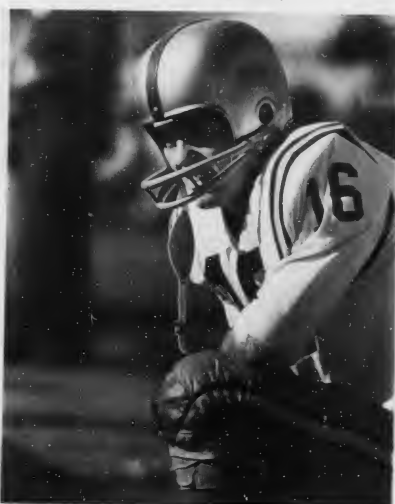

Pritchett, who feels that the first appearance of the University of Florida in Tallahassee is a "great" chance for FSU to pick up its first victory over the Gators, regards the '64 schedule as tougher than last year's.

"Of course, we only play two SEC teams, but the schedule is tough overall."

Like most of his teammates, the former redshirt halfback thinks the new field house for the team is "tremendous."

ED PRITCHETT

...outstanding quarterback for the Tribe last season, continues to show the same intensity in Spring practice.

Seminoles Go Offensive

"I like to play offensive baseball—using hit-and-run and base stealing," said new baseball coach Fred Hatfield in outlining Tribe strategy for the coming season, today.

FSU opens the diamond season Monday against Florida Southern College.

"This year's sluggers have the potential to play the fast offensive game," Hatfield said and cited Jim Reed, Dave Dahlen, Monte McBride, and Bill Bursie as speedy and aggressive base runners.

To keep other teams from using the same strategy, Hatfield has "good catching from men who can hold runners on the base. Our pitchers have pretty good moves to the bag, and the double play combination is working fairly well."

The Seminoles are not without their problems. They are five days behind the practice schedule because of rain. None of the veteran pitchers won more than one game last year, and the left side of the infield is still unsettled.

Hatfield feels however, that he has six men on the pitching staff who can win.

"75-80% of a ball game depends on the pitching. If these boys come through the way I think they can we have a good chance this season."

Padgett's Harley-Davidson

Tallahassee, Florida

AMERICAN MADE MOTORCYCLES

To iron out the difficulties in the infield, Hatfield has been trying Dave Dahlen, Bill Bursie, and Larry Johnson at third. At short, Dahlen and Johnson have been alternating with Ralph Cross.

"Practices have been coming along well since the good weather hit, and with good weather the rest of the week, we should be ready for South-fern by Monday," predicted Hatfield.

Dinghys To Sail

FSU To Race In Regatta

By KAY HUFFMASTER

"If all our good skippers could go to every regatta, there is no doubt in my mind that we could win them all," said Herb Elphick, Commodore of the FSU Sailing Club.

The Sailing Club will demonstrate the skills of some of their skippers this weekend when they compete in a regatta at the reservation against St. Petersburg Junior College and St. John's Junior College.

The Associate Dinghy Championship will start at 9 a.m. and last all weekend.

The FSU Sailing Club is new to the campus this year Commodore Elphick emphasized that "without the work of Dr. Michael Kasha there would be no sailing club at FSU."

The deplorable boating situation at the reservation, said Elphick, prompted Dr. Kasha to persuade the Reservation Committee to buy six Flying Dutchman Junior boats.

Dr. Kasha's enthusiasm spread until now the Sailing Club has from 50 to 60 members. FSU's participation in out-of-state regattas was a reason for Commodore Elphick's coming here from St. John's River Junior College.

Anyone who shows interest can become a member of the club. Since the purpose of the club is to teach and promote sailing in general, encouragement is given to people who have never sailed before. The club then sends a team from its members to represent FSU in regattas.

Beginning lessons are given every Saturday morning at the reservation from 10 until 12. Saturday afternoon is devoted to "chalking hours" for future skippers and any who wish to crew. Sunday morning from 10 to 12 advanced classes are held for skippers. Races between members are held in the afternoon.

The next event in which FSU will be represented is the St. Petersburg Invitational. This will be Easter Weekend and will be a regatta of the year. An impressive list of 23 schools are participating some of which are St. College, Brown, Holy Cross, etc.

Stearns, Doyle To Head Student Party State

The Student Party convention was held Tuesday night by a contest for the Junior Women's Senate nomination and a deadlock in the race for the Sophomore Class Secretary - Social Chairman nomination.

In the Junior Women's Senate contest, Lucy Bland edged out Cam Kilgore in the third ballot to join Pam Mozur, who had established a clear majority in the initial vote, as the party nominees.

Party Chairman Al Milton presided over the nomination of candidates for the upcoming Spring Elections. After three tie ballots between Rannie Barnes and Jan Sewert for the Sophomore Class Secretary-Social Chairman post, the convention decided to table the nomination until Wednesday night, in order to give the contestants more time to establish their support.

In the class officers, Jim Brandt received the SP not-for-Senior Class President and Carol Peters was tabbed for Senior Secretary-Social Chairman. There was no nomination for the position of Senior Class Vice President. The party will return to this post when the other officers have been completed tonight in the Suwannee Room.

Gary Hurlbut, Margaret DeHoff, and Susie Peters received the nomination for the posts of Junior Class President, Vice President, and Secretary-Social Chairman respectively.

The Sophomore Class officers nominated were John Wiles for President and Jim McClay for Vice President.

In the Senior Class Senate nominations, Mike Thacksen was accepted as the Men's Senate candidate by acclamation and Ruth Doyle was designated the nominee for Women's Senate.

Gene Stearns and Jim Hillburn will run for Junior Class Men's Senate, with Pam Mozur and Lucy Bland seeking the Women's Senate position.

On the Honor Court and Judiciary for the three upper classes.

This 25th Annual Student Party convention featured a change in the voting procedures, as suggested by the Student Government Elections Commission.

The roll-call in ballots was by the individual delegates representing the organizations present, to prevent last minute changes in the delegate list.

The delegate on the list compiled two weeks earlier by the party was to be present for the organization represented to have a vote. Also, nomination speeches were limited to two minutes length.

Other officers of the Student Party besides Chairman Al Milton are: Vice Chairman Ron Borst, Treasurer Karen Hammond, Recording Secretary Nancy May, Corresponding Secretary Cam Kilgore, Publicity Chairman Jim McClay, and Campaign Manager Al Moon.

Senate Sets Board, Judiciary Modified

By AL GALBRAITH
Flambeau Staff Writer

Student Senate passed a bill modifying judicial investigation and approved a constitutional amendment establishing a University Union Board in yesterday's meeting in Longmire Auditorium.

The bill on judicial investigation was introduced last week by Senator Jeanie Williamson, and modifies the existing system of prosecution by establishing a staff of investigators who "investigate, prepare, and present cases." The bill revises the statutory chapters on the Honor Court and the Procedure for Honor Court, University Court and its divisions, in line with suggestions from members of the Honor Court.

Senator Williamson's bill was given favorable recommendation by the Labor, Student Services, and Education Committee after minor amendments were approved. The amended bill passed unanimously.

The proposed amendment to the Student Body Constitution was accepted with one dissenting vote. The amendment creates a University Union Board, the duties of which are to include operating the University Union as the community center for the University, providing a cultural, social and recreational program and creating and maintaining a staff of investigators.

The amendment was presented last week by Senators Ruth Doyle and Hugh McElvay, and was given to the Labor, Student Services, and Education Committee for study. The bill passed with two minor amendments.

There will be eight student members of the University Union Board: two to be appointed by the President of the Student Body, one of whom shall be Secretary of the University Union on the President's Cabinet; three to be elected in regular student body elections; and three to be elected by the outgoing members of the University Union Board from candidates whom shall have had two trimesters' experience on Union committees.

In addition, there will be five non-student members of the Board who shall be appointed by the President of the University for a three year term.

The bill is to be voted upon by the student body in the next election, since it is a proposed amendment to the Student Body Constitution.

In other action, Student Senate approved a resolution drawn up by the special Laundry Services Committee, which he is recommending that all freshmen in university housing be required to pay the existing fee of $17 per trimester for the complete laundry service, and that the student body be given the option of paying a fee of $5 per trimester for flannel, paying $17 for the complete service, or not participating in a laundry service plan.

Senator John Merting introduced a bill drawn up by the LSSE Committee, to which he is recommending that all freshmen in university housing be required to pay the existing fee of $17 per trimester for the complete laundry service, and that the student body be given the option of paying a fee of $5 per trimester for flannel, paying $17 for the complete service, or not participating in a laundry service plan.

'An Evening Of Dance' Opens Tomorrow Night In Westcott

By PAT FREEMAN
Flambeau News Editor

Poetry in motion will be only one of the featured numbers Friday and Saturday nights when "An Evening of Dance" is presented by Theatre Dance in Westcott Auditorium.

Eleven selections will be included in the program, which will begin at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are now on sale in the Westcott Ticket Office at $1 for the general public and $2 for students.

Members of the Theatre Dance Group will offer a varied slate of dances, ranging from jazz interpretations to a mathematical battle.

"Jazz moves" will open the "dancing evening," with a trio, duet and solo composing the number.

"The Secret of Clowns" will follow with a light presentation of a lonely blue clown. The secret remains a secret until the performance, however, and the clown isn't talking... just dancing.

Angel Flight Presents Follies

The Angel Flight Folk Follies will be presented Saturday March 21 at the Angel Flight and Arnold Air Society in Westcott from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.

The production will feature the best of the local campus talent. A few of the groups highlighting the performance are the Burgundy Singers, the Merrymenters, the Wachsenmen and the Feta Pickers.

Proceeds from the bootnanny will be used for sending several members of Angel Flight to the Angel Flight National Conclave in Denver, Colo.

Tickets may be purchased from any member of Angel Flight or the Arnold Air Society, beginning tomorrow.

"The bonny Earl of Murray" provides folk quality with music written for guitar and banjo. The bonny Earl was Queen Mary's love and might have become king, had he not been killed needlessly by "Huntly."

Now this lady will look "flung o'er the castle down" ere she sees the Earl of Murray come sounding through the town.

Asatistical-serious treatment of the problem of Evil versus Good appears in the dance "Self." One's self has the power of choice, but the choice may prove to be an interesting one, as the Theatre Dance members will show.

"Daybreak" follows with a lyrical quality of movement, and "Carmen" offers a gypsy flirtation based on the opera by Bizet.

The final presentation will be a "Quartet of Seasons," in four basic movements. Dancers representing Summer, Autumn, Winter and Spring present the unity of seasons in the stream of life as seen in four poems on each of the periods.

Miss Holly Chapman, director of the modern dance group, reported that the program would be more varied than past programs and that a wider selection of dances would be used in the performance.

Lester Bruch is musical director for "An Evening of Dance," and he has composed three of the 11 musical arrangements to accompany the dances.

FLAMBEAU FORUM

Public Forum Committee Blasted

To the Editor:

Last Monday night I heard the Rev. A. J. Muste speak at the Unitarian chapel. Although it was a privilege to hear his extremely informative speech it was sad and disheartening to know that because of his views he was refused permission to speak on campus.

The preventing of Rev. Muste to speak on campus was an action of the Public Forum Committee, a committee composed of five faculty members and three students whose purpose is to approve or disapprove public speakers on campus. The speaker who advocates "an illegal or immoral act."

I would like to point out several inconsistencies within the policy of this committee, such as:

1) There are obvious discrepancies in the action of the committee in their approval of previous speakers. In one specific instance, David MacReynolds, who was approved to speak on campus last trimester, with the full knowledge by the committee of his illegal action.

2) This committee has jurisdiction only over public speakers—not on speakers within a class or department. In such instances, the decision is up to the individual extending the invitation only. This seems to be a definite inconsistency which contradicts whatever purpose is supposedly served by control over public speakers.

3) In the specific instance of Rev. Muste, he has not said he is going to Cuba, which is the illegal act in question. Furthermore, he is a here to recruit students to commit an illegal act. Therefore, grounds on which he was refused a hazy and undefined and a "lack of understanding of the law" by the committee.

4) There is one statement within the policy document of the FFCC which reads that a speaker shall be judged solely on his ability and timeliness not on his viewpoints. This seems to be the only statement within the policy which makes sense, yet it is in direct opposition to the rest of the policy.

I feel that the entire set-up of the Public Forum Committee is of a confused nature that a complex decision could not possibly be reached, and that in the most recent instance, the committee did indeed make a grave error.

The mere advocating of an illegal act should not be sufficient justification for refusal of right to speak. I feel that this action by the university is in direct violation of one of the most vital principles of our society—the right to free speech, without which a democratic society cannot survive.

This was an act of censorship—a censorship is a weapon of a totalitarian dictatorship, not of a free society.

To the Editor:

Re: Mr. Paul Snyder's letter of Feb. 25th titled "Civil Disobedience Harmful."

The hazy thinking contained in and the distasteful impression created by this article deserve clarification and correction in light of activities in Tallahassee in the past and, if necessary, in the future.

Let me initially point out that picketing is not a form of civil disobedience. The rights to free assembly, free speech, and free petition of grievance are all granted by the Constitution thus the right to picket has been upheld in numerous court cases.

"But speakers violate the rights of the business man, they malign him."

How? By simply pointing out to the public in a dramatic way a policy which that business man has stated? By letting his potential customers know where he stands?

"But picketers are trying to tell a man how to run his business."

Yes, they are! This is the basis of the free enterprise system. In a communist system, the consumer does not have a choice of patronage. In the capitalist system, a businessman must satisfy his customers or go out of business. The manager of the University Inn who refused to satisfy his customers' demands discovered this. Thus, Mr. Snyder's comparison is very disquieting. Within the capitalist system we should not have to patronize establishments which do not provide the services we desire.

Mr. Snyder's apparently axiomatic contention that many respect any picket line no matter what the issue is completely unfounded. There is no reason to believe that any considerable portion of the population is that consistently undinking. Now, let us deal with civil disobedience, about which Mr. Snyder says, "... it teaches some of our disciplined young people to have disrespect for law and order." I don't know about you, but I hope to raise my children to have a much higher respect for justice and truth than for law and order, since in reality, the two concepts are obviously not always equitable.

Many hold that "if it is law, it must be obeyed." According to this logic, it was morally right for the man to follow the law and order and turn on the gas and fill the ovens. Auschwitz was morally wrong for the man to smuggle his family out of East Berlin; morally wrong for Americans to revolt in 1776 and morally right for a man to breed humans as livestock in the south in 1840; et ceeters ad nauseum. The law, Mr. Snyder, is not always right.

"But," you say, "if the law needs to be changed, civil disobedience is not the proper means."

Do you then expect Negroes, approximately 10% of the population, to change legislation by themselves? Do you expect Negroes in "Liberty" County, Florida (where they are almost a majority of the population) to change the law when only about 1% of them are registered to vote?

Many people are unfortunately ignorant of the fact that the Supreme Court has ruled that the constitutionality of a law cannot be judged on a purely hypothetical basis (Muskat vs. U.S., 1911); i.e., there must be proof that the law in question has been applied.

For example: In Tallahassee will apparently be necessary for someone to be arrested at the "Negro" swimming pool in order to prove that the city is violating the law by maintaining segregated facilities.

It would be much more sensible and easy to simply discuss and rectify the situation through the city officials, but this they have steadfastly refused to do, replying only, "If you have an argument, take it to the courts," thus leaving almost nothing but civil disobedience.

In short, Mr. Snyder, civil disobedience IS NOT flagrant disregard of the law for immediate personal or personal experience as your examples would have us believe. Civil disobedience IS an embracing regard for the law and its application. Civil disobedience is a violation in an attempt to change laws which are harmful to society, with the fullest regard to the consequences of that violation.

Finally, Mr. Snyder, you charge that the civil rights movement should be taken over by "more mature and wiser heads." Without discussing the implications of this, those who participate in picketing and civil disobedience are "radical" and "irresponsible." I will say only that you would do well to remember that the Civil Rights Bill was not in the legislature today if it were not for the activities of these people. And, unfortunately, civil rights legislation will not be enforced next year without the activities of these people.

I think that those who care to investigate the situation and carry arguments to their logical ends before criticizing will not disagree with what I have said.

For Governor

Ken Folks

Republican gubernatorial candidate Ken Folks is at 49 one of Florida's leading exponents of raising the standards of the public school systems and extending the University system to provide educational opportunities for all close to home and second to none.

Educated in the law and in business, Folks has had an interesting career in both. And although not a newcomer to politics—he recalls the Coolidge-Davis-LaFollette campaign of 1924—he is a comparative newcomer to public office. In 1960 he was elected to the Orange County Board of Public Instruction by the largest vote ever given a candidate for public office in Orange County.

Drawing on a lifetime of experience in the political arena and twenty-five years of participation and observation in and of the Florida scene, Folks brings a refreshing new outlook to the creaking systems which have afflicted Florida by gradually gathering a patchwork government to form a crazy quilt since the boom and bust of the 1920's.

Folks advocated a complete overhaul of the state government, from top to bottom, beginning with rewriting of the constitution and removal of the state capital to a more central location, and through reappointment, reorganization of the financial structure, the state roads system, down to abolition of the milk commission.

An ardent advocate of the free enterprise system, he believes with Jefferson that the "best possible government is the least possible government." A big man physically as well as mentally, Ken Folks is hard to ignore. The eyes of Florida will be upon him in the coming elections.

Folks also believes that upon relocation of the Capital of Florida, the Capitol Building at Tallahassee is expected to become a part of the Florida State University. Some of the offices now in the buildings surrounding it would be relocated in a more central location, and the buildings vacated would also be available to the Florida State University.

Reaction Not Always Good

To the Editor:

I have read the letter by Mar. 25, Stevens of March 5, and feel that must disagree with the reaction being off on the subject of psychology saying that, "It is characterized healthy youth to react against the beliefs of their elders and the new and generally, more liberal ideas."

This is all very good (if this statement is true), but from this statement I assume that reacting against the beliefs of one's elders makes for a healthy society.

I am not saying that our elders are always right, but by the same token we would be no more right if we reacted because it is characteristic of our age group. I believe the thinking of a different, and probably younger, less mature group of youth.

We are college students who are getting an education, and supposed learning better how to think for ourselves. Florida it is thinking that is making us so unhealthy. But think not.

I feel that many of our conservative and moderate, rather than naturally reacting because they are in a poor psychological state, have chosen to think. Surely I hope we will learn to think better and react.

To repeat a couple of old clichés in altered form: we're going to have to lie in the bed we make, so let's not just jump from the frying pan into the fire.

Cagers Victorious in South America

'Best Game Yet' Says Kennedy

The FSU Cagers defeated three Columbian University basketball teams over the weekend to bring home the trophy from the first annual Barranquilla Tournament.

The scores upheld Coach "Bud" Kennedy's belief that the Cagers played the best games of the season at the tournament in Columbia.

The Seminoles defeated the University of Palmita, 75-39, the University of Antioquia, 83-50, and the University of Atlantico, 93-40.

The University of Palmita was the National Collegiate Champ in Columbia last year.

Kennedy and the FSU basketball team returned home Tuesday morning with a new concept of the game as played under international rules.

The Cagers played the game in the South American style. As the scores indicate they adjusted well to them. Points of difference were the 17-foot pie-shaped lane out to the free throw line and the 30 second shot rule. This is compared to the 12-foot key-hold and the 10 second rule used in the United States.

"They play generally a run and shoot type of game," said Kennedy. "They allow three steps after a dribble, and no free throws except on fouls when shooting. This results in a lot of driving layups."

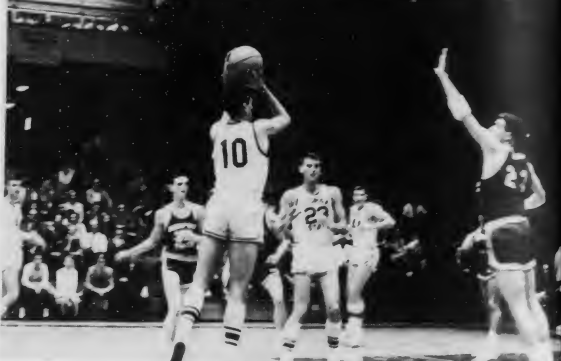

Kennedy noted that the Columbian teams were amazed at the accuracy of the Cagers' shooting from the outside, because they seldom shoot from further out than 12 feet.

FSU hit their best percentage of the year from the tournament floor. All 11 FSU players saw an equal amount of action, with senior Pete Rogers being cited as the Tribes' outstanding player.

Kennedy, who has been FSU's basketball coach for 17 years pointed out that this was the first time that an FSU team had participated in International Competition. He said that he and the team would like to go back next year. At the same time he feels that it would be good to allow another school to take part in this experience.

Kennedy told of the Columbian reaction to the FSU team saying, "The acceptance of the Columbian was remarkable. After the game the South American players took the Cagers out and showed them the sights."

After the last game on Saturday night there was an exchange of gifts between the teams. FSU presented the Columbian with FSU pennants and tie tacks. The South American players gave the Cagers pennants and cigarette lighters.

FSU Cager, Pete Gonzalez

... sets for another of the long shots that amazed Columbian competition in the Barranquilla Tournament played last weekend in Barranquilla, Columbia. The Tribe enjoyed the "southern hospitality" of the Columbian while defeating their top three basketball teams.

Netters Face SEC Champions

Seminole netters will try to string the scalps of the Tulane Tennis team along the fence of the men's tennis courts in a match tomorrow.

The racket squad will face the current Southeastern Conference champions at 2:30 p.m.

Tulane's strong team has four returning lettermen: Chuck Bleckinger, Dan Rhodes, Bob Hardcastle, and David Moss. Bleckinger, Rhodes, Hardcastle and Moss were number two, three, four and six in the SEC last year.

Coach Emmett Pare lost two lettermen at graduation: Lee Fentress, number one in the SEC; and Ed Austin, number five in the conference.

The probable top three men for tomorrow's match will be Bleckinger, sophomore Frank Lomoth and Rhodes.

Tulane has an impressive record of fourteen SEC singles championships, nineteen SEC team championships, six NCAA singles titles and two NCAA doubles trophies.

FSU coach Paul Scarpa will send out a warparty led by Lex Wood to meet the invaders.

Scarpa will probably counter Lomoth with Don Canon, and meet Rhodes with Paul Bennett. The other warriors will be Don Monk, Steve Gase, Steve Burt and Randy Cameron.

Thus, for this season, the Seminoles are one for one, taking Valdosta State, but losing Florida.

Saturday the Tribe tennis team travels to Pensacola to play the Mississippi State tennis club.

FSU Thinclads To Run Furman

FSU's track team meets Furman this Saturday at 2:30 on the FSU track field.

Furman was the only team to beat FSU in a dual track meet last year.

Among the men who were defeated by Furman last year are Floyd Lorenz, high jumper; Bob Sable, sprinter; Jerry McDaniel, sprinter; Doug Perry, hurdler; and Don Pharis, a pole vaulter.

Pharis vaulted over 14 feet and Perry broke all FSU records in the Intermediate hurdles, last weekend. Coach Mike Long said these men were the most improved from last year's squad and they would figure high in the meet Saturday.

Hank Rahn, 880 yard runner; Dick Roberts, distance runner; Steve Schatz, triple jump; and Al Williams, in the shot put should also bear watching.

The big men for Furman will be David Tyler, in the 880, mile and mile relay; Tommy Thompson, 100 and 220; Curtis Hallyfield, mile and two miles; and Richard Giannini in the discus and shot put.

Pat Anderson and Eddie West, who are both in the 220 and 440 and Ashley Pennybaker, a hurdler and jumper should also be big for Furman.

The cindermen defeated Miami last week. After the meet Coach Long said he was surprised at the competitive spirit at this meet.

The freshman teams from both schools will also compete with their meets starting at 2:30 also.

FSU Frosh Take On Chipola

The freshman batmen heft their war clubs and go hunting for a win over Chipola Junior College, today at 3:30 p.m.

After dropping the first two games of the season, last weekend, to Manatee Junior College, the Frosh want to prove themselves on the home diamond.

Coach Ernie Lanford said that the Junior Tribe, "should play a much better ball game. We've finally had a chance to work out."

Before this week the team's outside practices had been rained out for all but five days of the three week session. With this week's practice, said Lanford, we should have a lot less mistakes.

In Saturday's game the Babe Seales made eight errors in his 6-3. Only one of the six was an error.

To help cure defensive mistakes Lanford has made two changes in the infield. Bill Ostenski will be second catcher and John Blackburn will be third base.

Lanford hopes these changes will solve his problem of "not being able to get anybody out, when they get to the base."

New Tests Administered To All FSU Sophomores

Tests designed to determine readiness for upper-division (junior and senior) work are scheduled in Tully Gymnasium next Wednesday and Thursday nights at 7 p.m. for about 1400 FSU sophomores.

Dr. G. Emerson Tully, director of the University Testing Service, said these hours of testing covering the humanities, social studies and history will be given Wednesday night and three and one-half hours covering English composition, natural sciences and mathematics on Thursday night. Dr. G.E. Tanzy, director of the Division of Basic Studies, said students taking the tests will receive their test scores in April and "may personally find the results useful in helping clarify their educational plans."

Students who have completed three trimesters of work or the equivalent before the current term are required to take the tests both nights, he said.

A letter to the students, Tanzy said a makeup for the Wednesday test will be given at 8 a.m. Saturday, Mar. 21, and a makeup for the Thursday test will be given at 1 p.m. the same day. Those who cannot be excused from night classes or otherwise are unable to take the Wednesday and Thursday night tests must take the makeup, Tanzy told the sophomores.

UP Completes Nomination Of SG Candidates

The University Party opened its first session Wednesday night with nominations for Honor Court and Judiciary positions to be decided in the Spring Elections, March 24. In the nominations for Senior Men's and Senior Women's Honor Court, only one candidate of the two possible was selected. Fran Ubele will run for Senior Women's Honor Court and Bill McCarron will seek opposition on Senior Men's Honor Court. Nominees for Junior Women's Honor Court are Karen Williams and Chris McGlasson, while Randy Plotts and Bill Hollister will seek positions on high court as juniors. In the Judiciary races, three positions are to be filled. Vivian Woolwine is the only nominee for Senior Women's Judiciary so far. There is no nominee for the Senior Men's position.

Pat Clark, Ann Marsden, and Jane Murrell will seek the Junior Women's Spot, and Ed Pritchett is the UP nominee for Junior Men's Judiciary.

For Sophomore Women's Judiciary, the convention nominated Kendra Crawford, Maureen McClellan, and Cheryl Rich. The Sophomore Men's nominees are Aron Brumm, Joe May and Kirk Ball.

The UP Convention decided on its nominees for Class Officer and Senate positions last night. Results of the Thursday night session will be in Monday's "Flambeau."

Edwards, Symphony Manager Finds Problem Not Uncommon

John Edwards, manager of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, was interviewed Wednesday by representatives of the FSU Cultural Freedoms Committee concerning the letter of protest sent to the committee by the Committee petitioning them not to come to FSU.

Because the orchestra is currently on tour, they had not received the letter.

Edwards said that it would have been "impossible to cancel the concert" because of the contracts and short notice.

Edwards remarked that he believed that a university should be "an open forum of ideas" and that he was personally in sympathy with groups that were not given full academic freedom. He did however say, "I doubt the efficacy of this approach."

Bruce Huston, co-chairman of the Cultural Freedoms Committee, commented that the action of sending the letter to the orchestra (excluding the university administration of "tokenism" in integration, and of censorship of speakers) was not for the purpose of creating a general boycott, but rather to point out to the administration the unfairness of its policies.

Edwards commented that situations where academic freedom was violated were "deplorable, but not unique."

He pointed out that for practical reasons, a touring orchestra has less say-so about its audience than a single performer would have.

He laughed as he added that "of course, the musical world is the most autocratic of all."

Sewert, Wood Nominated By SP Wednesday

The Student Party finished its nominations for the Spring Elections in a session Wednesday night that was highlighted by the selection of candidates for the judicial branch of Student Government.

Student Party Chairman Al Milton opened the session by returning to the race for Sophomore Class Secretary-Social Chairman. Ian Sewert, who had been deadlocked with Rannie Barnes Tuesday night on three ballots, received the nomination with one vote over the majority required.

John Wood was nominated by acclamation to the other position in the race of Senior Class Senator. Wood joined Mike Thackson who had been nominated Tuesday night.

Ron Borst and Marty Dale received the nomination for Sophomore Men's Senate, while Margaret Allison and Joy Dickinson received the Party's support for Sophomore Women's Senate.

For Senior Men's Honor Court, Ken Nelson was the only candidate nominated. Don Loucks and Bill Heinson will be the candidates for Junior Men's Honor Court.

The candidates for Senior Men's Judiciary will be Dave White and Allen Lindsey.

Credo Is 'Seduction By Subsidy'

During the course of the trimester, questions always seem to arise that are not worthy of a full editorial yet which do warrant some explanation. Therefore, we will attempt to answer some of these below.

Some question has been raised at the "Flambeau" continued use of cigarette advertising, namely the Marlboro ad by Max Schulman, in view of the Board of Publication's decision banning such advertising.

We wondered the same thing ourselves but upon checking with our Advertising Manager Pat Fuller, we have discovered that our contract with Marlboro runs to the end of the year and it would be in bad faith to break it. We, therefore, must continue the advertisement until the termination of the agreement.

The "Flambeau's" policy on campaign material might be in need of some clarification. The "Flambeau" does not solicit any campaign material. If a candidate brings in a release of newsworthy value, the "Flambeau" will print it. This holds true for any candidate or party.

It is not our job to penalize the person or party that takes it upon itself to prepare and submit news releases to the "Flambeau" by calling up other less knowledgeable candidates and asking them to submit equal material.

Candidates not in office have an inherent publicity disadvantage but they should be cognizant of this fact and take the proper corrective measures.

*****

The "Flambeau" is proud to announce the addition of Bob Cornet and Bob Mitchell as co-sports editors. Both are capable writers and should, in our opinion, be able to do a first-rate job in their new position.

Take heart sophomores, the administration has assured us that the new series of tests required for all students who completed the equivalent of three trimesters of academic work will not count against you. The tests are designed, in effect, to "test a test." That is to help design future tests of this nature. Students are urged to take the test seriously, however, as it should be an accurate indication of strengths and weaknesses in the students' work so far and the readiness of the students to advance into upper division levels.

Conservatives are often accused of "trying to turn the clock back." This implies that all good true political progress comes from liberals. It also suggests that all change is progress and that efforts to hold on to proven principles of limited constitutional government are old-fashioned and even unpatriotic.

In order to understand what is wrong with this accusation one must understand that what the liberals stand for is not a change in government considerably since the 18th century. At the time that this government was founded, by liberals, the word "liberal" in politics meant a person who believed that too much government deprived the individual of his natural rights.

Almost everyone in those days accepted domination by the government as a normal thing. The idea that an individual had rights that couldn't be abridged by a government was a radical idea. The common view was to do to was to accept government control.

Now, we have had our Constitution and our personal liberties for almost two hundred years and, tragic as it may be, many of us take our freedoms for granted. Too many of us haven't bothered to make sure that government doesn't again get the upper hand. Thomas Paine once wrote, "What we obtain too cheap, we esteem too lightly; it is at once only that gives everything its value." It is precisely this lack of vigilance that has let the government get so huge and powerful in the last 35 years. Under the guidance of a new group of self-styled "liberals" we have voted for more and more services and benefits which resulted in the controls, regulations and taxes which automatically follow, and which stifle economic opportunity and personal liberty.

It is both ironic and sad that it is the conservative who now resists government interference and control and who warns of the danger of letting government be too big again, more important than the individual.

In fact, it is the modern "liberal" who would turn the clock back, preaches a doctrine of government with never a word of concern about over-spending or the rights of the individual by the government. The modern "liberal" loves trusts government. His severe problems is more government, not less. He would like the ultimate outcome of a course one has taken to go to the history books. The modern "liberal" loves the examples of the downfall of those whose people turned from their freedoms, and followed the Pied Pipers who promise something for nothing. In ancient Rome, for "bread and circuses," today for "freedom and justice," today, America, it is the myth of "federal aid." It might be said "seduction by subsidy."

We know that we can not have government without losing the importance of the individual. We must give way to the other. We know that we can't exploit public power without degrading public property. We know that we can't demand advance freedom unless private property rights are protected against expropriation.

No, conservatives don't want to "turn the clock back." We want to wind the clock of freedom by taking some of the burden of government from more individual effort.

It is sad when the alarm is raised. Federal government unnecessary takes another power from the states, governments, or spends more money than it takes in. The alarm is raised by a branch whose powers which belong to the representatives of the people. We would be especially alert for dangers involved when our government would link up unequally nations which do not respect the rights of the individual.

It is sad when the alarm is raised, neither is state planning. Both centuries old. There has been there will always be men in the age who seek power over others offering security in exchange for freedom. After all, slaves are secure, but in their security have lost more than they have gained. Slaves have always survived in their freedom.

It is the conservative of today who is the true progressive, for he has limited government and the man can have unlimited opportunity and no man is a slave.

Refusal Not Constructive

To the Refusal: by the Public Forum Committee was an act for ignorance. In denying the marchers permission to speak, they denied the rest of us the opportunity to speak first hand just what this peace movement is.

How can we know what means are ends they propose when we are denied by persons whose information is at least 50 hands? This is a passive refusal. Red this is a passive or is something quite different. Are they creating freedom of human dignity in a world where it is not fashionable to do so? Ideas being twisted lies? Is it spineless by our informers?

The administration has permitted men of the opposition to speak on this campus and I have learned. The Public Forum Committee, who it is no doubt sincere, has decided it is of an opportunity for education. Men and ideas of strength will be challenged; those of weakness will hide the rule and maintain the status quo.

Robert Blair

Course Scrutiny Needed

To the Editor:

I, too, have read with interest the editorial concerning the biology course. While this is being kicked around why don't we kick a few other things around?

We, the students and the teachers, need to give careful consideration not just to the instance cited but to the whole and overall system of higher education, especially here at FSU in Tallahassee. Purpose is the first thing that comes to mind in this discussion. I'm very old-fashioned but I actually believe I am here to learn and the faculty is here to teach. What absurd must be! Thank heavens there are many who share this silly view.

However, and this is hearsay, there seem to be persons both here and elsewhere who present a pseudo-intellectual environment in the classroom which shows more or less what the instructor knows rather than what he should be teaching; many people say that in this three or four years of college they have wasted many an hour in classroom filled with students and teachers who are marking time and using up state money which many of us pay in taxes.

Is it true? Cheer up, teachers; the students shall not escape! Many students, as I understand it, are here to mark time and spend Pop's hard-earned money with no desire or intention to learn on purpose or by accident.

Too bad that we can't put those here to teach and learn in one class and then have to waste time in another! As Utopia is, purpose-wise, many, it seems, are here to take up time and spend money rather than to be dedicated to teaching (with the students in mind); many students are here not to learn but for employment.

Maybe we should examine our personal motives for being here in any capacity whether as student or as teacher.

Teachers, please work at presenting your knowledge to those of us who are here to learn, you know what I mean, make it interesting. And, don't be afraid of an uncomplicated approach... simplicity will win. Students every time if he sees that he can build on it. There are enough of the pseudo-intellectual types elsewhere.

Students, don't be afraid of attempting to learn. Remember, the teacher doesn't know everything about you and your educational background so if he misses or skips something ask him to go back and try again. It's your money; get every penny's worth.

As a student you have an obligation to make every effort to learn... even though many a teacher will merely pass over something and keep going. Well, as a teacher, they have an obligation to you, the student.

Therefore raise your hand and ask a few questions... make an appointment with the teacher... stand on a corner and scream... or maybe place your bid in the Flambeau "teacher wanted." Teachers, inform and encourage questions but be prepared to answer them or to assist in finding the answers.

Now on to that biology course... I'm glad to see it make the paper. Fellow students, we have a duty to do. If we aren't getting our money's worth, if something's wrong then let's yell, but yell loudly. Teachers ought to yell brightly.

Perception Is Questioned

To the Editor:

I just read in the "Flambeau" Mr. Riggins' petition to the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra requesting the Orchestra not to come to Florida State University, where an "atmosphere of prejudice and fear" according to Mr. Riggins, prevails. And, darn it, he might be right! I am sorry that I do not have the wisdom and power of perception to see the situation so clearly as Mr. Riggins. Otherwise, I would quit studying at FSU.

In fact, I hope to see Mr. Riggins follow his own advice and therefore, hope to read that he has quit FSU, and that he has gone to other places where "prejudice and fear" are not the main components of the atmosphere.

I think that Fidel Castro, Russia, Red China, or even Yugoslavia claim to do such an atmosphere without fear and prejudice. Bon Voyage!

British Astronomer Love To Speak

Bernard Lovell, a distinguished astronomer whose recent years threw a new light on Soviet efforts, will be the speaker at 8 o'clock Monday night in West Auditorium.

Lovell's address, entitled "Life, the Moon, and the Moon," will concern three-week 12,000 mile trip last summer to Russian astronomical observatories including a deep-space tracking network therefore hidden from western eyes.

Lovell's address will be televised by the Columbia Broadcasting System, which will play the public lecture back on an hour-longationality program, "One of a Kind," at 4 p.m. Sunday, March 22.

Professor of radio astronomy at the University of Manchester and director of Jodrell Bank Experimental Station, Sir Lovell will be introduced to the University Lecture Series Audience Monday night by Dr. Seymour Hess, professor of meteorology. Dr. A. Gib DeBusk, chairman of the Lecture Series, is in charge of arrangements for the lecture.

Lovell, with his Jodrell Bank Observatory and its giant radiotelescope, has been responsible for many of the developments of the past several years which have pushed back the frontiers of space science when used with the satellite. He is the author of "The Exploration of Space by Radio," "The Individual and the Universe," and "The Exploration of Outer Space," among other books.

For his assistance in the American space program, particularly in tracking the deep space probe Pioneer V, Lovell was received by President Eisenhower in July, 1960, and also was presented the National Aeronautics and Space Administration illuminated citation.

Last June 25-July 15, at the invitation of the president of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, Lovell made his Russian Tracking station tour. He said afterward that instead of competing with America in a manned lunar race the Russians apparently were planning an instrument landing on the moon to gain necessary information and the assembly of a space platform where two men could be stationed for as much as a week at a time and make astronomical observations outside the earth's atmosphere. He predicted that instead of landing on the moon the Russians would fly around it.

Lovell, who said he strongly believed in the manned lunar landing, suggested that it ought to be an international effort, with Americans and Russians cooperating.

When the United States sent Ranger 6 to the moon last month the Jodrell Bank laboratory recorded the event just 30 seconds after the predicted impact, Sir Bernard told the Associated Press afterward it was "a very great achievement for American rocket engineers."

"The general evidence is that the Russians may be going slow in connection with their moon program, which would lead one to believe that the tremendous American investment and perseverance in space activities may be beginning to indicate that they are pulling ahead significantly from the Russians."

"It must be emphasized from past experience that the Russians remain quiet and then pull off something tremendous. Perhaps it would be better to wait a few months before drawing too many conclusions between the Americans and the Russians," said Lovell.

James Dillinger Honored As Insurance Man Of Year

The late chairman of FSU's Risk and Insurance Dept., Dr. James Edward Dillinger, was honored posthumously as Insurance Man of the Year.

State Treasurer and Insurance Commissioner J. Edwin Larson presented the award to Dillinger's widow, Mrs. Myrtle Dillinger, at the annual Insurance Commissioner Banquet at the Country Club.

At the same event, climaxing Insurance Day in the School of Business, senior student Francis John Marcotte was named outstanding insurance student of the year at FSU, a selection of faculty based on scholarship, leadership and career interest and potential.

Marcotte is vice-president of the Insurance Society of FSU, an organization of students which was one of the sponsors of 1-Day. The other sponsor was the Charter Property and Casualty Underwriters. Career opportunities in insurance dominated attention during the day of activities, principally in the Starry Room on campus.

The awards were presented at a banquet at which the principal speaker was Morris Fuller, retired executive of State Farm Insurance Co. of Bloomington, Ind.

Dillinger died Sept. 13 after serving on the faculty for seven years. He joined the faculty as associate professor of business in September, 1956, after receiving a Ph.D. degree in insurance from the University of Wisconsin.

A native of Indiana, Dillinger received a bachelor's degree in political science from Indiana University in 1939. Later he studied at Florida Southern College (1951), and the University of Florida, which awarded him an LL.B. degree in 1954 and an M.B.A. degree in insurance in 1955.

...Scrutiny

Sure we can attack the teacher if he isn't up to par but let's be prepared to be accosted if we aren't up to par as students. I shall be prepared to hear from many that I've stepped on precious toes and am talking through my non-existent hat, rightly so. The whole point of this is to take sides with both parties, the student and the teacher, and to say why don't more of us examine some facts and raise a voice if need be.

Personally I'm going to look into and question this biology course as well as others.

A WEAVING EXHIBITION

Weaving Show Opens Monday

An exhibition of contemporary handweaving will open Monday in the inner lobby of Westcott Auditorium, sponsored by the Art Education and Constructive Design Dept.

Sally Adams, one of the South's most outstanding craftsmen, has taken fibers and woven them in dramatic and unusual ways.

Among the pieces on display are several tapestries, an art form seldom seen in Florida cities. Weaving, like other art forms, reflects the current tendency in art to discover new ways of working and new uses for it.

Mrs. Adams has done one wall hanging with sea shells woven into it. In another, rough yarns have been inserted to give the effect of clusters of wisps on lattice-like transparent warping. Handwoven panels which form into room dividers and folding screens are also featured in the exhibit.

Southeastern region trustee on the Board of the American Craftsman's Council, Mrs. Adams is a graduate of Cornell University. She has exhibited in New York, Arkansas, Georgia and Tennessee art museums. Currently two handwoven pieces by Mrs. Adams are included in a traveling exhibition of the American Craftsman Council.

After Tuesday, the display will be moved to the Education Bldg.

others to play in two recitals at the end of the month.

Before joining the FSU faculty, he was musical director of the Alumni Players of Grand Rapids, Mich., producers of the comic operas of Gilbert and Sullivan.

Dunscombe will open his program with Beethoven's "Sonata in C major for Piano and Violoncello." His second number will be Kodaly's "Sonata for violoncello alone, Op. 8."

NSF Conference To Be Here

Basic tools of modern physics—electricity and magnetism—will be the subject of a four-week conference review at FSU beginning March 16.

Sponsored by the National Science Foundation with a grant of $25,200, the conference is one of three to be held in the nation this summer to college and junior college teachers of physics develop greater familiarity with these subjects. It will be coordinated by Dr. Robert Krombholz, professor of physics at FSU. The conference is designed for 30 participants and will be held from March 16 to July 10.

In addition to Dr. Krombholz, teaching faculty will include FSU faculty members and physicists, Dr. Edward A. Desloge and Dr. John D. Fox. Guest faculty includes Dr. Clifton Bob Clark of Southern Methodist University.

The Conference on Electricity and Magnetism, one of several initiated at the encouragement of the Commission on College Physics, is aimed at development of a teacher's intuitive understanding and familiarity with the use of vectors. In addition, teachers will receive an introduction to the implications and applications of these theories to atomic physics.

Farrell Picked For Computer Course

Carl Farrell, sophomore honors student at FSU, is one of ten outstanding undergraduates from throughout the country selected for participation in a special summer program in digital computing sponsored by the National Science Foundation at the University of Illinois.

Farrell, a mathematics major from Washington, D.C., has been serving as a student assistant in the FSU Computing Center since completing as a freshman, the programming course for the IBM 709 Computer normally offered to advanced undergraduates or graduate students.

Beginning June 6, Farrell will spend eight weeks at the Digital Computer Laboratory. The course will be concerned with numerical analysis, computer programming, and logical design. He will gain experience in use of the IBM 709-1401 computer system and the newly completed Iliac II, and will work on problems associated with computer use of design.

As a sophomore last fall, Farrell ranked first among FSU students participating in the national undergraduate mathematics competition, the Putnam Contest, sponsored by The American Mathematical Association of America.

Upon his return next fall, Farrell will participate in the undergraduate honors program in mathematics, continue his affiliation with the Computing Center as a student assistant, and be concerned with operating or programming for the FSU IBM 709-1401 Computers.

FSU Meteorologists Aid In Study Of Atmosphere

FSU meteorologists will continue a probe of the first 100,000 feet of the earth's atmosphere for ozone content under a new grant of $34,500 from the National Science Foundation.

The FSU Ozone Project, under the direction of Dr. Richard A. Craig, of the Meteorology Dept., has been under way for a year under a grant from the Air Force.

Over 11 stations have been participating in a continent-wide ozone study, in an area which covers the Canal Zone and Greenland.

The program will now continue for a year under NSF auspices as part of the International Quiet Sun Year Research Effort.

On campus, balloons will continue to be launched every Wednesday morning and a radio transmitter will send a telemetered report of ozone content and other weather data to a receiving station on top of the Mathematics-Meteorology Bldg.

The recorded data on ozone in relation to atmospheric circulation is being analyzed by graduate students as the information is received.

Craig said that although the ozone is a minor constituent of the atmosphere its influence on the earth environment is great. Ozone, carbon dioxide and water vapor absorb and emit radiation and ozone is a shield against the destructive effects of ultraviolet radiation from the sun.

FSC Editor Favors Mocs Over FSU

EDITOR'S NOTE:

To make our sports coverage more complete we have asked the sports editors of the newspapers at the schools that FSU competes with in baseball to write up columns expressing their views on the games. This is the first of the series.

By DAVE LITTLE
"Southern" Sports Editor

A veteran Florida Southern College club will tangle with the Seminoles in their meeting this year. Only two members of last year's team which posted a fine 15-8 record are missing.

Ken Huebner, Cecil Hock, and Ken Murphy form the strong starting corp of moundsmen. Cooper Means, Bill Durrance, and Bruce Aikens are the top candidates.

The Mocs battled the Florida Gators for 11 innings in the first game of the year before losing 5-1. An unearned run by the Gators in the sixth spoiled a possible 1-0 Moc victory.

A solid infield of Jim Hardee, Ron James, Frank Oklave, and Buster Hardy give the Southern squad an outstanding defensive game. Oklave gained all Florida Intercollegiate Conference honors at his shortstop position last year.

Southern possessed an outstanding catcher in Darrel Fulton. The big catcher is again expected to lead the Moc offensive attack.

Joel Ledlow, Bob Lee, and Doug Priestner of Huebner parol the outfield for Southern. Speed is the prime asset in these positions.

KEN HUEBNER

...one of the outstanding FSC Mocs pitchers is expected to give the FSU Seminoles some competition in the baseball game here Monday afternoon.

Frosh Take Chipola

John Blackburn doubled home Roy Mewborne in eighth inning to break a 3-3 tie and put the Baby Seals ahead to stay in freshman baseball action against Chipola Junior College yesterday.

The Junior Tribe went on to score one more run in eighth and defeat the Indians, 5-3.

It was the Tribe's first victory on the home diamond, bringing their record to one for three.

Mike Schmuck opened the eighth with a single to right, off losing pitcher Larry Callaway. Mewborne followed with a single down the first base line. Both men advanced on an error by Chipola first baseman Wayne Kirkland.

Dean Duchak then tied the game by sacrificing to right and sending Schmuck home. Blackburn then broke it up by doubling off new pitcher Larry Suits, to bring in Mewborne. Blackburn moved to third on an error by shortstop Jerry Daniels, that put Bob Nelson on first. Nelson went to second while the Clubhouse was trying to find the next throw ball.

The next batter tapped out the first baseman, making it two for the Tribe ahead by one run. The final scoring of the game came on a passed ball by Suits that allowed Blackburn to score home safely in third. The inning ended when Warren struck out.

FSU's first two runs came in the sixth inning by Robert Woolley. Schmuck. Woolley came home on a passed ball and Schmuck was home by Blackburn.

Chipola's tallies came in the fifth and seventh innings on a hit by Run, fielders choice and sacrifice. Wayne Strickland opened the eighth in the first, being the batter over the right field fence. In the fifth Suits—playing third base till he was brought in to pitch the eighth—struck to right, in the second, went to third on Strickland's grounder to first, and came home Kirkland's bounce to short.

Chipola's last run came in the seventh on a sacrifice by the batter that brought Barnie Jacobs home from third.

The winning pitcher was Gary Stringfellow, who relieved starter Gary Miracle in the seventh. Lead pitcher was Callaway, who replaced Jacobs in the seventh.

The frosh next play Manatee Junior College at Bradenton, Monday, Tuesday.

Saturday Drill, A Preview

"Saturday's drill should be a good preview of next week's Garnet and Gold game," said Head Coach Bill Peterson today. "We will be putting our best against our best and expect some hard hitting football."

The Seminoles will move to Campbell Stadium tomorrow morning for a ten a.m. game-like scrimmage. The scrimmage will be a regular game with the exception of punt returns and the kickoff, which will not be run back.

Peterson encouraged students to come out and see next year's gridiron in action.

Tomorrow's contest will pit the Garnet team, led by senior quarterback Steve Tenst against the White team quarterbacked by junior Ed Pritchett.

In a passing scrimmage Tuesday, Tenst's Garnet outscored the White team. But Saturday the Garnet team will have to cope with the combination running-passing ability of Pritchett.

Earning, Entertainment To Be Alumni Theme

Education and entertainment are principal ingredients of a spring event being "dosed up" for FSU's annual Spring Alumni Weekend according to the general chairman, Dr. Janet Wells.

A schedule for the week-end activities on campus, Dr. Wells said, the University expects an excellent turnout from Leon County's 2,000 resident alumni and a good cross-section of out-of-town alumni.

The University hopes all Big Bend students will take advantage of the weekend's activities whether or not they are alumni," she added.

Termed "Know Your University," the weekend begins Friday, with afternoon registration in Longmire, a baseball game, a social hour at the Holiday Inn from 6 to 7 p.m., and a choice of workshop, concert and theater activities.

The Alumni Officers Workshop—for board directors and club officers of alumni chapters—will feature discussions led by Patrick W. Hogan, director of public relations; Philip J. Fleming, director of development; Dr. Mode L. Stone, dean of education; Dr. Paul J. Piccard, Alumni Program director; and Dr. Gordon W. Blackwell, president of FSU. The Workshop begins at 3 p.m. in Longmire, Friday, and continues Saturday morning from 8 to 10 p.m.

Saturday's agenda renews registration in the morning, and features a series of Open House activities by various schools and colleges. The latter, noon to be announced in detail, are scheduled from 10:30 to noon in lecture halls, gallery and lounges of the individual groups, said Miss Wells, adding that information on new university goals and activities will be emphasized at each session.

Included in the series of panel discussions, exhibits and lectures will be a special reception in the Art Gallery which gives alumni an opportunity to meet British playwright James Forsyth and Broadway star Frank Daly, key figures in the concurrent premiere of "Trog."

Special half-price children's plaques will be available for the barbecue preceding the Garnet and Gold game. Deadline for purchase of barbecue tickets being sold at the Chamber of Commerce and the Alumni Office will be Wednesday noon.

The Garnet and Gold football game will be piped to the WFSU-TV studio, which will hold its open house from 2:30 to 4 p.m. "The closed circuit remote telecast may be one of the most popular events, if 'you-know-what' happens to the weather," she commented.

Other activities include an Athletic Recruitment Workshop at the University's new Field House in Campbell Stadium, which will be dedicated at 1:30 p.m. Saturday afternoon.

Leon County alumni registering for the weekend will be eligible for an alumni bonus—a free weekend's accommodations at the Escape Motel in Panama City. The weekend holidays will be awarded to couples whose names are drawn from registration slips. The drawing will be held at noon in the Circus Tent.

SO. No. 118 Published Daily By The Students Of Florida State University Monday, March 16, 1964

Life, Space And The Moon's Astronomical Lecture Topic

Bernard Lovell, a distinguished astronomer whose recent comments threw a new light on Soviet space efforts, will speak at 8:30 p.m. tonight in Westcott Auditorium. Lovell's address, entitled "Life, Space and the Moon," will concern his three-week 12,000-mile trip last summer to Russian astronomical observatories including a deep-space tracking network therefore hidden from western eyes.

Following his trip Lovell reported, "A few weeks ago I was under the firm impression—like many other people in the West—that the landing of a human being on the moon was the centerpiece of the Russian space program. But this is not the case."

Lovell's address will be televised by Columbia Broadcasting System, which will play the public lecture back on an hour-long nationwide program, "One of Kind," at 4 p.m. Sunday, March 22.

Sir Bernard, professor of radio astronomy at the University of Manchester and director of Jodrell Bank Experimental Station, will be introduced to the University Lecture Series audience by Dr. Seymour Hess, professor of meteorology, Dr. A. Gib DeBusk, chairman of the Lecture Series, is in charge of arrangements for the lecture.

Lovell, with his Jodrell Bank Observatory and its giant radiotelescope, has been responsible for many of the developments of the past several years which have pushed back the frontiers of space science when used with the satellite. He is the author of "The Exploration of Space by Radio," "The Individual and the Universe" and "The Exploration of Outer Space."

For his assistance in the American space program, particularly in tracking the deep space probe Pioneer V, Lovell was received by President Eisenhower in July, 1960, and also was presented the National Aeronautics and Space Administration illuminated citation.

Last June 25-July 15, at the invitation of the president of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, Lovell made his Russian Tracking station tour. He said afterward that instead of competing with America in manned lunar race the Russians apparently were planning an instrument landing on the moon to gain necessary information and the assembly of a space platform where two men could be stationed for as much as a week at a time and make astronomical observations outside the earth's atmosphere. He predicted that instead of landing on the moon the Russians would fly around it.

Special Coffee Hour Will Feature French Diplomat

Gordon Morot-Sir, cultural counselor to the French Embassy in the United States, will be the speaker in tomorrow's special English Coffee Hour.

The visiting speaker will talk on "Capitalism and French Philosophy Today" at 4:15 p.m. tomorrow in Westminister House, Dr. Hudson Rogers, program chairman, announced.

Dr. Morot-Sir, according to Dr. Georges-Paul Collet of the Modern Languages Dept., is representative of French Universities in the United States in addition to being cultural counselor. He taught for several years in France, serving from 1946 to 1950 and 1952 to 1955 as a professor at the Faculte des Lettres of Lille and of Bordeaux.

From 1953 to 1957 he was director of the United States Educational Commission for France (Fulbright Commission). Since 1957 he has been cultural counselor with the French embassy.

SP,UP Must File Now Candidates Named

James J. Love Building

Math-Meteorology Building Named For BOC Member

By CAROLYN CHRISTENSEN
Flambeau Staff Writer

The Math-Meteorology Bldg. was officially named the James J. Love Building in honor of the former Board of Control member who led a fight for its immediate construction a few years ago.

President Gordon W. Blackwell presided over the ceremony Friday, and in his welcome remarked that "When a University seeks to honor someone, its lays bare the values that underlies its existence... James J. Love was a forceful proponent of the values on which a university must be founded..."

J.J. Daniel, who served with Love and succeeded him as chairman of the BOC, said in his address, "It is symbolic of our times that we are here today to dedicate to James J. Love this building devoted to the pure science of mathematics and to the advanced science and technology of meteorology, statistics and computers..."

"I say this because James Love was as far removed in his life and work from computers and mathematics as any man of the soil..."

"He was fully aware that Florida's economy—traditionally based on agriculture and tourism—was in a state of radical change... and he was aware of the role higher education must play in helping Florida keep abreast of the changes resulting from the space age emphasis in this state."

Daniel commended Jack Love as a man who "never lost contact with people... his warmth and genuineness inspired confidence in others... he enriched the living of all who came into contact with him... his influence is still felt... he was an embodiment of the noblest ideals and virtues of mankind."

Filing Deadline

The Elections Commission reminds all aspiring candidates that tomorrow, 5 p.m., is the last time to file a Declaration of Candidacy. Declarations may be picked up or turned in to room 210 Longmire.

Late Registration

Students working this summer who will not be back in time for regular registration should sign up for late registration in the Registrar's Office.

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS

Paul W. Brown

Second Bus Needed

To the Editor:

We need a second bus and the students having to go from History to Geology and back know this all too well. Mr. Brown never likes to refuse students and if he can pack them into his tiny bus, in they go. As many as 60-85 students have crowded into his bus at one time. What is being done to alleviate this situation?

Interviews with Mr. R.K. Shaw, treasurer and business manager, and Dean Arnold, assistant dean of students gave me some of the concrete answers I needed.

I learned that our bus service began by pure accident. The campus was divided, at one time, between the 4,000 students here and 1,500 students at the old airport.

Some form of transportation was required to take these students to and from both campuses. Buildings such as the Math and Business were located at the airport, thus some way of transporting all 5,500 students became a task.

Buses were leaving here every five minutes. When the new men's dorms were completed, the old campus closed down and everything moved here except the bus service.

Students the main section of FSU didn't extend beyond the Women's Gym at the time. The walks are still long but, then, it was a real journey to classes. The temporary bus that was charted is the same one today. The expense of operating the single bus has almost over shadowed its usefulness. No section in the University Budget provides for a bus, and we need another one.

Money is the crux of our "second bus" problem. Five cent fares were suggested, but according to Dean Arnold, the cost of collecting the revenue would be as great as the paid fare. Less practical suggestions have been made, but still the money has to come from some source.

The transportation managers realize our need and letters to the paper heads have been written.

The only fear they have, is that will the second bus be filled to capacity and make the effort worthwhile? I have little doubts as to the answer. Cheer-up, we might get our buses yet despite the actions against it. Sue Deshazo

Freshman Class Senator

When Mr. Muste was refused the right to speak in university facilities it also brought to mind another issue that will be briefly discussed later. According to Mr. Baum's letter in the March 10th "Flambeau," he already had the tentative permission for Mr. Muste to speak on campus.

Just why the permission was later denied is not clear. There seems to be little doubt that a great deal of external pressure is brought to bear on FSU when special interest groups don't approve of certain issues. At times it is difficult to tell whether special interests or the administration administer this university.

Dr. Blackwell apparently has endorsed the presentation of different views. The following quotes from Dr. Blackwell are taken from the Nov. 19, 1963, issue of the "Flambeau": "The subtle but critical distinction between education and indoctrination lies in the freedom of students and educators to present all sides of an issue, not just the most popular prevalent side."

"...A university, but its very nature must be that of a place where those who seek the truth can HEAR (emphasis) and discuss all points of view, and, most important, where men and women can learn to think for themselves."

Does this atmosphere exist on campus of FSU? I, for one, do think so.

One of the columnists in the "Lahassie Democrat" was quite disturbed at the number of colleges and universities that were inviting communists to speak on campus, rather ironic thing as the schools which he listed as having the best in the country. The included both private and public universities. These are the schools whose names will have filled the names, titles and degrees of many of the great men in the United States.

It seems that several years ago Communist Party of the United States sent a speaker to UF, who was refused the opportunity to speak. I don't know if FSU has made the same offer, but if we were it would undoubtedly be refused.

It would not seem to square with Blackwell's "place of freedom" agreed that Norman Thomas was not about to be invited to speak for president to be considered so controversial? We had had moderate right and left speakers, but not extreme right or extreme left speakers? These people have been excluded and this should not be. I have no alternative but to agree with Mr. Baum when he says that the "place of freedom" is being attacked at our university.

FLAMBEAU FORUM

Make Biology Optional

To the Editor:

I offer a solution to the Biology 105 problem. All natural science departments in this university, other than Biology, have long since realized that there is a great difference in educational needs between a student majoring in a natural science and a student taking a natural science course for general education. Each of these departments have offered separate courses to fill these different needs. Consequently we have Chemistry 101, Physics 13, Geology 205, and Meteorology 205 as basic courses for students desiring a general education in any of those same fields.

The Biology Department, however, offers only one basic course for both the Biology major and the general education student, and because of this compromise both are being deprived of an education best suited to their needs in that area. Therefore, I suggest three alternatives to this waste of time and effort—make Biology 105 an option for general education and design it for the Biology major; make it optional for Biology majors (they get it all later in any case) and design it for general education; or offer two different basic courses in Biology which seems to be the tried and true method.

I realize that there are probably many seemingly prohibitive difficulties connected with such a reorganization, but as the other natural science departments have coped adequately with the problem, it looks from the outside like the Biology Department is operating at its own convenience, to the detriment of the whole student body.

Marchers Espouse Freedom

Youth Isn't a Good Excuse

To the Editor:

Rev. Muste was not granted permission to speak on campus because of a Forum Committee rule which says that a person advocating illegal activities may not use campus facilities. This is a self imposed rule. Rules are made to aid and guide, not to hopelessly bind.

The Committee should have been far more concerned with whether the spirit of the rule was violated rather than whether or not the letter of the rule was violated. I think it might be helpful in the future when the Forum Committee is considering a controversial speaker to allow an informed member of the sponsoring group to meet with them.

The illegality that concerns the FC is the rule of the Peace Marchers to enter Cuba. No law, as such, exists prohibiting travel to Cuba. The State Dept. has issued an order restricting travel to Cuba, but there is no actual law against it.

The group is trying to get State Dept. approval for them to go to Cuba. Approval may well be granted them. Even if it is not they will probably attempt to go as they feel that in a "free" country they have this freedom of travel.

When and if the matter of this travel restriction is brought before the Supreme Court, it is likely to be ruled unconstitutional. The traditional way in this country to test infringement on liberties has been to break the law on role involved and take it to the Supreme Court.

If merely to state that the group is going to try to go the Cuba is advocating it, then Rev. Muste does advocate it. But a hard sell is not employed. One Dean expressed concern that Muste might urge all students to drop school and join the march.

All of the hours I have spent, these past fourteen days, around Rev. Muste and the Peace Marchers, no one has either suggested or even threatened that I might drop out of college and join the march. Neither does Muste advocate that everyone should go running down to Cuba. He simply says that the members of the march feel they have the right to go and are going to try to go. In breaking the law, if they are, they are not advocating lawlessness. Rather they are espousing the cause of freedom.

I was not in Florida during the Cuban crisis of Oct 1962, but I well recall newspaper maps showing concentric rings of impact zones radiating out from Cuba and landing heavily on Florida. This state would have absorbed the brunt of Castro's short range missile attacks if it had been launched.

It seems odd that people seeking to avert nuclear destruction are not allowed to speak in defense of their ideas on campus.

In these troubled times we should hear anyone and everyone who rationally presents ideas that may help avert war.

Anthony Barron

In the article "Youth Reacts to Youth," Mary Stevens presents a very shallow analysis of her beliefs in the Liberal Forum. Her so-called youthful way of looking at present problems.

A young person should not measure his ideas just by accusing young or some psychology books to state something that may seem to be true.

A youth should react to the way he believes to be right, basing thoughts on sound conviction and not on what he has read in anything but intuition or what which he is a custom to believe, then, he should examine himself and the ways of others.

This dogmatic view Mary has given looks to be the same attitude of approaching a problem, as that of a person who has back his beliefs should be free from inflexible beliefs, with an open mind in looking at what others may choose to say and through discussion and debate work towards a peaceful solution.

Peaceful solutions require us to look at the problem from the other's standpoint, then an answer may be reached.

Christianity, Mickey Mouse Inter-Varsity Lecture Topic

"Christianity and the Mickey Mouse Complex" is the subject of a public lecture and series of dorm discussions to be presented by the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship in the Education Lecture Hall at 7 p.m. tomorrow.

Burton R. Harding of Atlanta as guest speaker will cover "The Alternatives to Chaos," "Is Faith for the Ignorant," and "Is Socially Acceptable to Live for Christ." After the talks, there will be a short open discussion.

Burton R. Harding

Harding has been with IVCF since 1958 and the regional director of the South since 1960. He did his undergraduate work at the Citadel, Columbia Bible College, and Wake Forest. He received his Masters from Wheaton College, his thesis being "Christianity and Greek Philosophy of the First Century."

Harding has led similar discussions in universities and conferences throughout the US. After his FSU engagement he will go to Ft. Lauderdale Beach for IV's annual beach front operations.

Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship is a student movement begun in 1877 at Cambridge University. Since that time it has sunk roots in 27 countries. In the US, the movement began in 1939 at the University of Michigan. It has grown to number approximately 450 chapters and groups on college campuses and schools of nursing.

IVCF is Interdenominational in character. Its chief aim is to present the Christian faith within the context of university life, so university men and women can make an intelligent appraisal of its worth and make a commitment if they wish. The FSU chapter of IVCF meets every Tuesday night at 7 p.m. Room 226 - Music for lectures and studies relating to the Bible to college life. It participates in activities such as summer camps, weekend conferences and other nationally sponsored projects.

Dr. Frank To Receive Guest Study

A privilege rarely extended to women - a Brookings Institution appointment as guest scholar, - has been given to Dr. Elke Frank at FSU.

Miss Frank, assistant professor of government, will use the two-month appointment to do research on disunion within totalitarian parties. The specific subject of Miss Frank's April-through-June research will be studies of conflicts within the Nazi party of Germany before and during World War II. The Brookings award provides an office for her in Washington, D.C., headquarters of the foundation for advanced research in government, where she will compile her information.

While documentary evidence will be her primary concern at Brookings, Miss Frank sees the award as an opportunity to exchange ideas and theories with the other guest scholars studying there. "Brookings is the hub of America's political scientists," she adds, "and you often learn as much in the dining rooms there as you do in the libraries."

Concurrent with the Brookings award, Miss Frank is receiving one of the faculty fellowships awarded by FSU's Faculty Research Council. These awards recognize creative faculty members and afford them opportunity to do research in their specialties. In addition to financial support, the supplementary study awards relieve the recipients of all university duties for the two month period.

Miss Frank, born in Hamburg, Germany, is a cum laude graduate of FSU and received the Ph.D. in government from Harvard University last year. A candidate for American citizenship, she came first to the US in 1951 as an American Field Service exchange student. She has been an assistant professor at FSU since 1961.

Dr. Victor S. Mamatey Publishes 'Russian' Book

Soviet Russia, where Bolsheviks decried imperialism as "capitalism," has developed an imperialism rivaling that of ancient Rome, according to Dr. Victor S. Mamatey, of FSU, author of "Soviet Russian Imperialism," a book just published by D. Van Nostrand Co., Princeton. Russian imperialism, said Mamatey, a professor of history, "evolved gradually and often accidentally from the Russian Revolution in 1917, reached its peak during and after World War II, and entered a period of crisis after the death of Stalin in 1953."

Mamatey stated his opinion, "Originally, the Russian Bolsheviks were ardent Marxian internationalists and violent opponents of Russian nationalism and imperialism, who lived only for the day of the World Revolution. However, when they unexpectedly gained a base for the World Revolution by achieving power in Russia in 1917, and moreover, contrary to their expectations, this base remained an isolated one, they were forced, in order to defend it, to defend the Russian empire."

The war aims of the Soviets as they emerged following World War II "bore a striking resemblance to the tsarist imperialist aims," Mamatey said. "This did not mean so much that the Soviet leaders were deliberately following in the footsteps of the tsars... as that the tsarist government represented well enough the interests of Russia and the aspirations of its people... fact the Bolsheviks violently denied before 1918 but gradually recognized afterward."

The book is in the Anvill Original paperback series of Van Nostrand.

THREE TIME WINNER

John Mercer, a sophomore, looks over a model car with Dean Charles Rovetta of the School of Business, which he designed and built. He won $150 and the trophy at the right by winning in General Motors' competition.

Mercer Wins State Award

John F. Mercer, a public relations advertising major in the School of Business, has won a state division of the model car competition awarded by the Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild for the third time. Mercer received $150 and a trophy, and was presented to him by Dean Charles A. Rovetta of the School of Business. A large trophy was presented to FSU in honor of the occasion. The trophy will be placed on the second floor of the Business Bldg. "John has shown unusual creative ability in designing model cars. I am sure this trophy can be put to excellent use in public relations and advertising, with the proper training, will be able to use his ability in designing attractive ads and in creating ideas in packaging, a new field he is opening up."

The Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild is sponsored by the Fisher Body Division of General Motors. The Guild was organized in 1930 to encourage men in fine craftsmanship, according to Dr. Sidney Kobre, professor of public relations and communications, who handled the presentation locally. The 1964 competition, now open for entries, will give $117,000 in awards. The major portion of the money is in the form of scholarships for national winners.

When Mercer entered the contest for the third time, Dean of Men Donald Loucks gave him permission to use a room in the Industrial Arts Bldg. to work on his model car.

Mercer says that he doesn't plan to enter the contest this year as it takes more time than he can spare from college activities.

Sterling Design Contest Opens

The 1964 opening of the Eighth Annual Sterling Today Design Competition, has been announced by the Sterling Silversmith Guild of America.

This competition, open to all students of design at the college, technical, or post-graduate level, is dedicated to encouraging design students in working in sterling.

In order to increase the value of the competition, three categories of design have been established: (A) Functional—creative experimental, innovative design; (B) Decorative—an object, ornamented or not, that has a decorative, sculptural use in contrast to the utilitarian object in (A); (C) Derivative—a functional article in silver designed for present day use which uses, as one element of design, an historical form or style of ornamentation.

A first Prize of $300 and a second prize of $100 will be awarded in each category. The final judging will be September, 1964, and prizes and awards will be given at the schools of the winners so that maximum recognition can be given to the school.

Complete details of the Sterling Today Competition can be obtained by consulting the Rules Brochure of the Sterling Silversmith Guild of America which is available in the Art Dept.

FSC Tests FSU

BOB CORNET

Flambeau Co-Sports Editor

Coach Fred Hatfield and the 1964 version of the varsity swatters will see how well they understand each other today as the Seminoles open the baseball season against Florida Southern College.

Florida Southern will be playing a team that lost a coach, a home run king, two All-Americans, and two pitchers who won 21 games between them last year. They will face pitching from five lettermen who only won three games among them last year and lost five.

However, before anyone cancels his reservation to Gastonia and Omaha for the College World Series, they should take into consideration Hatfield's 23 years in professional baseball, a center fielder who's an All-American, a catcher whom Hatfield believes could go pro, and a pitching staff with great potential.

Today, at 3:30 p.m., the sluggers will show how much they have learned from Hatfield's 23 years, how much of the winning spirit remains on the club that went to the World Series for the past two years, and how well the Seminoles can play offensive ball.

Right now, the Tribe's losses and potential appear balanced. Woody Woodward is gone at short, but the left side of the infield should be solid with Larry Johnson at short and Dave Dahleen at third.

Buddy Teagle, last season's catcher was a big man with a bat, but not too fast. Ken Suarez should be able to fill in behind the plate. He's lighter, faster, and has good hands. Southern will have a tough time stealing on him.

The outfield is full of strong fast men, with hitting potential from All-American Mike Augustine, and Bob Wilcox.

With speed from Jim Reed, Dahleen, Monty McBride and Bill Bearse for aggressive base running - the kind Hatfield wants - the Seminoles should give all their opponents plenty of trouble.

Pitching is still the main IF. Marty Howell, Cliff Ranew and John Smith are pushing each other for the starting berth. If they can click by game time today, Omaha may not look so far away.

The record book shows what the Seminoles lost. Today will show what they've gained.

JERRY MCDANIEL

... was one of the outstanding trackmen in the meet against Furman. McDaniel won the 440 and ran on the winning 440 relay.

Netters Lose Tulane Match

Tulane's tennis team, SEC champs, defeated the FSU Netters, 5-3, here Friday afternoon by winning two double matches.

The two teams were tied at the end of the singles. Lex Wood defeated Tulane's Chuck Blackinger, 6-6, 6-0. Don Caton, FSU, defeated Frank Lamother, 7-5, 6-8, 6-1.

Tulane won their first single set when Bob Hardcastle defeated Paul Bennett, 7-5, 7-5. FSU took the next set as sophomore Steve Guse edged out Dan Rhodes, 4-6, 8-6, 7-5.

The next two sets were taken by Tulane as David Moss defeated Don Monk, 6-3, 6-1 and Ray Lake defeated Steve Burdt, 6-4, 6-1.

Tulane smashed the tie in the doubles as Dan Rhodes and Ray Lake defeated Don Monk and Steve Montague, 6-0, 6-1. Bob Hardcastle and Dave Moss edged Caton and Guse, 6-4, 6-7, 6-3.

Rifle Team Wins Trophy

By KAY HUFFMASTER
Sports Feature Writer

FSU can add the Rifle Team to its list of victors for Circus Weekend. The team won the first place team trophy in the All-Florida match by "outshooting our closest competitor, the University of Florida, by 30 points," according to team member, Jim Moore. "Florida State swept the field in individual trophies."

First place went to Jim Moore, second to Charles E. Holmes and third to James C. Duncan. The trophy for first place kneeling position went to Charles E. Holmes, the captain of the team and "the most feared shooter in the state."

U of F, Stetson, Florida Southern, and Miami were the other entrants in the Seaboard and Blade All-Florida Invitational Rifle Match.

The FSU Rifle Team, with a 23-1 record for '63-'64 has six matches to go for the year. "We are not looking forward to any defeats."

Wherever there is an Army ROTC program, there is a rifle team and only Army ROTC cadets are eligible for the team. Of the 14 people in the FSU Rifle Team Platoon, the top 9 are chosen from the traveling team. The top 5 scorers are counted in the match.

Each member shoots an average of 10 hours a week on the ROTC rifle range at Campbell. The bulletseyes are pinpoints .008 of an inch in diameter which provide the highest number of points when shot from 50 feet. Kneeling, standing off hand, and prone are the three positions for shooting. Standing is the most difficult with kneeling next. The guns used are Winchester 52 C's and Remington 40-X's. As for previous training, the average number of years the members have been shooting is 3. Some never shot until reaching college.

Jim Moore speaks for himself and the team in saying that Coach Sgt. Dewey D. Furches is the "best rifle team coach that I have yet encountered in my collegiate shooting. There is a possibility that he will be transferred from FSU. We don't want to see him go."

Moore predicts that next year the team will be even better than this year and the record, if he had his way, would stand 100% for FSU.

Thinclads Put Down Furman

FSU's track team defeated Furman University here Saturday by a score of 99 to 45. The meet, which was run with winds over 15 m.p.h., saw many injuries to both teams.

Before the meet, Seminole Coach Mike Long had said it would be very close because Furman is one of the South's track powers. But after the final tallying the score showed that FSU's cindermen had given the Furman team a sound thrashing.

Coach Long said this was partly due to the high winds which was a factor in the injuries and also to the FSU's fine showing in the field events.

Of the seven field events FSU placed first in every one of them. And in the remaining ten events FSU took six first places to four for Furman. Al Williams and Darryl Guthrie were the standouts for FSU in the field events. Each won two events apiece. Williams won the shot and discus. The shot of 56 1/2' and the discus of 120' and 100 yd. dash. Lorenz the high jump and high hurdles was 2nd in the int. hurdles.

The freshmen teams of both schools met and the final score was an eight tie. In this meet only three men counted. Outstanding FSU men were Steve Landis, Don Caton, Charles Fuchs, Leslie King, Plummer and Billy Nelson. Furman accounted for the Bay State men eight points.

Next Saturday FSU's trackmen now boast a 2-0 record, with South Carolina at the FSU Track

Professor Fallon Comments on Forsyth's New Play 'Trog'

By LINDA RUE SHEPLER

Prof. presents an example of beauty in theater," commented Professor Richard Fallon of the Speech Dept. at the English Coffee Hour Friday. Fallon is the director of the latest play of British author, James Forsyth, which will be premiered at Conradi Theater tomorrow through 25.

Forsyth is gambling with premiering "Trog" at FSU, but it has to be someplace," commented Fallon. The FSU director and actors are trying to give the ingredients that make up a creative laboratory to test this experiment should mean a lot to the audience because they are part of the experiment.

Living play demands an audience that participates with and for the director stated. Theater members play an important part in participation. When the theater-goer leaves early, he forgets that he is his "part" in the play.

When then compared an author with an artist. "When you see a piece of theater that comes-off, bow down," he said. An author has to trust in his things such as lights, directors, actors, and the audience, what he would be easy with 16 collaborators on one painting?

Television and movies do not ask the audience to participate. In the theater you give something and you leave feeling drained. But you leave the memory of golden moments when all the ingredients went together and produced that "something" that makes the theater the great art. You know that you are part of that "something" because it came out over to you," concluded the director.

What Do Sophomore Comps Prove

To the Editor:

This "uniform battery of Sophomore Comprehensive Tests" could well be the straw that will break the camel's back (or the sophomore's back).

I am a senior in Education, and not to be confused with the type most people sneeringly remark about, I am an Exceptional Child Education major, for the mental retardards. My views in this letter proceed from this fact. How majors in other fields and mine view it, I do not know.

First of all I am not affected by this, so why should I care? Our generation has been tested from preschool (readiness tests) every year of our school lives, rain or shine, all the way up and through Graduate School Readiness tests, IQ tests, Personality, Achievement, College Boards, S.A.T., G.R.E., N.T.E., Aptitude, Psychological, and some little dirty calls for sex (to see if your classmates like you or not). I have had nearly all of them.

I got a job offer yesterday starting at $4400 plus $200 more, if I make 500 or better on the N.T.E.

Big deal! I will not receive $200 more if I happen to be a good teacher. ONLY if I make 500 or better on the N.T.E. Like the N.T.E., will prove I am a good teacher!

The same thing applies to these sophomore tests. What is the purpose? I am lost on it. "New admissions criteria?" The College of Education has thousands of requirements now. Suppose you fail your Sophomore Comprehensives, but meet the College of Education's requirements over and above what it asks?

What then? I am going to be kicked out? After roughly $4,000 for two years of out-of-state fees? I am going to be "weeded out"? In that case I should have never started! I have heard the bit about well-rounded education, (around 45-50 semester hours basic studies). But in reality my 12 hours of Exceptional Child Education courses is what I need the most and what I want.

The names of the phyla in Biology mean a lot to a child in a Special Education class. In fact, I am not too sure its means as much as I want.

One other point—a sophomore has enough to worry about in passing on the trimester system without developing ulcers over your "comprehensives." It all boils down to this: Why will it prove?

Resignation Regrettable

To the Editor:

I was distressed to read Gwendolyn's statement concerning resignation. Certainly, first faculty members are hard-pressed to come by in the first place, and forcing their voluntary departure in bitterness.

I do wish, however, that he had stated his basic reason for leaving the university a little more clearly. He indicated that it was a restraint of academic freedom which prohibited his remaining, but could hardly be all there is, since academic freedom can be measured or judged either as which is sometimes something and power and other times as something less, depending on an individual's standard.

The same is of course true of socialism, or love of humanity, or divorce from justice could degenerate into as vicious a tyranny as that inspired by its opposite.

The question then, is simply, is this particular restraint something?

The answer, I am sure, would be interesting many.

ALL I ASKED WAS

John Ballard

Request Was Outrageous

To the Editor:

Mr. Thomas Riggins has accomplished an interesting phenomenon of late. He appointed himself speaker for a student body of thousands and petitioned the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra to "cancel their appearances until real academic freedom came to FSU." Taking this literally, he is asking the orchestra to abandon all future concerts everywhere until Mr. Riggins and his little group of friends are satisfied that FSU is no longer a concentration camp.

To anyone with an appreciation of the fine arts, this is a veritable outrage. As though that was not enough, Mr. Riggins gave some of the most despicable selfish excuses for his naivete.

"After the Rev. A. J. Muste was refused permission to speak through University facilities I demanded on a great number of students.... that a great injustice had been done." "What does he mean by a 'great number of students'?" I have not seen one student shed a solitary tear or even verbally complain about Rev. Muste's plight. Was a petition circulated asking student opinion?

After asserting that he has a great number of students on his side he contradicts himself by saying, "It seems as if a great deal of controversy has been stirred up by the fact that a letter has been sent...." Obviously, his "great number of students" has dwindled down to Mr. Riggins and his little group of dreamy-eyed cohorts.

The numerical superiority of his group is proven by his own admission. "Over a score of people signed this letter." Speaking in round statistical terms, twenty of ten thousand amounts to about 0.2 percent of the student body and this is certainly a "great number."

He finally admits the truth; this is a "personal letter of protest." This is on the ground that, "As such it is our rights (his own poor English) as American citizens to write personal letters to people who wish to influence" and these people "were sympathetic with us." Oh!

We shall see how sympathetic they are as they perform Wednesday and Thursday evenings before a capacity audience.

Disturbed By Editorial
On S.A.P. Group

To the Editor:

Your editorial of Tuesday, March 3, disturbed me greatly for I perceived that you were somewhat overbearing in your criticism of the Students Act for Peace. I would like to reply to some of your allegations as best I can.

"... the Students Act for Peace... has been both thoughtless and tactless in their handling of what must be termed a delicate situation."

May I ask how the SAP could have better handled the "delicate situation"? The facts: (1) the SAP delegation in Albany asked the Peacewalkers to come to Tallahassee, (2) The time was decided that would best fit into the schedule of the Peacewalkers and their sponsoring organization, the CNVA, (3) Upon coming back to FSU, the SAP began immediately to make arrangements for the coming of the Peacewalkers and Rev. A. J. Muste, (4) City officials (the City Manager, City Atty., Asst. Chief of Police, and the Special Asst. to the Governor) were notified that the Peacewalkers were planning to find out about city policies on parading, leafleting, and the like. (5) Acting on the unofficial assurance of the city of the administration that there would be no problems with the approval of the speaker, the SAP began to publicize, at some expense, the coming of the Peacewalkers and Rev. Muste.

The SAP, due to a "communications breakdown" when it was approved last trimester, did not get a copy of the rule which prevents Rev. Muste from speaking at the University. The SAP had no knowledge of the above mentioned rule, and proceeded, on the knowledge that such men as Norman Thomas (renowned socialist) and David McReynolds (a field Secretary for the War Resisters League, often convicted of civil disobedience), to prepare for the coming of the Peacefighters and the talk of Presbyterian clergyman, A. J. Muste.

Notices four inches by nine inches or a little smaller were "stuffed," as you stated, one per mailbox, into some of faculty mailboxes, announcing Rev. Muste's talk in longin-which was cut short by the Public Forum Committee.

This use of the faculty mailboxes was, in fact, a violation of a university regulation, but one of which the SAP probably did not know. The campus was unaware. Thus went the "rude, arrogant" action of the SAP. On hearing from the city officials, a representative of the Walk would have to come to Tallahassee to make the necessary arrangements in person, the SAP, called long distance to Albany and told Bird Lytle, W. Co-ordinator, the developments.

Because of this telephone call the walk in Tallahassee was postponed until university and city officials could be talked with by an official representative of the Q-W-G March for Peace.

"No one likes to have any idea shoved down his throat."

As soon as the SAP found out of the difficulties now publicized, all plans were canceled that would violate University policy.

No plans were made to shove any ideas down anyone's throat other than completely rational discussions with the officials, now in progress. I'm sorry, but I don't altogether catch the point about shoving the ideas down someone's throat.

The closing statements of your editorial, however, were excellently put, and I agree wholly. In light of the facts that (1) the city is impeding progress of the negotiations of the group to prevent its walking peacefully down the streets, and (2) the university is using its very flexible regulation to prevent Rev. Muste from expressing his views on campus, I agree with your suggestion that "perhaps it would benefit some of our more militant groups or all sides of the other fellow's feelings."

In the light of your "thoughtless, tactless... rude, arrogant" actions of the SAP, I also agree with you that "there is no excuse for riding roughshod over everyone and everything with which you happen to disagree" and I might add misunderstanding.

Honor Medal Awarded to Circle K International

Circle K International Club, one of the largest campus organizations in the world, has been awarded the George Washington Honor Medal for its college campus citizenship and service program in 1963. It was announced by Norbert O. Martin, Circle K president.

This is the third time that Circle K International has been honored by the George Washington Foundation.

Though Circle K International is a relatively new organization — now in its fifth year — it already numbers more than 10,000 members on over 525 campuses in the United States and Canada. Circle K is the fastest growing and most active service organization on college campuses. Seventy-six new clubs were chartered during 1963.

A Freedoms Foundation award enjoys the same prestige and significance in the community service field that the "Oscar" does in the motion picture industry and the "Emmy" of the television world.

Specifically, Circle K's work in promoting active citizenship by participating in service projects on the campus was singled out for praise by the Freedoms Foundation.

FSU Tromps Mocs

The Seminole swatters forced three Moccasin errors in the third inning yesterday to score three runs and pull ahead of the Florida Southern baseball squad, 3-1.

The Tribe grabbed two more runs in the eighth, and the Mocs scored one more in the seventh for a final score of 5-2 in the FSU winning debut.

With two out and a three and two count on him in the bottom of the third, winning pitcher Marty Howell took first on a walk. Lead-off hitter Jim Reed then lined a single to center.

Both men advanced one base on an attempted double steal that forced an error by short stop Frank Oktavec that scored Howell.

Reed then scored on another double steal attempt. He was safe at home on a throwing error by the second baseman Ron James. Augustine moved to second in the steal.

Augustine scored the final run of the inning on a single to left by Bob Wilcox. Southern got out of the inning as Ken Suarez fled to the center fielder.

Howell again started the action in the eighth stanza. He took his second three-two count of the afternoon, and again moved to first on the fourth ball.

Reed next singled to center in this repeat inning. Augustine flied out to left, but the left flinger Bob Lee made a throwing error to move Reed and Howell to second and third. Ken Suarez pushed both men in on a hard single to second base over the pitcher's head. Reed and Howell were moving with the pitch and scored easily.

Dave Dahlén fouled out to the first baseman Dave Sonenberg to end the inning.

Southern did its scoring in the first and seventh innings on three hits and no errors.

Lead-off batter Frank Oktavec initiated action in the first by drawing a walk from Howell. He went to second on a sacrifice to first base by Buster Hardy.

Moccasin pitcher Ken Huebner then smashed a double to right that sent Oktavec scampering home. This put Southern in a temporary lead which lasted until the explosive third. The visitors from Lakeland got their last tally in the seventh. With two out, right fielder Fred Mayer smacked a triple off the right field fence to set up the final Moccasin run.

Sonenberg brought Mayer home with a single to center. That ended the scoring for the Moccasins as Oktavec walked and Hardy flied out to left.

Marty Howell went the full nine innings for the Tribe, giving up two runs on six hits and three walks. Howell started out strong, barring the first walk, began to weaken a little around the seventh, but managed to go the full route without serious trouble.

Coach Fred Hatfield did take three trips to the mound to keep his pitcher calmed down.

Southern's Huebner also went the full circuit. He gave up five runs on five hits and two walks, both to Howell.

There were two Seminole errors; one by short stop Larry Johnson on a hard hit ball that ricocheted off his glove, and the other by center felder Augustine who mis-played a line drive that droppped into center field and bounced over his head.

The Florida Southern nine committed four miscues, all in the scoring innings.

Hitters for the Seminoles were: Reed with two singles, Wilcox with two singles and Suarez with a single.

Southern's men with the stick were Huebner, Lee, Mayer, and Sonenberg.

The Seminoles and Moccasins play again today at 3:30 on the Seminole diamond.

MARTY HOWELL

...went the full nine innings yesterday to defeat the Florida Southern Moccasins, 5-2. The Seminoles meet the Moccasins again today on the Tribe's diamond at 3:30 p.m.

Revenge was sweet in Gainesville Saturday as the Racquettes avenged last year's loss in Gatorland and clobbered the UF's women's tennis club, 10-2. A clean sweep of the singles was averted when Carol Lee defeated Susan Smith, 7-5, 3-6, 8-6 and Ronnie Hall downed Betty Allen, 6-2, 6-1.

Other racquettes had little difficulty with their opponents. Lynda West defeated Vandoroff, 6-3, 6-1; Kathy Spence stopped Carol King, 6-0, 6-2; Gail Delozier blanked Emily Benson, 6-0, 6-0; Mary Weeks defeated Linda Kallaher, 6-1, 6-1; Karen Oldenburg took Nancy Calhoun, 6-2, 6-4; and Irene Washington dropped Marian King, 6-2, 6-1.

A return match will be played Saturday at 11 a.m. on the courts behind Montgomery Gymnasium. The Racquettes expect to extend their undefeated record. The match of top interest will be between Lynda West and nationally ranked Alice Tym, wife of University of Florida's number one varsity player, Bill Tym.

'Trog' Premierers, Daly Plays Lead

A book of fairy tales and a dictionary are precious possessions to "Trog," title character of the 20th Century British legend which premieres tonight at 8:30 p.m. in Conradi Theatre.

Previewing the play in which Broadway actor Frank Daly will star, author James Forsyth said that Trog's only concepts of the world prior to his discovery during an air raid are those he has formed from two books—Tales of the Four Winds, and a modern dictionary.

The drama, said Forsyth, is set in England during World War II, and concerns the role which Trog plays in the lives of those who discover his disfigurement and release him from the cellar prison where he has spent most of his life. Believing his benefactors to be prince and princess, Trog soon learns the meanings of reality and modern warfare and begins to decipher the vocabulary of his dictionary, said the playwright.

"Trog's poignant discovery of his own ugliness is a central theme of the play, but it is his impact on others that is most important," he added.

The two principal supporting characters in the cast of 10 are Phillip, a young English officer played by Al Smelko, and Selene, a nurse played by Lynn Darby, and Pat Britt. Miss Britt will perform in the Saturday and Sunday matinees.

Told with humor, tragedy, romance and pathos, Phillip's search for meaning is every man's quest for an understanding of his existence, says Forsyth. "How Phillip finds this meaning in his relationship with Trog, Selene and others form the elements of the play's conflicts and conclusions," he says the author.

Seeing his play as a "legend of our times," Forsyth adds that it has some basis in fact. The title character is patterned on a medical case of elephantiasis in which the man afflicted with the disease proved that a magnificent mind can transcend physical deformity, given the chance.

"Trog's disability could be those of our war wounded, or those of the abnormally formed innocents whom nature afflicts at birth," says the Scotsman. "And the reactions of Phillip and Selene are our own," he adds.

Pleased with the University Theatre production's progress, Forsyth predicts the American premiere will be "very bit as good, perhaps better than the British version."

Others in the cast include a 71-year-old freshman—William Roever—who plays the Old Workman. He is Sam Pasco, has parts in the prologue discovery of a trunkful of relics which once belonged to Trog, including his beloved books.

Comic relief is offered by the characters Muddelbright and Cunrad, a pair of elderly combat veterans who, along with Phillip, are patients in a rest home for the war wounded. Muddelbright is played by Rhett Bryson and Cunrad by Sam Baker.

Moon Chances Good According To Lovell

By SALLANNE HUFFAKER
Asst. News Editor

The progress of the Cape Isawerter, There is a good chance of seeing the Moon with a man unless the U.S. budget is unfortunately rescheduled," stated Sir Bernard Lovell, speaking Monday night in Westcott Auditorium on "Life, Space, and the Future."

Lovell, illustrating his lecture with slides, dealt with the universe as a whole, our Solar System, and visits to the U.S.S.R., discussing the universe, Lovell said that scientists are attempting to discover whether time and space we know it occurred 10 million years ago.

Lovell discussed the origin of our star system. He stated that there are two theories concerning the origin of the universe. The approach of another star may have caused the Solar System to begin its present appearance, or the system may have begun as any ordinary star surrounded by gas and dust.

Philosophers To Begin Lecture Series Tonight At Tully Gymnasium

Philosophers are scheduled to take a series of tests designed to determine the readiness for upper division work beginning at 7 p.m. tonight in Tully Gym.

Three hours of testing covering humanities, social studies and history are scheduled tonight and Monday and one-half hours of testing in English composition, natural sciences and mathematics are scheduled for 7 p.m. tomorrow night.

Philosophers who have received none of the tests are required to take them, according to Dr. G. Emerson, director of the University Testing Service.

Make-ups are scheduled Saturday for those who are not able to take the tests Wednesday and Thursday.

Either theory gives rise to the question of the existence and forms in the other parts of the universe. It is necessary that there be a stable environment for one billion years if life is to exist.

He said that 1½ of stars in the universe must have planetary systems in which at least one body exists where there is a possibility of life. Lovell believes that the use of radio telescopes and space probes will solve the questions raised concerning the universe.

The situation is poor in knowledge of the Moon, stated the British astronomer. The only new piece of information is the picture taken by the Russians of the other side of the Moon, he said.

In referring to his last trip to Russia, Lovell commented, "I came back with messages regarding a landing on the Moon."

His involvement with the Russian space program began, according to Lovell, with the tracking of the Sputnik. About his relations with the Russians, Lovell said that they are "much more difficult, chancy, and hard to interpret," than U.S. relations.

Szyrnyng Stars In Next State Concert

The third in a series of events of the State Opera Association and State Symphony of Florida will be an orchestra concert Tuesday night, March 24, featuring Henry Szyrnyng, violin virtuoso, as soloist, touring with "Golden Age Ballet" by Shostakovich. Tickets are now on sale in the School of Music Office. They are priced at $2 for adults and $1 for children and students. Season ticket holders need only bring their tickets for admission.

Szyrnyng will perform Mendelssohn and Brahms concertos as soloist with the Symphony, conducted by Robert Sedore. The orchestra will open the program with "Golden Age Ballet" by Shostakovich.

A native of Warsaw, Szyrnyng immersed himself in a full tide of world-wide concerting after a relatively quiet 10 years spent mainly in teaching.

From 1943 to 1953 he directed the string department at the Mexican National University in Mexico during which time he played only 20 or so concerts a year. He has said in an article in "High Fidelity Magazine," "At the end of that time, I was able to step into a concert career, even after so long an absence, because I had learned a great deal from teaching."

At the age of nine after having studied piano with his mother for four years, Szyrnyng was sent to Berlin to study with the famous teacher Carl Flesch on the advice of Bronislaw Huberman who had heard him play. In 1934 he studied the fundamental aspects of music with Nadia Boulanger in Paris.

Freedom Of Expression Is Lacking

Dean Chalmers' lecture to Liberal Forum Sunday before last was an enlightening experience. The first two thirds of his talk dealt with "Behavioral Determinism" as a theory of human conduct. After establishing this thesis he continued on by relating it to the actions of the Committee for Cultural Freedom at FSU.

The proper response of the administration to the stimulus caused by the CCF, he maintained, is to see that the committee ceases to function along its avowed lines of sending out personal letters of protest.

On this point, I think, the CCF is in complete agreement with Dean Chalmers. It is my opinion, however, that the best way to abolish the CCF is for the Administration to (re-) establish freedom of expression at the Florida State University.

Chalmers maintained that Freedom in a determined society, such as FSU, should protect minority and at the same time see that the minority can not start to vote to the majority. The CCF, I feel, agrees with this as well as the fact that the majority would not the inhabitants of the world make up a decided minority?

Dr. Chalmers also said that Administration was becoming consistent about banning speakers. Perhaps for the first time the cation of the rightest has been down. This also is not the an to the problem of free speech FSU.

Everyone should be allowed to press his views, left or right, preventing both groups from fearing the Administration compounds the difficulty.

Dr. Genshender aptly pointed out the trouble with the present administration, their actions demonstrate that we are not a university. All we have many fine buildings with the prospect of more interesting, but we lack the one essential element of any university atmosphere which encourages freedom of expression and the free exploration of ideas."

For Governor

H.B. (Bob) Foster

I retired from law practice in 1942, moving to Florida where I have lived since that time and have been engaged as follows:

Three terms as a member of the Lee County Board of School Trustees, six and a half years as chairman of the US Department of Agriculture, Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Committee of Florida, directing the operations of price supported and allotment crops and conservation programs throughout the entire state.

I have also been engaged in various business enterprises in Lee County, Florida, in addition to operating a farm of flowers and vegetables. During my period of law practice in North Carolina, I served as attorney and claims superintendent for the Employers Group of Insurance Companies as well as being engaged in private practice. I am also an experienced construction man, having had six years in construction business. It was in this endeavor that I operated when I first came to Florida, being a member of the family-owned construction company engaged in building of air bases at the following, among other locations within the state: Tallahassee, New Smyrna, Beach, Lake City, Vero Beach, Sebastian, Roseman, and Panama City.

I believe that my experience in the construction business will be of untold value in connection with the highway program and I know that my experience with the school system will be of great value to the administration of the school system within the state.

I believe that our representative government with its three independent branches, Legislative, Executive, Judicial, provide a necessary system of checks and balances which must be respected if our freedom is to endure.

I believe in the worth of each individual human soul and his right to life, liberty, the pursuit of happiness and the right to own property.

I believe that the government belongs to the people, not the people to the government. Vast centralized powers destroy local government and history proves, leads to dictatorship.

I believe that the government should do for the people only those things which they cannot do for themselves.

I believe that freedom is economic as well as physical and spiritual and that our great danger today is the program of tax and tax and spend and spend.

I believe that our government should guarantee to all our citizens the right to equal opportunity under law within our free enterprise system.

I believe that we should reaffirm the principles of our founding fathers and that we must teach them to our children if this nation is to continue her upward march.

And last, I believe that man has only one master, God his creator.

I propose among others the following changes in laws presently on the Statutes of Florida:

1. That the recent act of the legislature increasing the tax and license on automobiles be revised to reduce it to its former level.

2. I propose that the present law prohibiting branch banks in Florida be amended to allow branches of a bank in the county of its location.

3. I propose the outright repeal of the intangible tax law, which, in my judgment, is a tax on tax and a tax on thrift.

4. I propose that there is no plan of Florida representation presently existing that properly distributes the representatives in the legislature to conform with the present constitution. I propose a plan comparable to corporate representation of stock holders so that each person within the state, for example, would equal one share and that the representative to the House from any one county be entitled to cast a vote of a value based upon the ratio that the population of that county reflects to the population of the state.

That all counties have at least one member to the House of Representatives and that no county have more than five representatives, and that the total membership be limited to 100.

5. I propose a recommendation for the complete over-hauling of the specifications of highway construction to the end that we may have more and better roads at less cost by utilizing local materials properly stabilized.

6. I propose for schools a change from the trimester system at the university levels to a quarterly or semester system, it being my opinion that sufficient time is not allowed under the present system for adequate research to membership by proper election.

I believe that additional taxes will have to be placed on some items to provide the necessary funds for the continued expansion of the school systems at all levels. However, I feel that the matter of taxes should be entrusted to the voters for their approval, which action I would recommend.

I propose economy in all phases of government operation and believe that taxes can be reduced if cuts are made as the interest of good, financially sound, economical, constitutional government dictates.

Prevention Of Nuclear War

Is Only Sure Protection

-Part One-

The fallout shelter program is merely the current phase of the continuing illusion of safety in the nuclear era. Civil defense programs have been as fickle as women's fashions. The weaponry of war has changed so rapidly that what seems a feasible course of defense one day becomes obsolete long before it can be implemented.

Following World War II a civil defense board was established to study what would happen to the United States if a nuclear attack were unleashed on our soil. At the time we stood proud and confident; we had a monopoly of the bomb. We had exploded an equivalent of 20,000 tons of TNT over Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Most Americans felt we were secure from attack for a long time. But for the sake of military theorizing, a general assumed we might be hit by weapons as large as 50 kilotons. How would we defend ourselves? The answer was to build "blast shelters." The experience of Hiroshima had shown that only 15% of the immediate deaths in that ill-fated city had been caused by radiation; defense, therefore, was needed primarily against blast, the great explosion itself.

In 1949, the Russians, to everyone's dismay, exploded their first atomic bomb. The theoretical problem of atomic attack now became a possibility in reality, and a Civil Defense Act was passed in 1950 to plan for blast shelters. "Defense" of civilian still seemed possible.

This reassuring illusion, however, kept fading from year to year. In 1953 the Soviets exploded their first hydrogen bomb — one thousand times more powerful than the "midget" atomic weapons — and by 1954 US experiments in the Pacific had proved that local radioactive fallout extended over an area far larger than that affected by the blast. The deadly dust spread over 7,000 square miles in these tests, while the atomic warheads would have blasted affected only 200 square miles. A new theory and a new cult developed in Civil Defense: We can only survive if we evacuate our cities. The blast shelters became a relic for military museums; evacuation became the panacea.

But in 1957 came the Soviet first satellite, Sputnik I. Now it was clear that nuclear warheads would no longer have to be delivered by "slow" ocean-crossing airplanes but could be hurled through the air — as missiles — at 10,000 miles an hour. Military strategists became convinced that we might have only thirty minutes of warning — or fewer. Evacuation was obviously impossible.

When the current shelter program was launched almost three years ago, it was immediately confronted with major hurdles in public relations. The American people had to build emergency retreats, insisted civil defense proponents, to prove to the Russians we were "hardening" ourselves to the prospect of death.

But no responsible citizen was likely to invest time and money in a shelter if the prospect of death were near certain. Thus, while protesting to the Soviets our willingness to die, we had to convince our own citizens they had an excellent chance to live, and — as Dr. Herman Kahn put it — to lead "normal and happy" lives afterwards.

The problem was compounded by the fact that for a long time government spokesmen had taken just the opposite approach. Only four years ago the Civil Defense director told Congress, "We believe in shelters but we don't want to mislead people. There is no easy answer to this thing except to have peace... There is no such thing as a nation being prepared for nuclear war."

President Eisenhower, after an H-Bomb test, proclaimed: "There is no alternative to peace." President Kennedy told the United Nations in September, 1961, that "nuclear war must end or war will put an end to mankind."

To change this dread of war, based on a scientific assessment of its probable effects, into confidence of survival was no easy task. John Looney analyzed the effort accurately:

"Nuclear war, once almost universally presented as an unappealing and unthinkable horror, is being gradually transformed by the folklore of power politics into a bearable, although unpleasant, expectation... people are being psychologically conditioned to believe that nuclear war would not be as catastrophic as it has heretofore been pictured."

In Las Vegas, the head of the local civil defense agency recently called for a militia of 5,000 men to protect residents in event of thermonuclear war. The men would be trained to crush an expected invasion — not from foreign shores but from Southern California.

To the Editor:

Although it is not practice of Florida Alligator to offer its editorial page art as a free ride to the artist, I won't have mindless use of my cartoon in your March 2 issue if you had presented it honestly.

Or you had the objectivity to your hypersensitivity, you would not have labeled the cartoon "completely unsolicited attack" would have pointed out to readers that the drawing accompanied an editorial noting "completely unsolicited attack" the colors orange and blue. I written reply to the editorial that the writer meant beside cartoon did not escape your notice. In truth, as one who does not like the minor sports, I was unaware your victories over the drawing, ming and golf. Congratulations, regrets that these sports don't have any goal posts to tear down.

Cartoon Not

An Attack

To the Editor:

The cartoon, reprinted in the March 2 issue of the "Flambeau," showed a little girl representing FSU, sitting her tongue out at a disinterested Florida student, in broad daylight. Neither was it broad, as you suppose by your recent victory over us in swimming or golf. Had you glanced to the side of the cartoon as it appeared in the "Alligator" on Feb. 24, you would have seen a one column wide, page 10 cartoon, reprinted in the "Flambeau." In effect this article degraded the school colors of the University of Florida.

Surely, this must be provocative enough for a great deal more retaliation than the one little FSU Adds cartoon which has so many and puzzled you.

WELL-KNOWN FAMOUS PEOPLE: No. 1

This is the first in a series of 48 million editions examining the careers of men who have significantly altered the world we live in. We begin today with Max Planck.

Max Planck (or The Pearl of the Pacific, as he is often called) gave to modern physics the law known as Planck's Constant. Many people when they first hear of this law, throw up their hands and exclaim, "Golly whiskers, this is too deep for little old me!"

(Incidentally, speaking of whiskers, I cannot help but mention Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blades. Personna is the blade for people who can't shave after every meal. It shaves you closely, cleanly, and more frequently than any other stainless steel blade on the market. The makers of Personna have publicly declared—and do here repeat—that if Personna Blades don't give you more luxury shaves than any other stainless steel blade, they will buy you whatever blade you think is better. Could anything be more fair? I, for one, think not.)

But I digress. We were speaking of Planck's Constant, which is not, as many think, difficult to understand. It simply states that matter sometimes behaves like waves, and waves sometimes behave like matter. To give you a homely illustration, pick up your pencil and wave it. Your pencil, you will surely agree, is matter—yet look at the little rascal wave! Or take flags. Or Ann-Margret.

Planck's Constant, uncomprehended as it is, nevertheless proved serene with the key that unlocked the atom, made space travel possible, and conquered derelict slippage. Honors were heaped upon Mr. Planck (or The City of Brotherly Love, as he is familiarly known as). He was awarded the Nobel Prize, the Little Brown Jug, and Disenchantment. But the honor that pleased Mr. Planck most was that plankton were named after him.

Plankton, as we know, are the floating colonies of one-celled animals on which fishes feed. Plankton, in their turn, feed upon one-half celled animals called krill (named, incidentally, after Dr. Morris Krill who invented the house cat). Krill, in their turn, feed upon peanut butter sandwiches mostly—or, when they are in season, cheeseburgers.

But I digress. Back to Max Planck who, it must be said, showed no indication of his scientific genius as a youngster. In fact, for the first six years of his life he did not speak at all. Imagine, then, the surprise of his parents when on his seventh birthday little Max suddenly cried, "Papa? Mama! Something is wrong with the Second Law of Thermodynamics?" So astounded were the elder Plancks that they rushed out and dug the Red Sea Canal.

Meanwhile Max, constructing a crude Petrie dish out of two small pieces of petrie and his gravel bowl, began to experiment with thermodynamics. By dinner time he had discovered Planck's Constant. Hungry but happy, he rushed to Heidelberg University to announce his findings. He arrived, unfortunately, during the Erich von Stroheim Sesquicentennial, and everyone was so busy dancing and drelling that young Planck could find no one to listen to him. The festival, however, ended after nobody to listen to him. The festival, however, ended after nobody to listen to him. The festival, however, ended after nobody to listen to him.

Well sir, the rest is history. Einstein gaily cried, "E equals me squared!" Edison invented Marconi. Eli Whitman invented Georgia Tech, and Michelangelo invented the ceiling. This latter became known as the Humbludt Current.

—Fred Max Shulman

***

Mr. Shulman is, of course, joking, but the makers of Personna Blades are not. If, after trying our blades, you think there's another stainless steel blade that gives you more luxury shaves, return the unused Personna to Box 300, Staunton, Va., and we'll buy you a pack of any blade you think is better.

Morton Says Senate Works To Help Students

By BEVERLY JOSEPHSON

Pert Marlow Morton, an English education major, serves as senator from DeCraff Hall.

She has always had an interest in politics and student government, as her previous record proves. In high school she acted on Girls' Council and served as senior class secretary. At Girls' State in 1961 Marlow was the Commissioner of Agriculture.

When she came to FSU, she continued her work as alternate Senator from Gilchrist Hall. At this time she worked on the Social Standards Committee.

This year Marlow is a member of Women's Senate. She is working on the Labor's Student Service and Education and Social Regulating and Codifying Committee.

Marlow stated that the Senate is a group of students working by themselves except for a few advisors. They are in the Senate for a reason—to help all of the students. Senate belongs to the whole campus and works for the whole campus.

It seems that the students are always complaining about the Senate. Yet, Marlow says very few students come to her with suggestions or complaints. If they would just talk to their senators, these leaders would do their best to remedy any situations which seem to need it.

"Contrary to common opinion, the Senate is a constructive organization. The Women's Senate worked on getting the laundry on a choice rather than compulsory basis. They have discussed the racial problem and improved campus food services.

Akery Exhibit Opens Tonight

Experiments with atypical art materials keynote a one-man exhibit scheduled to share opening-night honors with "Trog," and open-house emphasis with Alumni Weekend activities.

Beach sand, spackling compound, gypsum and mica appear on the canvases created by Robert Akery, whose exhibit opens in the University Gallery tonight at 7:30 with a public reception honoring the artist.

A second exhibit reception is slated for Saturday morning from 10:30 until noon, with the artist, British actor James Forsyth and Broadway actor Frank Daly on hand to meet alumni interested in the University's current activities in art.

Akery, a graduate student in art, had produced a group of paintings which represent a thesis on the use of "non-art" materials. The technique is a subject he has traced from early Cubism through the works of Braque and Picasso to the present. In a written study of new materials being worked by modern artists.

Akery has achieved a variety of effective painting mediums. He confronts his canvases "without preconceived subjects," using backgrounds textured with such odd ingredients as insulation materials, Mixing perlite and vermiculite with a transparent glue, Akery has sought the evocative use of substances," in his paintings.

"I let the material dictate its own subject matter," he says. Interested in both figurative and abstract painting, Akery hopes to continue experimenting.

FSU's British Students Give Their Opinion Of The Beatles

By SHEILA APPLEBY

Each person has his own views concerning the fabulous Beatles but what does their native land think of them?

Naturally, only an Englishman knows this and since there are only two English students on campus, their opinions will have to carry considerable weight.

Noel McAuliffe, a graduate student in chemistry, studied at Manchester University in England which is only 20 miles from Liverpool, the home of the Beatles.

He has been aware of their existence since 1961, when a friend of his mentioned that he had attended high school with two of them and considered them only "very average students." He had heard them play at "The Cavern," a coffee-bar in Liverpool and a favorite haunt of rock 'n' roll singers.

McAuliffe conceded that one of their first records, "Love Me So," was no smash hit—in fact it was a rather "bloody" number 24 on the hit Parade list.

Russell Butler, a graduate student in English, said that upon returning from the U.S., the Beatles, unfortunately for the London Airport, landed on a Saturday afternoon and were greeted by all the school children. The airport was left in shambles and the director of the airport vowed that he would never again allow the Beatles to fly on a Saturday.

Just why are the Beatles so popular? According to McAuliffe, "In England everyone likes them." The general tendency for an English pop singer is to imitate the Americans but the Beatles, affectionately known as "Liverpudlians," have remained untarnished.

Collegians Present 1964 Spring Concert

A program of light and serious numbers will be presented by FSU's Collegians at 8:15 p.m. Friday in Opperman Music Hall.

The Spring concert by the 42-member men's glee club directed by Dr. Ramon E. Meyer follows a four day tour of the Southeast coast with concerts from Cocoa Beach to Miami.

Opening with "O Bone Jesu" by Palestrina, the first part of the program will include "Ave Maria" by Arcadelt, "Salvate nos Domine" by our God" by Tchesnokov and "Festgesang an die Kunstler" by Felix Mendelssohn.

Following "Saubian Folk Song" and "The Trysting Place" both by Brahms, the singers will present the composition which won the First Annual Collegian's Composition Award. Entitled, "Behold, Thou Art Fair, My Love," the composition is by Omar Allen, composition student of Dr. John Boda. The text is from "Song of Solomon."

Solo quartet for the number will be Larry Dorniny, Tommy Hag, Grady W. Toler, and Ron Forbush.

The Brass Choir, conducted by Dr. Cramer will accompany the singers.

The latter part of the program will feature a group of light songs, all of which are comedy numbers. The include "Abbondanza" from "Most Happy Fella" and "God Break" from "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying" both by Frank Loesser and "Cuneta Suite" by Ernesto Lecuona.

Comedy numbers were arranged by Richard Powell, assistant director of the Collegians. Guitar, piano and trumpets will provide musical accompaniment. Soloists will be Tom Hagan, Paul Kelley, and Richard Kadel.

Three Broadway show tunes especially arranged by Ollie Dale Jewell, wife of director Meyer, will close the program. The songs are "I Told You So," "What Kind of Fool Am I" and "The Sound of Music."

W. Falck Is Elected President Of Florida Pre-Law Association

William Falck, FSU student, was elected president of the Florida Pre-Law Association this past weekend at the annual Conference on Pre-Legal Education in Gainesville.

In an election characterized by much vigorous campaigning among the ten represented colleges, Falck's dynamic platform awarded him a slim victory. His platform included a plan for a nationwide Pre-Legal Association, and an ingenious method for strengthening the state organization.

Falck is active at FSU as a prosecutor for the Honor Court, member of Delta Sigma Pi and the Religious Council. He also has a 3.2 overall, his major being Personnel Management.

Other officers elected were Bill Murwin (Florida), Vice President; Kenna Morris (FSU), Secretary; Bill Groover (Florida), Treasurer; and LeRoy Cernal (FSU), Northwest Executive Board Delegate.

The convention was comprehensive in nature; various speakers covered all aspects of the legal profession and pre-legal education.

The conference was ended on an after-banquet address given by R.J. Farley, Dean Emeritus of the Mississippi Law School, on "Opportunities and Horizons of the Legal Profession."

Tribes Trips 8-4

Seminoles Bow To Mocs

Florida Southern's Moccasins held off eighth and ninth inning rallies by the Seminoles to defeat the FSU squad, 8-4, yesterday.

Augustine doubled to left to open the ninth and bring last hope for the Tribe. The next two batters were out on a ground ball to second, and a fly to right. The Tribe rose again for the Seminoles as George Rountree and Ken Suarez walked. Rudy Chmielewski took a two ball count before slamming a ball to the second baseman. Ron James grabbed the ball and threw to first getting Chmielewski and ending the game.

The eighth inning rally fared better for the sluggers. Suarez scored two runs. The Tribe scored on a single to right. Tom Lee, pinch hitting for Dave Dahl, reached first on an error by the Tribe. This moved Suarez to second.

Pinch hitter Gary Nichols brought the Tribe home with a single to right. Nichols, who stole second, but for no use as Jim Reed walked out to end the rally.

The Tribe's first two runs came in the sixth inning. Larry Johnson started the inning with a single to center. Len Chahub, in for the pitcher, followed with a single to left. Reed loaded the bases with a single down the third base line. Augustine scored Johnson and Chahub on a fielders choice to the short stop. Reed was put out on the play.

After a strike out by Randy Brown, Bob Wilcox singled to center, placing runners on first and second. The inning ended as Rountree popped out to the right fielder.

The Moccasins scored their eighth runs in the second, third, fourth, fifth and eighth innings.

Southern put five men on base to score one run in the second inning. Bob Lee scored the run when he walked, went to second on Darrel Fulton's single, went to third on James' single, and scored on a fielder's choice hit by Fred Mayer. Ken Huebner, yesterday's right fielder and Monday's pitcher, provided scoring action in the third. He belted a home run over the right field fence, sending Buster Hardy home before him.

Fred Mayer bagged the run in the fourth. He smacked a single to right, stole second, and moved to third on an error by third baseman Dahlen. Dahlen fumbled a two bouncer by the pitcher, Ken Murphy.

Mayer scooted home on a passed ball.

James did the scoring honors in the fifth. He was walked by relief pitcher Ken Creely, stole second and third, and made it home on a single by Mayer to right.

The Southern squad exploded for three runs in the eighth.

Following Huebner's strike out, Bob Lee hit safely to center for a single. Fulton matched him with a single to left. Both men advanced when James walked.

Lee got home on a fielder's choice that placed Mayer on first, and put James out. Fulton scored on an error by the short stop.

Mayer stole second and then was brought home on a single by Jim Hardee. Reliever Cooper Means popped out to the left fielder to end the inning and Moccasin scoring.

Coach Fred Hatfield used five pinch hitters and four pitchers in trying to pull out a come-from-behind victory. The loss went to starter John Smith.

Hatfield also used Ken Creely, Munroe Hunt, and Bob Kull in relief. The win went to Moccasin starter Ken Murphy.

Wood Nominated For Davis Cup Team

By MELODIE BETTS
Flambeau Sports Writer

Lex Wood, the number one netter in FSU's tennis team, has been nominated for a position on the African Davis Cup team.

Based on Wood's past experience and depending on the outcome of future matches, he may be selected as an official member of the team.

A victory for Wood next Tuesday could be a decisive influence in the chances on making the team. He will be facing Marty Riessen of Northwestern.

Riessen, the number two college netter in the United States, defeated by Wood last year in a match here.

It was a stunning upset for all earned as Wood lost the first set, 5-7, then bounced back to win the completely whitewash Riessen, 6-0 shutout, and in the final decisive outplayed Riessen to a 6-4 and match win.

Wood faced Riessen again this year in doubles. Wood and his partner Don Cator battled Riessen and Greg Greshner losing the first set, then rebounded back to a 6-3 set, and in an exciting last set, 9-7.

Coach Scarpa thinks that Wood has a good chance of making the team. "He is undefeated so far this year but none of his opponents have been in his class."

"The Riessen match should show out his top performance."

Ranked 22nd in the nation, he was named Tennis Personality of the Month of July by the Southern Lawn Tennis Association. Wood, a slight, balding South African, won 22 of his 23 matches last year. He was also winner of the Eastern Intercollegiate Singles Championship.

Wood lost to Chuck McKenzie in the quarterfinals of the National Forester Hills, but spent a successful summer touring the East with the Eastern Clay Courts Championships in Philadelphia soon after Hamilton victory.

LEX WOOD

... FSU's number one netter has been nominated to play on the Davis Cup Team. Wood's upcoming match with Northwestern's Marty Riessen might be the deciding match.

Edouard Morot-Sir Views Philosophy

"Existentialism was the main influence in the current of French philosophy from 1950-1955," commented Edouard Morot-Sir, Cultural Counselor to the French Embassy in the United States to the standing room only audience at the English Office Hour Tuesday. Existentialism is a philosophy of life which has enough presence of mind to philosophize from the standpoint of actor rather than spectator as has been the traditional case.

Today, although young France is greatly influenced by the Existentialism of Sartre, they feel he is a classic of the past and they are earnestly seeking a replacement. All the philosophies before 1955 are unable to answer the problems of the cold war, coexistence and Asia-Africa.

"We need a new metaphysics, a new philosopher, especially for the young," he added the lecturer. Problems today have world dimension; and, therefore, the new philosopher will speak not only to France, but to the universe. The wait for this new philosopher is an example of the anguish of our times.

In an attempt to equip Existentialism to answer these problems, the Sartre published "Critique of Dialectical Reason" in 1961. The first book of a two-volume work, the author tries to answer 1) if it is possible to get a marriage between Existentialism and Marxism, and 2) attempts to explain the history (evolution) of Man. In answering his first question, Sartre feels each epic of mankind is dominated by a philosophy; and we are in the Marxist moment. Although this does not mean that we are all Marxists, Sartre feels that we must admit, like it or not, that we live within this framework.

Sartre feels he is a complement to Marx and expresses that Russian philosophers don't understand Marx. The Russians don't know how to apply Marxist philosophy economically; and, thus, they have fallen into humanism.

"I wonder whether Sartre is serious about this," added Morot-Sir, "for marriage between Marxism and Existentialism is not possible because the latter demands the freedom of the individual."

Secondly, looking at the history of man, Sartre proposes that the progress of man is noted by the movement of society in the working toward a unified goal. However the unification of mankind is subject to localizing.

Involved in this movement is the relation between the individual and the general in a given society, Sartre asks "How does the individual act in the general as an individual?"

"Sartre may answer this question further in his second volume which has not been published yet, and cannot predict what his conclusion will be," concluded Monsieur Morot-Sir.

Aerospace Education Course To Be Offered This Summer

Orientation course related to history, development, and current status of aerospace space industries will be offered at the Science Education 400 - Aerospace Education Workshop during June 16-July 3 of Trimester III-B for these semester hours of credit.

The course is designed to help the persons orient themselves to the aerospace age. It is not designed primarily for science teachers. All persons interested in elementary, secondary, administrative or supervisory phases of education may take the course.

Tentatively an airlift is planned to a National Aeronautics and Space Administration installation (such as Huntsville or Cape Kennedy) and light aircraft orientation rides will be offered, also.

The course will include lectures and film/filmstrip presentations by some of the men who are doing today's research and development in aerospace space. An Air Force Base and local industrial and governmental installations will be toured.

While the course will count toward undergraduate or limited graduate credit, the student should obtain approval within his program by his advisor before enrolling.

This course will not count as a substitute for the methods course in teaching science that is required for teacher certification. After the first Tuesday evening meeting, the course will run all day from 9:30 a.m. until approximately 5 p.m. for a total of 16 days, including the Saturdays intervening. Persons interested in more details should write or call Dr. C. Robert Blackmon, Director, 1964 FSU Aerospace Education Workshop, Room 213 Education, or call Ext. 3336.

Enrollment will be limited and preference will be given to Florida teachers and FSU students.

Constitution Amendments Passed By Student Senate

Two Constitutional amendments and a resolution calling for summer trimester pre-registration were passed unanimously by the Student Senate in yesterday's meeting in Longmire Auditorium.

One constitutional amendment was introduced two weeks ago by Women's Vice President Clyde Stokes, and changes paragraph D of Article II, section 4, that a two-thirds vote of Student Senate will be necessary to bring legislation from either Men's or Women's Senates. A simple majority vote of Student Senate has been required. Purpose of the change is to give equal power to the two divisions within the Student Senate.

The second constitutional amendment was introduced by Senator John Mering last week, and adds a paragraph to Article IV, section 8, requiring "the concurrence of the majority of the entire court...to render effective decisions of Women's Judiciary, Men's Judiciary, and the University Court."

Senators Sue DeShazo and Joy Dickinson presented a resolution urging pre-registration for Trimester III. Sen. DeShazo stated that, although it is too late to arrange pre-registration for the summer trimester this year, in the future such arrangements could be made in order to provide a longer break between trimesters.

Women's Vice President Stokes introduced a bill adding an entire chapter to the Student Body Statutes which organizes and unifies women's government. The bill enumerates the duties of the various women's senate officers, the standing committees, quorums, presentation of legislation, and powers of Women's Senate.

The bill also includes a Council of Women Student Officers, which is separate from Women's Senate, serving as a "co-ordinating body for the various branches of women's government."

The Organizations and Finances Committee, headed by Senator Darry Wood, will consider the bill.

Lone Star Dragon Beware! Love Wins In Republic Land

It was a cold frostbitten day in the little far-off country of Republic Land. White Winter winds flurried through the Northern Forests of this little nook of civilization. But the hardy Republic Land people regarded this forbidding and turbulent weather as just the backdrop for the even greater turmoil they witnessed that day. For today was the Battle of the Dragon Slayers. Today was the day that all eyes would be on the little Republic Land. Here in a sunny arena aspiring Dragon Slayers would do tumultuous battle among themselves, each to prove to all the neighboring countries that he was the One to fight the Horrible, All-Knowing Terrible Dragon. Each wanted to be the one who would try to smite the glowing Lone Star on the forehead of the Terrible Dragon.

The Morning Sun was but a late-comer over the hundreds of early arrivals crowding onto Primary Plains, the field of Horrible Battle. Swarms of elderly and middle-aged ladies jockeyed for places in the quickly swelling crowds.

As the morning drew on the tension mounted. "They'll soon be here!" shouted one young fellow. "That looks like one now!" shouted another. Roars grew louder as until thousands of voices exploded together. In one uncoordinated rumble. "There's the first one! That's Sir Rock!"

And sure enough, galloping out to the center of the throng-surrounded plain was Sir Rock, armed to the hilt with a big broad smile, his body and horse covered over with precious metals, silvers, goldpieces, all given to him by loving admirers of the Northern Countries. He drew his big friendly steed up and motioned for silence.

"Where are my Opponents for the Horrendous Task of slaying the Terrible Dragon?" Sir Rock boomed, at the throng.

"Here I am, for one!" rattled a hollow voice amplified by a hollow head. "I am ready for battle, Sir. How do you stand?"

And sure enough, there he was, though not ready for battle maybe. A ban hammer held up by his frimends proclaimed, "Lord Waterless, Slayer of Dragons." In bold blue and white letters, though it was evident any red coloring had been scraped off.

Lord Waterless' horse, also held up by his friends, appeared to be a rather discouraged animal, ill fed, and obviously mistreated by Time. Rumor said it was once a powerful stallion. The poor beast was laden with ancient armor—not at all fitted for modern-day Dragon Slaying. As these two opponents squared off, three more aspiring Dragon Slayers quickly appeared.

First to amble on was Sir Nixed-on. Though this ageless warrior was in disguise, he was easily recognized by the high Dragon Treadmark across his forehead—a mark he has not been able to erase since four years ago when he was The One who fought the Terrible Dragon. Needless to say, The Terrible Dragon, Sir Nixed-on's face. Sir Nixed-on was not huge nor slender (other than the treadmark) as The Terrible Dragon at that time did not disappear because we find them unpleasant. But this assumes there is no alternative. It assumes that everything has been done to prevent the holocaust from occurring in the first place.

It assumes that we have no obligation to anyone except ourselves. Nor until the individual declares a moratorium on the Inconsequential in his life and invests himself fully in the endeavor to achieve a just and enforceable peace; indeed, not until the nation itself commits its moral energy, intelligence, and resources to a massive attempt to bolster the United Nations and give appropriate powers of world law—not until these basic things are done is there warrant for defeatism. And even if these things are not done, there is never a warrant, social or spiritual, for cannibalism.

In our concern about the present and future of human existence, many thoughtful Americans cling to this tiny hope of civil defense and blind themselves from an objective examination of the totality of the problem.

Yet there are rational solutions if we will only face up honestly to the totally new dimensions of war that are involved with nuclear weapons. There is risk, of course, in every alternative.

There is risk in the arms race and its threat of escalation. There is risk of accidental war, risk, as President Kennedy has pointed out, of ceaseless escalation.

There is risk also in disarmament. Mere disarmament is used to certainly not resolve the world's political frictions. There may even be some cheating and "brushfire" wars.

Yet, which risk is preferable: the one which virtually assures annihilation, or the one which only offers time to think out world difficulties?

The Arms race only makes more difficult the task of negotiating every problem, whether it be Formosa, Vietnam, the Congo, Berlin, or Cuba—for, for such source of tension intensifies the arms race itself.

But disarmament would be the very best gradually evolved and accepted by the fellow Americans recently hope to replace our own suffocating atmosphere of near-certainty doom. Walter Lippmann summed it all up with brilliant clarity when he told the fellow Americans recently: "There is no protection against nuclear war except to prevent it."

outweigh him by much.

This Valiant Knight fumbled with his armor and vainly tried to divert the crowd's attention from the combat already ensuing. "I did not come to be here; but I was swept in by the draft," he proclaimed.

The general unrecurrent of curses, betting calls, cheers, and general pandemonium was broken into one corner of the field by laughter. People strained to see the figure which had caused the humorous reactions. There she was, Shell! Sure enough, perched atop a mild-mannered mare with the word "Intuition" painted across its side was Lady Chat, a strong believer in Female Dragon Slayers. Lady Chat smiled at the crowds and parted her horse on the nose. "Horse sense!" she said. The last combatant was a curious personage. It appeared that both this bash fellow and his nameless horse were transparent! The people were enthralled. They shrieked and howled, and went wild.

"It's love at first sight!" moaned one young Republic Land.

Immediately the crowds seized the name. "There should be Love in every battle!" they exclaimed, as he galloped onto the plain amid the cheers brought on by his extraordinary appearance.

As it turned out this fellow was just an apparition. Rumor said he was really thousands of miles away fighting a Big Red Dragon. His Spirit was an excellent though, as the day later proved.

Not long after all the aspiring Dragon Slayers had started taking serious whacks at each other. Finally they surged into one slashing mass (except for Lady Chat whose horse continued to avoid the combat). Sir Rock thundered full speed at Lord Waterless who adroitly maneuvered his ludicrous bait out of harm's way. In this Sir Rock's cleverly guided his wobbly mount this way so that that he was able to avoid any direct clashes the whole battle.

Sir Rock reined his horse in, lunged back again two or three times, Sir Nixed-on made no move in the way though, bringing all the crowd to a halt of swords.

"Ah Ha!" cried the crowd. Sir Rock rode into the smoky mists. Swords sang, punched cheeks, and moaned, the spectator crowd cheered and crowded close. "He's throwing it all away!" cried an aspiring Dragon Slayer, grimacing. "Take that," Sir Stab. Stab. "Moan!" "Shriek!" blonde spectators, who had groaned, "I'm losing my life, Lord Moan!"

When the smoke finally cleared, the trampled sun pushed away. Horrible Sight appeared to all onlooking throngs. There, piled high, bloody, snowcovered heaped all the combatants.

Lady Chat's feet protruded in the bottom. Her right as a left apparently had not been strong enough to avoid the Conflict and inevitable death.

Also sticking out from the mass was Sir Nixed-on's head. It now only had a treadmark but no horse. Well, since a Dragon Slayer's power is in direct proportion to his Beauty, everyone knew he was fished.

On top of him were the snarled bulk of Sir Rock and Waterless. Lord Waterless was unconscious to his defeat. Sir Rock, which had been cut off the star, was in direct proportion to the crowd's mumbled, "I will continue to fight."

But sitting proudly atop the slain of the Front Protagonist was the Love, or having won the prize. There, acknowledging the end of the throngs with a vacant smile. He presented a very unusual sight. That was even more unusual than the fact that Sir Love was really thousands of miles away, fighting a Big Red Dragon!

Where Is FSU Headed?

To the Editor:

May I ask in what direction this university is going? Will someone, preferably qualified, please say what this university stands for? What is the purpose for the university's existence?

Why are radical firebrands, in the form of student action groups, dominate the controversy around campus?

Why can we apathetics not unite behind our university? Where may we find out what the philosophy of the administration is? Is it not in the annual catalog, or in the "Powwow," or in "Knowledge for College?"

Is a university measured by its football team? Why, when the left arm of the school is begging for classrooms and office space, does the right arm give precious funds away to add seats to a seldomly used stadium?

Why are so many new science buildings going up when some of our distinguished scientists are leaving the area? Drs. Rustad and S.W. Huggins, a great group of students congregated and talk of the importance of their university in the trifles such as sports, and in the trifles such as the university athletics may be adequately debated, the past group of erudite farmers on the nature.

Why must the administration, some impersonal something hovering above us? Will someone please speak his mind whether or not it is contrary to the Governor, the Legislature or the Riggins?

Will our alumni ever have another worthwhile reason for coming to college? More childish pastimes of college? God save the apathetics.

Part Two Of Civil Defense Letter

It is believed that Los Angeles, as a major city, would be under direct attack. Survivors, warned the Las Vegas civilian defense official, "would come into Nevada like a swarm of locusts." Obviously, they would have to be repulsed.

In a less organized way, other Americans are now preparing to kill Americans. A Chicago suburbanite, according to "Time" magazine, intends to mount a machine gun at the entrance of his fallout shelter and blast away at shelterless neighbors who might try to get in out of the radioactive rain.

Countless other Americans may be making no open declarations about their intentions but they are calmly going about the business of equipping their shelters with guns or tear-gas devices, just in case desperate neighbors might want to poach on their presence during or after an attack. Some are now preparing their children psychologically to accept the murder of their playmates. All this goes under the heading of civil defense.

In Hartford, Connecticut, at a private meeting of local residents who had come together to consider civil defense problems, one citizen advised his neighbors that firearms were standard equipment for basic needs, along with stocks of food and medical supplies.

People who are wounded or suffering from radiation will run around like madmen trying to find shelter, he warned. And, since there will be only so much water and food for one's own family, the invaders will have to be turned back even if it means shooting them.

People speculate on the horrors that would be let loose by nuclear war. It is not necessary to speculate on such horrors. Some of the worst horrors are already here. The transformation today of otherwise decent people into death-calculating machines; the psychological preconditioning for an age of cannibalism; the wholesale predation of murder and the acceptable conditions thereof; the moral insouciance of those who presume to prescribe the circumstances under which it is spiritually permissible to kill one's neighbors; the desensitization of human response to pain; the acquiescence in inevitability of disaster; the cheapening of human personality with its concomitant of irresponsible fatalism—all these are part of an already existing, fast-swelling chamber of horrors.

It will be said that shelters and everything that goes with them are basic factors of nuclear war that do

Presently he is a member of the Organization and Finance Committee in Senate. In addition this year he is on the Dean of Men's Staff as an assistant counselor in one of the men's dorms.

Chuck's previous four years at FSU have been active ones, too. As a freshman he was an officer of the Newman Club and the social chairman of his dorm. During his second year he was again an officer of the Newman Club and in his fraternity (Pi Kappa Phi) he was president of his pledge class, chairman of the Standards Committee and Alumni Relations chairman.

When a junior he was president of both the Bakers Club and the Newman Club in which he was named the most outstanding president in the southeast province. Then last year he was in Gold Key, the Junior Chamber of Commerce, Men's Judiciary, president of Newman Club, and rush chairman and political chairman of his fraternity. In addition he was selected to Who's Who. During all this time he had made the Dean's List six times.

Chuck received his BS in Baking Science and Management and is now working toward a masters in Industrial Management. After this he plans to go into the baking industry. His hobbies include cars, records, and all kinds of sports.

Commenting on another phase of Senate this year, he says that it has more authority than most people realize and more than other schools in comparison. For instance, the budget in other schools is usually made up by the administration, while at FSU the Secretary of Finance and the Senate make it up. It must then be approved by both the Student Senate and Faculty Senate. Touching on another topic in relation to this, he says that while Faculty Senate always has the final say, unless there is something that's really detrimental to the school, it doesn't stand in the way of Student Senate.

FSU Has Edge

Clemson Game To Be Close

By FRED CLEAVES
Clemson "Tiger" Sports Editor

It's almost time for the warm weather to set in, I know, because we (Clemson) have a baseball game with you (FSU) Wednesday. And that always signifies the last cold snap of the year. At least it has for the past few seasons.

We always start off with you for some reason. Anyway, I can remember back a few years when we used to end up with FSU too. We got into a habit of meeting you in the district three playoffs.

The FSU-Clemson baseball rivalry has been a rather interesting one lately. A few years back Clemson made it to the college world series on the arm of Harold Stowe. Stowe picked up 14 of our 22 wins in 1958. He led Clemson to a 5th place national ranking in 1958 and again in 1959. Both of those years we had to deal with FSU in the district three playoffs. In the more recent past, however, the tide has turned. Last season it was the Seminoles who made the trip to the college world series. You had quite a team, and you lost some fine players off that team. But the rumor is that FSU is loaded again. Perhaps only Wake Forest will be any threat to you in the district three playoffs this year.

You lost a couple of good pitchers, Buddy Teagle—your fine catcher, and that sensational shortstop, Woody Woodward (who made such a fabulous play in his first major league game as a Milwaukee Brave last year). But you still have your FSU is TOUGH in baseball.

As for Clemson, the outlook isn't too bright this season. Billy Wilhelm, Clemson coach, is about the most optimistic person you will find anywhere. And he is picking his Tigers fourth this year, behind Wake Forest, Duke and the University of North Carolina. This is even worse than it sounds, really. You see, for the last two seasons coach Wilhelm, at the beginning of the seasons, flatly stated that Clemson was the team to beat in the conference. The opposing coaches took Wilhelm seriously both years, and had their best pitchers ready whenever old Clemson came around. They beat us too.

But the Tigers did lose some mighty good ballplayers. Last season's starting second baseman, shortstop, third baseman, catcher and two outfielders are gone. And five (that's right, five) of those six were all Atlantic Coast Conference, first team at that.

As for Clemson, the outlook isn't too bright this season. Billy Wilhelm usually comes up with some ballplayers, though, and he might have a few surprises for Tiger fans this year yet. Clemson had four sophomore pitchers last season, and only one—Greg Casey—came through as expected. If the others, Dave Wrenn, Dale Smith and Tommy Chapman, can find the range, then the little Tigers might let out a big roar. Pitching, after all, is supposed to be 75% of the game.

If you make it to the game, keep your eye on our first baseman, Buddy Nixon. He was voted the most valuable player by his teammates on the 1962 team when he played as a sophomore. He had trouble with the books, and missed last season. Baseball bounds around here call him "nifty" Nixon, and there is a good reason for it. He can field about as well as any first baseman in the big leagues today, honestly. Two years ago he didn't make an error, and that's fielding 1,000 in any league. But there is even more to it than that. That season our third baseman fielded .471. Had it not been for "nifty's" fine saves the third sacker would have fielded .471 because he had a bad habit of seeing that most of his throws skimmed the dirt a few times between the mound and first on their way across the diamond.

The big first baseman can hit too. When we met FSU up here two seasons ago he beat you with his bat. With the score 11-11 in the bottom of the eighth, he hit one 380 feet with two men on and Clemson took it 14-11. Nixon hit .326 in 1962, and led the team in home runs with six (that was quite a feat since most of the parks around our conference are models of Boston's Fenway Park and Buddy is left-handed).

Our best freshman last year was Jacki McCall and he will be starting at shortstop. He can hit the long ball too. In the final analysis, it comes back to our pitching. If they can come through, and with a little luck here and there, here's hoping the Clemson Tigers get a chance to meet the FSU Seminoles in District Three in a couple of months.

And, oh! the Clemson tennis team will be visiting you March 27. They're good, no doubts about it. The netters boast a 27-3 mark for the past two seasons, with two of the losses coming at the hands of powerful UNC. Especially look out for the number three doubles. They have only lost three times in the past two seasons, but they aren't really that good. They just lob their opponents to death. You could see a long match....

BUDDY "NIFTY" NIXON

...Clemson's outstanding first baseman. This will be the man to look out for when FSU meets up with the Clemson Tigers this afternoon.

Tankers To Go To AAU Meet

FSU's swim team will go to the Florida Atlantic Athletic Union Meet in Jacksonville this weekend minus eight of its top men.

Dick Abbott, Gene Dayton, Jim Mauldin, Dick Greene, Doug Druger, Mike Bloun, Neal Allen, and Larry Profumo will not make the trip to Jacksonville Beach's Aquatic Club for the two day meet.

These men will stay in Tallahassee to practice for the National Collegiate Athletic Association Championships which will be held at New Haven, Conn., next weekend.

"Our boys who have qualified for the nationals feel that they should get in the extra days of practice," said coach Edm. Smith.

The Tribe won't go to the meet!

completely unarmed. Outstanding performers such as John Kohlen, John Rangely, Richard Acosta, Scott Guberle, Sherm Henderson and Dan Jefferies will be among the 25 men going to the meet.

Spectators will have a diverse of events to choose from this end in sports.

The baseball, tennis, and football squads will be active in competition at home. The swim team's freshman swimmers will see out on the road.

Today the tennis and varsity basketball teams will be in action. Paul Scarpa's netters will take Georgia Bulldogs on the courts behind Tully gymnasium 2:30.

The swimmers will try to improve upon their one and one record day at 3:30 p.m. when they go against the Clemson Tigers on Sem. Field.

Friday will follow the same schedule as the netters meet at the men-of-swing play at 8 p.m. In the Friday game the Seminoles sluggers will oppose the varsity of Tennessee.

Saturday the baseball team again play the Clemson Tigers at 10:30 a.m. The game will be a football game at 2:30 p.m. Saturday will end spring practice for the Tribe. The game will be played at Campbell Stadium.

The Seminoles tankers will travel to Jacksonville over the weekend to participate in the state AAU meet. The Frosh sluggers will wrap away action Saturday when they take the State Prison team.

Alumni Fete Offers Many Activities

community arts, business forums, new mathematics, and educational research are among the many topics slated on tomorrow's open agenda for FSU alumni.

Dr. Wells said one scheduled week-end activity which had to be cancelled was the Palm Sunday Concert slated for 4 p.m. Sunday in Westcott Auditorium.

The activities will begin at 10:30 a.m. tomorrow sponsored by each of the schools and colleges of Arts and Sciences, Education, Home Economics, Library, Music, Business, Nursing and Engineering Science.

Four faculty members from the School of Education will give reports on current "Programs of Promise" underway in educational research, curriculum experiments in English, developments in new mathematics and international cooperation in science education. The speakers—Dr. Donald Hartford, John Simmons, Eugene Nichols and Garwood Braun—will make their reports in the Lecture Building's Lounge and Lecture Hall.

University arts and community arts will take separate stages, with an Arts and Sciences reception scheduled in the University Gallery, and a panel discussion led by visiting guests of the School of Music to be held in the Faculty lounge.

Deans J. Paul Reynolds and Robert O. Lawton of Arts and Sciences will join graduate student artist Robert Akery, British playwright James Forsyth and Broadway actor Frank Daly in greeting alumni at the University Gallery, located above the Swanee Dining Room.

Guest speakers on the School of Music's "Improvisation On A Theme—You and Your Community and Arts" will include Pearce Barrett, architect; Al Block, art collector; Irvin Cooper, music professor; William (Bill) Dunn, arts editor for the St. Petersburg Times; Ralph Hurns, sculptor; Malcolm Johnson, editor of the Tallahassee Democrat; and Jan Rice, representative local theater. Presiding on the panel will be Dr. Karl O. Kuertstetter, dean of the music school and chairman of the Arts Council.

Miss Vivian M. Duxbury, dean of the School of Nursing, will join her school's alumni in the second floor Longmire Lounge for discussion of present and future programs. Highlights of the talks will include plans for a graduate program in psychiatric nursing and the need for a permanent classroom building.

Informal discussion and browsing privileges will be extended to alumni after the Longmire School, DePaul Shores and John Clemons, assistant professor, will welcome alumni in the library's faculty conference room.

Campus tours by bus will be available to alumni who desire to catch up on building progress and growth. Registration for the tours should be made on arrival, at the Weekend's official hub in the Longmire Building lobby. Bus tours will begin at 11:30 a.m. and run through 12:15 p.m.

The Schools of Business and Home Economics will use the open-houses to introduce alumni to new faculty and new classroom topics. Chied participants in the programs (Continued on page 7)

Kappa Alpha's Plan Secession Celebrating Annual Weekend

The men of Kappa Alpha Order in keeping with the traditions of their "Old South Weekend," have extended an invitation to all students and faculty to witness the secession ceremony.

AMS Examines Local Weather

Members of the FSU Student Chapter of the American Meteorological Society recently participated in an experiment known as the "temperature project."

Purpose of the project is to study the effects of the local topography on night-time radiational cooling in Tallahassee.

The AMS Chapter members determine how closely the Tallahassee area conforms to the theory of radiational cooling.

The city was divided into nine districts. Locations where temperature readings were to be taken were plotted by AMS Treasurer and project chairman, Russel DeSouza.

By using nine cars with observers riding along in each car the entire Tallahassee area was covered in less than an hour. A total of about 120 temperature readings were plotted and analyzed on a map of Tallahassee to see how well the temperature variations conformed with the city's topography.

To date, the project has been carried out four times, twice on the night of Jan. 14 when conditions were excellent for radiological cooling, once on a cloudy, windy night as a control experiment and once under marginal conditions.

Bulletin

The "Flambeau" learned last night from reliable sources that Dean J. Paul Reynolds has resigned his position as Dean of Arts and Sciences.

Reynolds will leave FSU to become the Dean of Wilmington College, Wilmington, North Carolina.

emonies that will take place today at 3:30 p.m. in front of Bryan Hall.

The purpose of KA Weekend is to revive, if for only one brief weekend, the glories and pleasures of bygone era here in the deep South. Their aim is to try and emulate their forebears both in manner and dress, living this one weekend each year as a memorial to "those great and true ladies and gentlemen of the gracious Old Southland, who live on today in the hearts and minds of their children."

Students are invited to join with the KA's and return to the ante bellum period, as a salute to the Confederacy, and a tribute to Robert E. Lee, spiritual leader and founder of the KA's.

The entire weekend is being enacted in a spirit of fun. The Kappa Alpha's are proud of their fraternity which boasts such a man as Robert E. Lee. In their own words, "His was the life of the true Southern gentleman, and we try to emulate him in word and action. Robert E. Lee loved these United States of America... He accepted his defeat and strove to rebuild the unity of the country."

"As president of Washington College, he taught young men to be Americans first and Southerners second. Therefore, we of Kappa Alpha, proud of our American citizenship and the United States, dedicate our weekend to that great American Gentleman, Robert E. Lee."

The weekend will officially start at 2:30 p.m. this afternoon with a parade of Southern fervor through the main streets of town, after which the parade will go through campus and will end with the secession ceremony at Bryan Hall.

After the Proclamation of Secession, the Mayor of Tallahassee will present the KA's with a key to the city and will proclaim this weekend as "Old South Weekend" in Tallahassee.

The climax of the weekend will be the annual Rose Ball which will be at the Tallahassee Woman's Club tonight.

Guest Columnist

Voter Is Buyer; Candidate Is Seller

(Al Galbraith)—It's going to be campaign time in a few days for the second spring elections. The second spring elections will be similar in many ways to the first spring elections, except that this time there will be forty-seven positions to fill instead of eleven. This means that there will be 90-odd candidates making noise for a while week—the average student is going to be so thoroughly confused that come election day, he won't have enough courage to walk within voting distance of a ballot box.

If you're at all interested in campus politics, here's a little outline to help you organize your thinking so that you can prepare for the onslaught of campaign material which will flood the campus next Tuesday.

First, understand the field of candidates into four categories: These categories will be Senators, Class Officers, Honor Court members, and Judiciary members.

Next, consider only those who are to be voted upon by your class. This includes Senators and Class Officers, and narrows the field by eight positions.

SENATORS: Your class elects two men and two women to serve in the Student Senate.

CLASS OFFICERS: Each class elects a president, a vice-president, and a secretary-social chairman. The class officers will make up an Inter-Class Senate as a result of Student Senate legislation passed in January. The Senior-Class President will be chairman of the council, and they will elect a treasurer for the entire council.

Next consider the campus-wide positions on the Honor Court and the Judiciary.

HONOR COURT: Two men and two women will be elected from each of the junior and sophomore classes to serve on the Honor Court, which means that about sixteen candidates will be running for the eight positions.

JUDICIARY: Three men and three women from each class will be elected to the judiciary, which is eighteen positions and thirty candidates.

Don't let the number of candidates scare you away from these important posts. Remember that if these people have the power to spend you from the University. Choose them carefully.

The toughest part is trying to choose among candidates. There will be so many generalizations, half-truths coming your way next few days that it may seem like a Ouija board to decide what. It's up to you to be able to see through the smokescreen of anything that smells of misrepresentation.

Contrary to popular belief, choosing a candidate (To illustrate there is some speculation as to whether or not Lincoln would have been elected if women had been granted suffrage before 1863) takes more than fair hands; a confident smile to carry out the duties of an office after the elections are over.

Look for experience that will make a candidate a good officer—will eliminate half the campaign material that is handed out to you, and shovelled under doors at night in the dorms. A critical eye at "qualification" the candidate is not qualified; ineligible to be elected; and qualifications are not synonymous.

Remember that you're the voter and the candidates are trying to sell themselves to you. Look at the wrappings, compare sizes, and the best before you buy, or else the government will become a collection of figureheads and fronts.

I'll be watching the annual GARNET & GOLD GAMES on WFSU-TV, Saturday, March 21, at 2:30 p.m. 'cause I can afford to.

For Governor

Robert King High

Robert King High, at 39 years of age, is one of Dade County's most outstanding young civic leaders. After service in the U.S. Army Air Corps in World War II, he entered the University of Miami. He was a leader in student affairs and upon graduation was cited by "Who Who in American Colleges and Universities" for leadership.

He won his law degree at Stetson University in Deland and has practiced law in Dade County for the past 14 years. He is a member of the Dade County, Florida and American Bar Associations. He is a deacon in Flagler Street Baptist Church. He is married and the father of five children.

In recognition of his dedication to closer ties between Miami and Latin America, the governments of Ecuador, Peru, Panama, and Colombia conferred their highest decorations upon him.

He was elected mayor of Miami in 1957, 1959, 1961, and 1963.

He is chairman of the Florida Committee for Fair Representation; chairman of the Mayor's Committee on Apportionment; a director of the Florida League of Municipalities; member, Committee on Metropolitan Government of the American Municipal Association.

He is a past president of Lambda Chi Fraternity of the University of Miami; Man of the Year, Alianza Interamericana, 1961-1962; he received the Leonard L. Abess Human Relations Award of B'nai B'rith in 1961; Sertoma "Service to Mankind Award," 1963; Variety Club "Great Guy" Award, 1963.

I intend to inject a new mood, into Florida's politics and government. I am not sure that a candidate for governor can be elected from the platform on which I will stand.

I am not certain that one can fight and win against the favored few who have dominated Florida politics. He has never been done before.

But one thing I know: Truth is more important than victory.

The free-wheeling, free-spending 1963 Legislature heaped an additional $170 million in taxes on the already back-breaking financial burden being borne by the consumers and wage earners of this state.

That was the principal thing the Legislature did do. What it DID NOT do was properly meet the problem of reapportionment and correct a situation in which a small minority of the people of Florida elect a majority of the state lawmakers.

I intend to fight a system in which one county has a legislator for every 1,500 people—while another county has only one lawmaker for every 70,000 people.

There is not a question of North Florida against South Florida and I do not intend to cater to that hackneyed idea.

The destiny of fast-growing Pensacola and its rights to a proportionate voice in state government is the same as that of Fort Lauderdale.

During my administration, we have not only held the line on taxes; we have reduced them for the past three years and this year, we cut taxes 10 per cent.

If this can be done at the municipal level, it can be done at the state level.

I am opposed to further consumer taxes. It is high time that the free loaders in this state pay their fair share.

As the governmental head of Florida's largest city, I feel qualified to seek the job of chief executive of our State. I have been elected for the past four consecutive terms.

There are great problems facing our state—among the foremost is the improvement of facilities and instruction in both our public schools and institutions of higher learning to meet the challenges of the space age.

There have been many stories in the news media of late to the effect that it takes more than a million dollars to be elected governor. I don't believe that.

This office belongs to the people of this state, and it is theirs to bestow upon who they choose. I do not believe it is for sale to the highest bidder, and I do not intend to become the best governor that money can buy.

Neither do I intend to seek funds from those privileged few who hope to buy continued exemption from state taxation and perpetuate the CONTROL of many by a FEW.

My platform and campaign plan may be unorthodox to the professional politicians arrayed against me, but I can promise this:

We are not running for exercise, and we are not running for practice. We plan to win, and we plan to win in 1964.

I am addressing myself in this campaign to the conscience of the people of Florida and to what I believe is their desire to correct inequities in our state government in order that Florida may surge ahead in its growth and prosperity.

I am staking my future on the belief that they will respond to this challenge.

Flambeau Forum
Timidity Or Intolerance

To the Editor:

A. J. Muste was recently refused permission to speak on the FSU campus. It seems that some, if not all, of those who are not in favor of allowing Mr. Muste to speak have rationalized but not rational arguments.

That is, many "good reasons" are given for not allowing him to speak, but there is little objective consideration of the only rational question, "What difference does it make?"

I realize, of course, that when one arrives at a point where something is intrinsically valued this question becomes logically irrelevant, but my comments are addressed to those who are ostensibly evaluating this action in terms of its probable consequences.

The sage of the "Tallahassee Democrat," Malcolm Johnson, gave his blessing to the Public Forum Committee and the policy upon which the decision was reached. He approved of their alleged basis of rejection which was, as I recall, that Muste was, and had been, engaged in "illegal" activity.

Since going to Cuba in violation of a State Department directive and not a violation of either Federal or Florida State law the label of "illegal" is a questionable one.

In either case it is a rational objection in the sense that it is based on policy and not on effect.

Johnson, like a number of students at FSU, also approved of the action on the grounds of preserving the "moral welfare" of those who would, presumably, be affected by Muste's speech.

Now there is an immense amount of focus pocus ambiguity in a phrase like "moral welfare," but whatever it means this position is, to say the least, very naive.

It is naive because it implies that persons hearing the speech will have their values or values substantially changed as a consequence. Such evidence as exists indicates that such an effect is virtually impossible.

What were the probable consequences of permitting or not permitting Mr. Muste to speak if it made significant difference with respect to student attitudes?

In seeking to make a probable difference is in the effect upon the attitudes of certain people toward the University generally, and the Public Forum Committee in particular.

In general I think the effect of this prohibitive action will be to enhance the prestige of the University and the PFC for those who have comparatively little (1) dedication to the traditional civil liberties, (2) intelligence, and (3) education.

Conversely, it seems probable that it has and will cost the University more than just a little respect on the part of those who are comparatively (1) devoted to the traditional civil liberties, (2) intelligent and (3) well educated.

Whatever may have been the cause of refusing to grant Mr. Muste permission to speak, this refusal gives the appearance of being motivated by either timidity or intolerance.

In either case there can be little question but that the price paid is a loss of respect by those who, in the long run, are far more important to the intellectual development of the University than the professional patriots and the local moral experts—namely, the more scholarly students and members of FSU and other universities.

I, personally, feel a little less proud of being on the FSU faculty, and when I meet colleagues from other universities who have heard of the incident I shall feel a little embarrassed. This, one can be sure, is neither an isolated nor a unique attitude.

Things have changed a lot since a Chevy was only a Chevy. Especially your ideas of what you want a Chevy to be.

So now you have the Jet-smooth Chevrolet—17½ feet of pure luxury, bumper to bumper. The size makes it a luxury car. But not the price.

Or you can choose the thrifty Chevy II, a 15¼-foot family car with all kinds of passenger and luggage space.

This year, your choice might be the new 16-foot-plus Chevrolet, sized to fit nicely between Chevrolet and Chevy II (and between parking meters, with five whole feet left over).

Then, too, there's the sporty 15-foot Corvair, so right for so many people (you girls, in particular) that we've never touched an inch of it. And finally, Corvette—still 14½ feet and still too much for any true sports-car lover to say no to.

The long and short of it is, you don't have to go to any length to find exactly the kind of car you want. Just see the five different lines of cars at your Chevrolet dealer's.

IVCF Will Travel To Lauderdale

INDIA DURRANCE
Sole Feature Writer

On Easter just a week away, the city of Fort Lauderdale is beginning to prepare itself for the annual influx of college students. Each Spring 30,000 students from all over the nation come to the city for several days of pre-life pleasure.

For the third time this year there will be a group of FSU student in the Lauderdale Inter-Varsity Fellowship. IVCF members will be there to communicate with, train students in evangelism, and to conduct an evangelistic institute in perhaps one of the religious spots in the country. The year's team put up two large displays on the beach and gave away near them every day. Members fanned out over the beach to help individual students. Highest of last year's mission was a debate on the beach's twist platform between a Christian and a Humanist.

Burton R. Harding, Regional IVCF Director, was on the FSU campus this week. He led several dorm discussions and presented a public lecture. Harding is now in Fort Lauderdale preparing for the student influx.

IVCF is the collegiate branch of International Fellowship of Evangelical Society. The purpose of IVCF is not for the formation of one united denomination, but for the fellowship of all Christians.

IVCF began in England in 1877 and has grown to include chapters in 27 countries. There are chapters in most leading colleges, universities, medical schools, and schools of nursing in the United States.

There are seven IVCF chapters in Florida and another is now being formed. In February members travelled to Covington, Ga., for the Southeast-wide Theological Conference. Last weekend a group of members attended the Florida Spring Conference in Silver Springs.

Dr. John Cummer, Director of Counseling, is faculty sponsor for the FSU chapter. Cummer became active in IVCF at Indiana University when he was doing graduate work. He feels that the high quality literature is the phase of IVCF which has meant most to him.

Officers of FSU's IVCF chapter are Dave Reudlehuber, president; Eric Miller, vice; Polly Parker, secretary-treasurer; and Teri Keyes, missions chairman.

All students are invited to attend IVCF meetings Tuesday evenings at 7 p.m. in Room 226, Music Bldg. Lectures and discussions concerning problems which are real and immediate to college students at FSU are featured weekly.

COLLEGIANS SPRING CONCERT

..... Alumni Weekend Coming

at 10:30 a.m. will be Dr. David Green, visiting University of Chicago professor of accounting, and James Montgomery, new professor of home and family life at Florida State.

Green's lecture, scheduled for Weichert Lounge on the second floor of the Business Building, is geared with business management foresight and university courtesy designed to instill this quality in its graduates.

Slide illustration will be a technical used by Dr. Montgomery in the Sandels Hall Faculty Lounge, where he will speak on the influence of housing. "From Caves to Towers," on the American way of life.

Each of the two faculty members will be introduced by his dean—Charles A. Roverta, School of Business; and Mrs. Hortense M. Glenn, School of Home Economics.

Dr. Green's talk will introduce alumni to "The Doctrine of Perverse Discovery and Its Effect on Business." This theory involves the paradoxes of industrial achievements and the adverse developments which often accompany dynamic advances in technology. Foresight is needed by airports seeking longer runways when vertical flight is being perfected just around the corner, says the accounting professor.

Dr. Montgomery aimed his discussion to interest homemakers and designers alike. His talk concerns the role housing plays in cultural and family developments around the world.

Engineering Science Dean Grover L. Rogers will greet alumni in the school's main office, Room 109 of Building A on the corner of Call and Copeland Street. He said tours would also be conducted at his school at 9 a.m. and 10:30 a.m. Saturday.

Featured will be microscopic and X-ray investigations in the metallurgical laboratory and navigational controls and analog computer experiments.

Classroom exhibits will include illustrations of microwave transmission, gas ionization and structural stress problems in steel and plastics.

Seminole Skin Tigers Sports Weekend

The Seminole sluggers overcame a two run deficit in the bottom of the seventh inning to pull ahead of the Clemson Tigers 6-5, in home action yesterday.

The Tribe basebalers scored two more runs in the ninth stanza to win 8-5.

Clemson opened the game with style, when lead-off hitter Ben Marsella lifted Cliff Ranew's first pitch of the game over the left field fence, 340 feet from home plate.

Ranew got the next two men out on strikes and picked the last man off first base, to end the inning.

The Seminoles were unable to get anything started in the first inning. Jim Reed grounded out to short. Mike Augustine was picked off first after walking, and Bob Wilcox struck out.

Clemson's first batter in the second increased their lead by smothering Ranew's three and twopitch over the fence in left center. Ranew got the next three men out.

Ken Suarez and Larry Johnson evened the score in the bottom of the third. Suarez led off with a single and went to second on Johnson's hit to left. Both men advanced as Tommy Chapman walked Rountree.

Suarez scored on a fielders choice hit by Gerry Chmielewski. Johnson beat the throw-in from second to score.

The Tribe pulled ahead in the third when Reed reached second on a two base error by the short-stop, and then went over the ground-outs by Augustine and Wilcox.

The lead shifted back to the Tigers in the fourth. Ron Moore hit safely to right to open the inning. Mike Bonak got on by a walk. Both got home on a single by Tommy Pack. Ranew struck out Buddy Nixon, and George Rountree made an assisted double play of Chapman's line drive to stop the Clemson attack. The Tigers made their last run in the sixth on a base hit by George Sutton, a walk, and a beseht by Stan Ayers, that scored Sutton.

Chmielewski, Bill Bearse, and Reed made the three big runs in the seventh. Chmielewski started the rally hitting safely to left, and going to second as Bearse walked. Chapman loaded the bases by walking Reed. He then walked Augustine, sending Chmielewski home. Wilcox singled in Bearse and Reed got in on a wild pitch by the reliever Dale Smith. Reed and Mike Haney, who replaced Rountree in the seventh, scored the Tribe's last two runs in the eighth.

Reed got on by a fielders choice, stole second and scored on a single by Augustine. Haney was on safely and came in on a single by reliever Creely.

The win went to Ranew who struck out nine men in seven innings. The losing pitcher was Chapman.

UT Improves Pitching

The University of Tennessee brings an improved team to FSU today when they play the Seminole sluggers at 3:30 p.m. on the Tribe diamond. The Volunteer's record of 8-10 in the Southeastern Conference last year was due mainly to a collapse in the pitching staff.

Tennessee had one good pitcher in Glenn Ford, but coach Bill Wright could not come up with another consistent starter to share the pitching duties with Ford.

This year Wright feels that he has a solid corps of moundmen on hand, starting with Ford. Two junior college graduates and two men from the freshman squad should provide the Orange with the depth they need. Bob Applegate and Hal Lefew are the junior college stoplows; and Jim Axon and Bill Ferrell are the sophomore righthanders. Reliever Roy Gaylor, with a 1.5 ERA, will also be back.

While the Vols gained solidarity in their pitching staff this year, they lost three top hitters; George Smithford, Bobby Sammons, and Steve Longley. Wright believes the deficiency in brute force could be offset by an upswing in batting averages.

The probable top-of-the-order will be Jack Erwin, who hit .345 last year, Dewey Thompson, a .245 slugger, and Ken Hudgens, who hit .308. Defensively, the Orange will have Thompson at first, Hudgens at second, 6'3" Darryl Lowe at short, Tommy Fritchard at third, and John Hodgson behind the plate.

With better material a certain Wright should be able to give his opponents plenty of trouble.

Trog's Prince an FSU Production

By JEFF JOHNSON

Because of the late publication of this review, I was able to see both the Wednesday night opening and the Saturday night performance of James Forsyth's "Trog." Between the first to the fifth performance there was not a comparison. The Saturday night performance showed that the small changes made in the dialogue had the effect of strengthening the play.

"Trog" Forsyth compares and contrasts the views of Phillip Lister, a half-shocked British Lieutenant, and Trog, a naive but sensitive creature, molded into a physical gargoyle by elephantiasis, who Phillip is in a bombed-out cellar in the middle of a contemporary Hell. Phillip (Al Smelko), man is hissing toward destruction, driven by greed. Trog (Frank Daly), although living in a world of fairy tales, is through the simplicity of his view, to see into man's heart without being distracted by the external shell of civilization.

In the concluding scene of Act One, Phillip complains to Trog that in the modern world every man is part dragon, able to destroy himself. Trog agrees that Phillip has his dragons mixed. From this point in the play, Phillip loses his position as teacher and begins learning from Trog. Trog is not man who is destroying himself, but rather that elaborate, hard enamel mask that man has designed to protect him from others. It is crushing the humanity from him and turning him into a monster. The climax occurs when Trog is also present with a mask to protect from others. It is an ugly, mechanical travesty of a human face, and when he sees it, recoils in horror.

When he has looked at what men will think he is, and has found it far more grotesque than his own misshapen head, Trog's sacrificial gift in the closing section of the play makes Phillip and Selene realize that all man beings, however deformed or strange, are all equal and deserving love, and by denying them this love we turn ourselves into monsters. It is in the scenes between Phillip and Trog that the play best held together. Al Smelko's rapid emotional delivery complimented the song-like vocal characterization of Frank Daly. In these sections of the play, Forsyth not only knew what he wanted to say, but he also was able to convey it to his audience.

In the opening scene of the play and the comic relief scenes never reached the height. The opening scene was dull with much needless exposition, especially in Selene's case, while the comic scenes seemed rather contrived and strained.

In the Wednesday night performance I found these only a distraction; however, in the Saturday night performance they became, to the less critical audience, misleading, and nearly turned the play into a situation comedy.

One of the weak one who must bear the sword" and tear off the many men masks of man to let him see himself, is the soul of Forsyth's play, and when he is not on stage it becomes a lifeless work; luckily he is most of the time. It is hoped that Forsyth will focus his play and bring it into proper perspective, because his main plot is simple, unique, and active, and his message needed.

The audience should leave remembering that they too must look beyond the brightly colored or deformed mask that hides man from himself and others, nor the laugh lines of Curand and Micklebright. While the merit of "Trog" might be debated, the production cannot. It is excellent and by far the best of the season. The many scene changes were done quickly and efficiently, and never broke the audience's concentration. The cast, with the exception of Kent Wood, was expert and did the most out of the material given them.

The lighting deserves special mention because of its utmost effectiveness. The reddish glow of the bombed town and on the battlements of castle provided a hellish note to the waste land of modern life; the spot on the mask and sword, the reason for the useless destruction. The Darby did an excellent job with the passive character of Selene, and due to its original dark quality, failed to hold the audience's attention, as well as Phillip and Trog.

The overall impression of the production was one of unity and expertise. The play, could be able to do what Trog, its hero, could not do—bring a prince.

Dr. Ezda Deviney

Dr. Ezda Deviney, professor emerita of zoology at FSU and teacher for 33 years, died last Thursday in Come Memorial Hospital, Greensboro, N.C., following a heart attack. Miss Deviney for several years headed the Zoology Dept. at FSU. On the eve of her retirement in June, 1957, she was given the Southside award for teaching—the annual Meritorious Award—by the association of Southeastern Biologists.

A native of Julian, a small community near Greensboro, N.C., she completed her undergraduate work at Woman's College, University of North Carolina, in 1919 and started as an instructor in the same school. In 1921-23 she held a similar instructorship at Salem College. After receiving the Master of Science Degree at the University of Chicago she came to Tallahassee. Later study at the University of North Carolina earned her a Ph.D.

At Florida State College for Women and at FSU she taught practically every zoology course offered. She served as president of the Alpha of Florida chapter of Phi Beta Kappa which was organized in 1935 and was first president of the FSU Sigma Xi Club, an association of scientists. Dr. Deviney's other memberships included the American Association for Advancement of Science, the Florida Academy of Science, the Association of Southeastern Biologists, and the National Association of Biology Teachers.

Welcome Points Up U.S. Ineptness

Why did Charles de Gaulle receive such a tremendous welcome in Mexico, and why did he receive honors accorded to no other head of state? I would submit the following as at least part of the reason. He has taken an independent and somewhat anti-American position of any country that takes this stand. This leads to the contention of this column which is my explanation of Latin America's position on Cuba.

Let's return to Mexico after the period of their revolution in 1910. Part of the philosophy of the revolution was written into the constitution which states that private property is subservient to public welfare. This was brought about because a large portion of the national was owned by foreign interests (mostly the United States).

The separation of church and state was another issue in the revolutionary philosophy. Mainly because of these two views and subsequent action on them, the Mexicans and their nation's revolution were labeled by many interests in the United States (among them oil companies and the Catholic church) as godless, socialists, communist, and bloody butchers.

Of course this set well with the Mexicans who among other things weren't even given credit for their own revolution. To this add the times that the colossus to the north interfered with their internal and external affairs plus an occasional occasion of invasion. This formula could be multiplied by the number of countries in Latin America to reach the final result which is, on the whole, anti-Yankee attitude.

We have unsuccessfully tried to multiply the number of Latin American countries into nations against Castro. I feel that we have been unsuccessful for the reason de Gaulle was so successful in Mexico. Cuba has taken an independent, anti-U.S. attitude and has gotten away with it. We have on the same labels to Castro's solution (perhaps more just than ours) as we have given to the Latin American revolutionaries. We haven't proved justified.

I feel that we can only solidify in America in Castro's favor by being pressure. When we do this, a definite danger in Castro's revolution has done, then the Organization of American States cannot be multiplicatively to solve the problem in the meantime everything that is a truly nationalist revolt, or revolution in Latin America will probably flatter Castro and bitter the nationalist by giving "Castro's agents" full credit.

Johnson's action of refusing water in Guantanamo rather than sending in the Marines was a definite step in the right direction. It made Castro look foolish without very high cost of Latin American resentment which direct military action would have cost. If we had on the proper occasion used more of such tact in Latin America in the past, the grand Castro would not have received special treatment. He would not be as important today.

Hopes Press Will Dispel Ignorance

To the Editor: I hope that in this year's Presidential campaign the newspapers, the radio, the college and the university, will do their level best to help dispel some of the ignorance that prevails as to political parties.

There are many voters and others who have never heard of the Socialist Labor Party, a party that has participated in every Presidential election since 1892 and is one of the oldest parties in the whole country.

The papers should see to it that voters know the names and views of all the candidates that will be on the ballot, including those of the Socialist Labor Party.

The Socialist Labor Party will be at the National Convention in New York City at the Henry Hudson Hotel, W-2-4 and will nominate a national ticket for the Presidential campaign. The Socialist Labor Party must get on the ballot in many states as a prerequisite.

Readers are reminded that the official organ of the Socialist Labor Party, the "Weekly People's Voice," is available in the Florida State University Library. A free copy can be obtained by writing to the Weekly People's Voice, 611th Street, New York, N.Y. 10036.

Flambeau Forum Being Informed Is Fun

To the Editor:

Thanks to the Flambeau and its presentation of a democratic candidates and their platforms, FSU students have an extraordinary chance to become informed.

It is unfortunate that everyone is not taking advantage of this information. University students hold a unique position in society; we will have to answer the problems that the past generation ignored or could not overcome.

With this position, there is also a responsibility to show interest and to become informed. Thomas Jefferson realized the impossibility of the government of an informed citizenry without informed citizens, and yet many ignore his insight. Ignorance is not bliss, but a humiliating weakness.

The Flambeau is doing its part; all we have to do is read. Try it, being an informed literate is fun. Anyway the A.A. (Apathetic Anonymous) doesn't really care whether you're a member or not.

Offers Demonstration Theory

To the Editor:

My evidence, based on an actual head count, shows that 95 per cent of the individuals participating in protest demonstrations are not residents of the town they demonstrate in. Approximately 85 per cent of the demonstrators are connected with some college and about 75 per cent are 20 years of age or less.

This proves that the bulk of the demonstrators are youthful members of a guest group or transient group, i.e., a college campus.

A military base also a transient group but members are more strictly forbidden to participate in protest demonstrations. Youthful members of transient groups tend to develop a negative attitude syndrome toward the host community, i.e., the town adjacent to the base or campus. The recruit or freshman arrives with no ill feelings toward the host town. But soon homesickness and listening to "older" even more homesick colleagues parrot clichés like, "It's a dead town, the streets get folded up at nine o'clock" or "The local newspaper is only fit for wrapping fish or lining drawers," or "The local police morons couldn't catch a cold," etc. ad infinitum, finally get to him.

He winds up with bad images of the local city administration, police, and fire departments, mass media and public accommodations.

The transient is also convinced that the town would fold up without his group's installation in it. He believes he is not being treated by the town in a manner commensurate with his worth.

If it is valid that youthful members of transient groups do indeed harbor feelings of animosity toward their host communities, then an expert agitator would have an easier time exploiting and directing these hostilities into overt demonstrations against the towns. It also follows that host communities will bear the brunt of protest demonstrations. Of course, not all members of transient groups participate, even though most of the young ones may disagree.

There is something else: The demonstrators have fallen for the articulate propagandist's life that Americanized them. Some of the worse for not having studied demonstrations before.

They cite active student demonstrations and riots that have been going on for decades in other countries over governmental affairs. It is then reasoned that intelligent students of advanced cultures should participate even extra-legally, in the business of civic affairs.

But they neglect to compare the stability of the United States with the Latin American and certain European countries where these things take place. We may be better off letting experienced only, rather than highly emotional and volatile hands, be on the helm of state.

It is never cited that violent revolutions, coup d'états, or political assassinations usually immediately follow (within a year) protest demonstrations.

Therefore my theory takes the form of five interrelated hypotheses:

I. If one is a youthful member of a transient group, then he tends to develop negative stereotypes about his host community.

II. If one is a youthful member of a transient group, then he can be developed into a protest demonstrator in protest demonstrations in his host community.

III. If a community is a host community, then there will be more incidence of protest demonstrations than in non-host communities.

IV. If a young person is convinced that an action or belief is either intelligent, sophisticated, or futuristic, then he will tend to commence acting or believing in that fashion.

V. The more that students participate in protest demonstrations, the less stable is their nation's government.

Paul W. Snyder

For Governor

John E. Mathews

I have long been an advocate of the state's responsibility in all areas of government which cannot be handled on a local level.

It is my firm belief that the Governor of Florida has an affirmative responsibility, on a day by day basis, to provide leadership, and to assume the responsibility of solving the problems which are facing Florida at the present time.

Only by strong, effective action at the executive level, can a proper attitude or climate be established for proper action by the Legislature and other governmental bodies.

I will present a 25 plank platform to the voters for approval, but I am submitting herein my ideas with regard to education. Education is a major field of responsibility for local and state government.

The primary objective of government is to assure that every child in Florida should have an opportunity to receive an education that will fit him to assume his role in society.

The responsibility of the State extends into the fields of public education, junior colleges, training and technical schools, institutions of higher learning and advanced graduate programs. It is extremely important that we have public officials in positions of responsibility who are willing to provide the funds to finance quality education, even though voting such funds may produce unpopular results. All too often public officials talk about quality education, yet they are not willing to stand up when the time comes to provide adequate funds which are so directly needed.

Florida has a great deal of catching up to do if we are to remain competitive in the space age, not only in the field of higher education, but with reference to the entire economic condition of the state.

The capital outlay bond amendment which I authorized and sponsored in the Legislature and which was adopted by the people in November of 1963 was required to make up for inaction and lack of meeting responsibility in the past. Had the State, on a yearly basis, been meeting known anticipatory needs, then the bond issue would not have been necessary. It is imperative that we do not fall into their error again.

With expansion of our higher educational system, however, it is essential that some unity of approach be achieved, and I feel that the Board of Regents constitutional amendment which I also sponsored and which will be voted on by the people in November of 1964, will go a long way toward bringing about some stability.

I will also continue to work toward passage of a bill which would free university from the crushing red tape procedures required in going through the budget commission in making faculty appointments, and other matters of this nature.

As chairman of the Committee on Higher Education, which is the highest committee in importance in this field, I have certainly exerted every effort to see that top priority be given in the field of Higher Education. As Governor of a great and growing State I will continue to devote my efforts to a progressive and improved University System.

Golden' Arm And Toe Defeat Garnet Arm And Leg

ED PRITCHETT

Saturday's Garnet and Gold game resulted in a defensive struggle as neither team was able to consistently move the ball on the ground. A fourth quarter field goal off the toe of Les Murdock was the deciding factor as Steve Tensi's Gold team outscored Ed Pritchett's Garnet squad 10-7.

Tensi fired a perfect 40 yard touchdown pass to end Don Floyd the first time the Garnets gained possession of the football. Murdock booted over the extra point to put the Golds on the scoreboard 7-0.

Not to be outdone Ed Pritchett connected to end John Wachtel who sprinted into the end zone for an 86 yard touchdown. Brad Gasque split the uprights for the extra point which tied the game up at 7-7.

The Golds penetrated into Garnet territory several times but stymied when they got within scoring distance. The Garnets posed one other threat as they drove to the Gold 39.

Fullback Lee Narramore, up from last year's freshman team, practically stole the show away from Tensi and Pritchett. Performing for the Gold team, Narramore was the leading ground gainer with 79 yards in 22 carries.

Fullback Howard Ehler and Pritchett did most of the running for the Garnet team. Ehler ran 12 times for 48 yards while Pritchett netted 40 yards on nine carries.

In the passing department Tensi attempted 14, completing eight with one interception. Pritchett attempted 17 for eight completions.

To West was presented the award for the most improved lineman and defensive specialist Jim Massey was presented the award for the most improved back.

Seminoles Slash Clemson Three For Two

Tigers Defeat

Seminoles Friday

Clemson avenged its Thursday 8-6 loss to the Seminoles by trouncing the Tribe sluggers 8-5, Friday at Seminole Field.

Coach Fred Hatfield used four pitchers to take the loss. Starter, Bob Kull, was credited with the defeat. Greg Casey went the full nine innings to score the win for the Tigers. The first was an uneventful inning except for the first of four double plays pulled off by the Seminoles. Clemson started their scoring in the second. After Mike Bohonak had grounded out to the second baseman, Buddy Nixon slashed a double to deep left field. Tom Pack followed with another double that scored Nixon.

Kull, the Tribe pitcher, walked the next batter, Howard Sharman, and struck out Stan Ayers. Casey then helped his own win by doubling to left, scoring Pack. Sharman and Casey came in on a single by Marsella.

The Tribe waited until the third to score its first run. Mike Augustine walked, went to second when Gary Nichols was hit by a pitch and was driven in by Bob Wilcox. The Seminoles' made the score board again in the fifth, courtesy of Gary Nichols. Nichols boomed his first home run of the year over the right field score board to put the score at 4-2.

Augustine evened the contest in the sixth when he drove in Gerry Chlewicki and pinch hitter Leon Chahub with a single over second base. The Tigers pulled ahead to stay in the top of the seventh. Ayers started the rally with a bunt down the first baseline. He moved to second on a fielder's choice hit by Casey. Ben Marsella reached first safely on an error by third baseman Chlewicki. Ron Moore cleared the bases with a home run over the left field fence. His three runs brought the score to 7-4 in the seventh.

Both teams scored one more run in the eighth inning. Nixon tallied for the Tigers on a single, a bunt by Tom Pack and an error by the catcher, Ken Suarez.

Johnson ran up the final score for the Tribe on a home run over the fence in left field. This was FSU's second loss of the season.

GARY NICHOLS

...smashes a three run homer over the right field fence in baseball action against the Clemson Tigers at Seminole Field Saturday.

Walk Home

Volunteers Fall To Tribe

Marty Howell recorded his second win against no losses when the Seminoles routed the Tennessee Volunteers 15-7, Saturday afternoon.

The Tribe literally walked over the Vols, scoring 12 runs on six hits and 11 base on balls in the first three innings.

Tennessee started the scoring action in the first inning as lead-off man Ken Huggins belted a triple to right field. He scored easily on Jack Ervin's ground out to the second baseman Jim Reed.

Reed, Mike Augustine, Monty McBryde, and Gary Nichols scored the first four Seminoles runs on three walks, a "quasi inside - the park-home-run" by McBryde (a single and a three base error by the left fielder and a single by Howell).

Fat Bowler scored the Vols' second run, in the second inning. He walked, went to third on a single by Darryl Lowe, and made it home on a fielder's choice hit by the catcher John Hodgson.

FSU ran up eight more runs in the second and third innings. They came on a double by McBryde, a single by Suarez, a single by Augustine, a single by Howell, and five walks.

Tennessee tallied one run in the third, two in the fifth, and two in the seventh, to round out their scoring for the afternoon.

The Tribe drove in one run in the fifth and two in the sixth to finish the action in Saturday's contest. Howell gave up seven runs on ten hits, two walks, and struck out 12 to become the winning pitcher. James Axon took the loss.

The Seminoles are now four and two on the year.

Tribe Bounces Back Sat.

The Seminole baseball team unlimbered their big gun for the first time Saturday morning, defeating the Clemson Tigers 12-6 in the first game of a double header. Clemson opened the scoring in the first inning. Ben Marsella scoring on a two base error by Mike McBryde. A double play, the fifth in two games, starter Tom Davis out of trouble.

Clemson starter Jack Edwards was not so lucky. He walked three men, gave up three hits and unworked three wild pitches before getting a man out, as the Seminoles scored five runs in a wild first inning. The big blow was a three run homer by Gary Nichols. Clemson reliever Dale Smith fared no better in the second inning as the Tribe scored four runs on shortstop Larry Johnson's grand slam home run.

Davis was coasting along with a three-hitter till he tied in the fifth inning. A single by pitcher Smith, a double by Marsella, a sacrifice fly by Mike Bohonak, and three walks led to four Clemson runs.

Reliever Ken Creedy answered the call from the bullpen, and came on to put out the next thirteen Clemson batters in a row.

The Seminoles scored single runs in the sixth, seventh, and eighth innings to close out the scoring.

In the sixth, Smith got wild, walked four men, with Jimmie scoring on the final walk.

In the seventh, Paul Dirks singled to second on a sacrifice. Creedy, and scored on a single. Mike Augustine.

In the eighth inning, a single by Nichols and a double by Johnsons out the Seminole scoring.

Big men in the hitting department were Nichols with two hits, Jones with a homer and a double, and Augustine with three hits. Clemson Ben Marsella had two hits to lead the Tigers.

Dr. J. Paul Reynolds Resigns; Accepts Post At Wilmington

Dr. J. Paul Reynolds, the dean of FSU's College of Arts and Sciences for the past six years, has been named as dean of the faculty at Wilmington College, Wilmington, N.C.

Reynolds also is professor of zoology here and has been a member of the faculty for 15 years. He will assume his new duties at the coeducational liberal arts college after May 1.

Reynolds is a native of High Falls, N.Y., and began his teaching career as an instructor in biology at Guilford College in his native state in 1925. After two years there he taught for one year at University of North Carolina and then from 1934 to 1949 at Birmingham Southern College, where he was professor of biology. He joined the Zoology Dept. at FSU in 1949 and in 1951 he became assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. He was appointed dean in February, 1958.

Trustees of the North Carolina college are expected to act on Reynolds' nomination for the position today. President Gordon W. Blackwell, on receiving Reynolds' resignation from his FSU post, said: "Dean Reynolds has been one of the real educational statesmen at Florida State. Building upon the work of his predecessors, Deans W.G. Dodd, Edwin Walker and Charles Davis, he has brought the arts and sciences program here to new levels of achievement and distinction. We shall miss him greatly and wish him well as he transfers his educational leadership to Wilmington College."

Reynolds is a graduate of Guilford College, where he majored in biology, German and music, receiving a BS degree in 1928. He received his master's degree in zoology from University of North Carolina in 1929 and his Ph. D. degree in zoology from Johns Hopkins University in 1934.

His published research has been principally in the fields of cytology and genetics. Under grants from the General Education Board, he has done research at the University of Pennsylvania.

The Dean is a member of Sigma Xi scientific organization, and Phi Beta Kappa, a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and a member of several other professional organizations.

Last September he was asked by a Faculty Committee to develop a Faculty Handbook suitable for use by the College. Falck's manual uses 107 pages to convey the College's organization, resources, facilities, services, educational policies, procedures, duties, absences, expenses, committees and all other information necessary for the administration and functioning of a small sized private college.

Alumni Weekend Offers View Of Trimester Plan

Visitors to FSU's first annual Alumni Weekend taste-tested the trimester Saturday and previewed the Fall football prospects in a day-long program called "Know Your University."

Alumni received an A-plus from FSU's Alumni Affairs Director Thomas A. Watts, for their response to a series of open-house activities last Saturday morning. Alumni divided themselves by graduation categories and went back to their college classrooms and lecture halls for an on-the-spot report of their school's progress.

Alumni of the School of Education heard reports from four faculty members, one of whom outlined FSU's roles in helping to train part of Florida's elementary and secondary school teachers in the "new" mathematics required by modern texts. The enormity of the task sponsored by National Science Foundation Grants was outlined by Dr. Eugene Nichols. He also discussed FSU's pioneering summer programs for promising high school students and in-service training classes being held homestate for high school teachers.

Arts and Sciences alumni were treated to a reception and art exhibit emphasizing the University's current height of activity in the arts, and introducing alumni to Broadway Frank Daly and British author James Forsyth, whose play "Trog," had its American premiere on the campus this weekend.

Another educator described FSU's project in Turkey, where a national high school for gifted students is being established in cooperation with the Turkish Ministry and the Ford Foundation.

NDEA Offers More Aid

The University Financial Aid Committee has voted to accept additional applications for NDEA financial aid for students during the third trimester.

Dr. James Carr, Director of Financial Aid, said that students have repaid loans faster than was expected and so there is approximately $20,000 available for loans.

Students who already have NDEA loans, or new applicants, should apply immediately at the Financial Aid Office in Longmire. They should have no less than a 2.5 average and be in the "priority group."

Carr explained that the National Defense Education Act which set the maximum previously at $250,000 for each university for loans has been amended to a maximum of $800,000. Next year FSU receives $4,770,000 for NDEA loan purposes.

To be considered "priority" the Act states that "...special consideration will be given to (a) students with superior academic background that express a desire to teach in elementary or secondary schools and (b) students whose academic background indicates a superior capacity or preparation in science, mathematics, engineering, or a modern foreign language."

Dr. Ollyr Speaks On Healthy American

"Three measures of a healthy nation," according to Dr. Robert Ollyr of Life Education, are "the life expectancy, the death rate, and the ratio of medical facilities to total population."

"The Healthy American" was the topic of Ollyr's lecture Wednesday night for the Program in American Studies.

Ollyr brought out two idiosyncrasies in the United States high life expectancy: the conquest of many diseases causing deaths to infants and the longer life span of women over men.

In colonial American the female outlived the male by only two years. Today the female will live 5.7 years longer than the male.

Some of the reasons for the longer life expectancy of the female are that she gets more and better medical care, the male has a higher accidental death rate, and the male has a higher suicide rate.

Depository Analysis Spots Problems

An analysis of the Student Depository for budgeting purposes for next year has brought to light a few problems needing adjustment.

As you remember this last summer, Student Government determined by a poll that the students still want a Depository for student deposits even though it would have to be financed by Student Government as of this fiscal year.

The original intent was to put the Student Depository on a break-even basis because of the high cost of employees and machines.

A break-down of the nominal service charge indicates that only about 19 per cent of the students are using the services of the Depository. This volume is far too low to maintain the depository even at current levels of operation.

To make matters worse, the Depository has been subject to a rash of theft of several plastic signs and desk pens—no item costing less than eight dollars.

The general feeling of many administrators is to do away with the Depository, unless it can be brought to a break-even basis.

The Depository has been the subject of student criticism such as lines too long, not open on Saturdays, not being able to cash checks off campus, and not enough publicity or service.

Now that students finance the Student Depository, they have a voice in the policy of its operation. The following is an explanation of each problem.

The staff will be increased to three full-time employees and one part time student assistant. This increase in personnel should tend to shorten the lines considerably, much to the pleasure of the student.

The Depository cannot open on Saturday at present levels of income.

A suggestion is by a cashiers check at the depository for 15 cents which can be easily cashed anywhere. This would be even easier than trying to cash a bank check on the weekend.

The idea of cashing checks at the off-campus restaurants, bookstores and the shops in the mall is a suggestion in an excellent suggestion but violation of the Florida Banking Code according to Mr. Fortin, comptroller. It is under the depository that the Depository cannot become a bank.

The Depository is controlled by a State organization—FSU. The advertisement of the Depository is under the direction of the Student Body Presidential committee, which advertises regularly in the Flambeau.

Avis Morenberg, cashier of the Depository, plans to have a sign made advertising the services of the bank as its depository function. Its check cashing service, the cashiers check service and the writing of checks to pay tuition.

In summary, student funds short this year with our obligation to the new student union and the anticipated absorption of the costs of the Student bus system. If the student wants to have their depository on oblivion, they will have to support the operation by a large increase in the number of users or else a larger service charge.

For Governor

Charles R. Holley

Charles R. Holley of St. Petersburg is a candidate for nomination by the Republican Party for Governor of the State of Florida. A member of the Florida House of Representatives since 1960, Holley was elected minority leader in 1962, a position he continues to hold. He has served on the Personnel and Retirement Interim Committee which made a complete review of all personnel retirement systems of all governmental agencies of the state and is now serving on the Interim Committee of the Legislature to study annual sessions.

Holley was born in Jacksonville, Florida, on November 11, 1924, and was educated in the public schools of Ocala, Florida, and received his higher education at Duke University and the University of Florida. He holds A.B. and L.L.B. degrees.

He is married to Natalie Blanche Smith, formerly of Birmingham, Alabama, and has three children. Mrs. Holley is expecting another at the present time. Holley is a practicing attorney in St. Petersburg, a member of the firm of Holley and Osborne. He served three and one-half years as Trust Officer at Union Trust Company in St. Petersburg.

After completing his college education, Holley immediately became involved in politics at the Precinct Committeeman and in sundry other capacities and in May, 1962, he opposed the incumbent State Committeeman of 8 years, and former County Chairman, of Pinellas County, and was elected to the Republican State Executive Committee. In 1962, at the Republican State Executive Committee meeting, Holley was unsuccessful in his bid to be elected Republican State Chairman.

After his election as Minority Leader, Holley traveled over a large part of the State seeking out candidates to run on the Republican ticket for the Legislature in 1962.

Charles R. Holley has campaigned actively for the establishment of the Republican Party in Florida. In 1960 he was one of the Legislative candidates to develop the first statewide platforms of any party for the State of Florida.

I am a candidate for Governor because I believe the people of Florida deserve a choice. They deserve a choice between the direction in which the candidates of the Democratic party are headed, or, on the other hand, holding firm to fundamental principles which have given our people maximum freedom and made us a great people, a great State and a great country.

Socialism is not our way. A system depending on socialism will automatically collapse because it ignores the fundamental nature of man. All major religions have taught us that man is neither perfect nor perfectible. Socialism assumes man is perfect. A republican form of government based on capitalism recognizes the realities of life. It recognizes and utilizes individual rights and responsibilities. Its fundamental concept is that Government is created by individuals for the sole purpose of better enabling individuals to exercise their natural rights.

I offer to the people of Florida a choice between freedom and socialism. The candidates of the Democratic party are offering more socialism. They propose more government, more government and more government by personal deal and for personal benefit.

The Democratic nominee will be so bound by the establishment he will be unable, even if he would, to do anything about major problems which have been recognized by most people for many years.

A few of these are: proper apportionment of the legislature; preventing the levy of a sales tax on groceries by judicious exercise of the veto power; a road building program without scandal; attention to the over six hundred million dollar deficit in our State pension system; bringing new industry into the State by actually having the government structure attractive to new industry; elimination of the pernicious intangibles tax; provision for annual sessions of the Legislature; elimination of overlaps and duplications in State agencies; a posture reflecting the constitutional reservation to Florida of rights superior to those of the Federal Government.

I firmly believe our people are quietly angry about the continuous nibbling away at their rights and property. I believe they are seeking a Governor who is a conservative. I intend to provide them the choice they are looking for so that they will not have to go fishing and their right to vote will have meaning.

If I am not sufficient we have the best school system possible; we must be sure our children are taught the American way and to know right from wrong. It is not sufficient our Governor be a leader; the direction in which He leads is of equal importance.

FLAMBEAU FORUM

Leftists Aren't Liberals

Ever since musty Mr. Muskie and his musty money crew passed through our town, our leftists have been in a fanatical rage. If it had been up to me, I'd let him speak whenever he wanted just as I'd call Cassius Clay Muhammad Ali if that's what he wants.

But what I'd like to point out is that our leftists aren't liberals, only bigots. They have far too great a capacity for hate to be liberals. They are disgusted with someone without becoming disagreeable. If they lose an argument they come up with the same sour grapes they accuse the other side of squeezing. If they were in charge of the power structure they would mete out much harsher punishments to those holding different views. In their self-satisfied folly they imagine their way to be the only true way and will march all bias to the top.

However, they have made good use of the liberal guise; and have convinced some that to be against them is to be against progress. They have accused a great many of our liberal communists, thereby seeking sympathy.

Thus they create the underdog facade of their being picked on by the cruel meanies. The truth is, nobody is calling them communists. In fact, the communists wouldn't have our radicals. Besides, neither the communist countries nor the communist parties are very liberal. Only England and America have any real freedom of expression.

Our leftists are attempting to seduce their neophytes into joining them in their street demonstrations. They use a child-like dare: "Do it to us, we dare you." The liberal is not a liberal because he is not a liberal. He doesn't have to prove himself. His very existence does it for him. All a demonstrator proves is that he is an obese militant. The demonstrators and the demonstrators, not satisfied with the effectiveness of legal picketing, are considering other forms of harassment, even extortion. Now the demonstrators, not satisfied with the effectiveness of legal picketing, or should I say pseudo-liberal

Now for the pacifist. If Muskie, his followers and SA's were sincerely interested in doing something about world peace, as well as improving living conditions at home and abroad, they might consider the work of the Kennedy's Peace Corps. Those marching have the time to spend and those sedentary who are mongering fear could better spend it. I ask you, who is doing more for the world? Of course, my logic is immediately suspect as I am one of those who believe that a person can be for integration and against desegregation and for world peace while being opposed to unilateral disarmament. I am also one of those naive rarities who believe that an individual can be completely liberal (and even most intelligent too) without having to groam and dress like a freak.

It seems that all the real liberals have joined the Peace Corps. Paul W. Snyder

Inspired By Trimester

To the Editor:

Trimester

My brain is numb; my eyes are lead.

My senses screaming stop

If I could do what I wanted to

I'd flat out kerplow

It's study this and study that

You have two tests next week

I'm writing this and writing that

For knowledge that you seek

If this thing doesn't end pretty soon

I'll blow my stupid top

I'll have to wait till the end of June

For I can even stop

So out of the rack and back to work

Let's go from there my boy

It's a gruelling job I will admit

But think of it all with joy

Think of the work that you can do

When you've earned that nice degree

Aren't you glad you did it now

Frame it for all to see

Your parents ask is it serious, doc?

How long will be have to stay?

He's been gone four years you know

How did it happen this way?

You'll have to keep him on these pills

For quite some time, Mrs. Lester

Lauderdale Is Defended

To the Editor:

This letter is written in reference to a statement made in the article "L.U.C.F. Will Travel To Lauderdale" in Friday, March 20 edition of the "Florida Flambeau".

Reference is made to Lauderdale as "perhaps one of the least religious spots in the country". I have lived in Ft. Lauderdale for many years and have seen many different churches in addition to my own. Most of the Protestant churches have two morning services to accommodate the numbers that wish to attend. In many churches both services are crowded and in most of the churches at the second service the auditorium is filled in summer as well as during the tourist season.

Ft. Lauderdale is no more or less religious than many other spots in the country. General statements based upon opinion such as the one which this letter refers, reduces the reliability of readers of a newspaper to place on its reporting. In addition, such statements lead to serious misconceptions.

Anthropology To Be Subject Of Lecture

well known anthropologist from the University of Michigan, Dr. Leslie A. White, will speak in the Education Lecture Hall at 8 p.m. tonight on the subject "Anthropology and the Science of Culture."

The address by White, who is president of the American Anthropological Association, is free and open to the public, according to Dr. Hale Smith, chairman of the Department of Anthropology and Archaeology. The lecture is in a series of public lectures sponsored by the department.

Well known for his ideas on the evolution of culture, White is author of the book, "The Evolution of Culture," published by McGraw-Hill in 1959 and of "The Science of Culture," published by Farrar, Straus and Giroux in 1960.

He says that "culture advances as the amount of energy harnessed per capita per year increases, or as the efficiency or economy of the means of controlling energy is increased, both." Ancient civilization harnessed the sun's energies in plants by agriculture and husbandry, reaching a cultural plateau during the Bronze Age, he said. A new surge in culture was not seen, he said, until about 1800 A.D. when the energy of fire was harnessed in the steam engine. Now man has a new energy source in nuclear power.

White, who is 64, has been on the faculty of University of Michigan for more than 30 years and also has served as visiting professor at Yale, Chicago, Columbia, Harvard and California.

His anthropological field work has included expeditions to the Pueblo of New Mexico. He is the author of several monographs and numerous articles which have appeared in journals and anthologies.

In 1957 he received the Faculty Award for Distinguished Achievement at the University of Michigan and in 1960 he received the Viking Medal and award for general anthropology from the Wenner-Gren Foundation for Anthropological Research.

Outplays Bulldogs, 5-0

Seminoles Shutout Tech

Cliff Ranew shut out Georgia Tech yesterday, 5-0. Ranew yielded five hits, and two walks as he struck out 13 Bulldogs for the fifth Seminole baseball win of the year.

This was Ranew's second win in as many starts. Ranew started the day by striking out the lead-off man for Tech, Butch Harris. The next two men grounded out and fouled out to the third baseman.

The Seminoles started no better. Jim Reed struck out, Mike Augustine grounded out to the third baseman, and Monty McBryde grounded out to the first baseman.

Ranew retired the side in order in the second inning getting John La-carpa for his second strike out. Gary Nichols was the first man to reach first for the Seminoles, as he was walked by the losing pitcher Frank Hall. Larry Johnson then tied off on the two and nothing count, sending the ball over the left field fence for his third home run of the year.

From the third to the eighth innings, the game was a pitchers' battle. In the eighth the Tribe ran in three more runs off reliever Jim Robinson for the final score, 5-0. Ranew started the eighth inning rally with a single to center. Reed countered with a single to left, his first of the afternoon.

Augustine followed by slapping a high bounce to the second baseman that he bobbled. Ranew scored on a wild pitch by Robinson. Reed and Augustine got in on a single to left by Wilcox.

Ranew struck out two more Bulldogs in the third inning. He got two more in the fourth, one in the fifth and three in the sixth.

One man went down swinging in the seventh, one in the eighth and one in the ninth to end the ball game. Georgia made one significant scoring threat in the fifth inning. Bill Selby hit safely to left field for a single, went to second on a wild pitch, and moved to third on Buckey Beaver's sacrifice bunt to the pitcher.

Ranew made pinch hitter Pete Caldwell look at a third strike to retire the side at the end of the third.

Coach Fred Hatfield said that if the pitching continues to hold up, and if the team plays 500 ball the rest of the tournament, "we've got a good chance for a fine season."

The Tribe plays Georgia Tech again today at 3:30 p.m. on Seminole field, in the second game of the Florida State Invitational Tournament.

FSU Alumni Votes For SEC

A resolution to pursue -- with vigor -- admittance to the Southeastern Conference of intercollegiate football was unanimously passed today by Florida State University's Alumni Association.

Meeting in conjunction with the University's first annual Spring Alumni Weekend, the Association's Board of Directors acted on an official resolution introduced by District VI Director Harry W. Massey of Palm Beach, and seconded by District V Director William S. Byers of Orlando.

The resolution, directed to Florida State University's athletic administrators, read as follows: "The Alumni Association Board of Directors, representing the membership of this Association, at this time considers it advantageous to the University to continue to pursue, with vigor, admittance to the Southeastern Conference."

"It is the feeling of this Board that such admittance would be in the best interests of the University's intercollegiate athletic program, and the public image projected through athletic endeavors. This Board expresses full support of action to gain admittance to Florida State University to the Southeastern Conference."

Board members in attendance at the meeting included Louis E. Fischer of Jacksonville, District II; James R. Crabtree of Pensacola, District III; Peter L. Nimhoff of Miami, District IV; Floyd D. Jordan, Jr. of Decatur, Ga., District IX; and Hans Tew of Orlando, director at large.

Florida State Alumni Association officers at the meeting included president elect Charles F. Mixon, Jr., of Tampa, and the Associations Executive Secretary, Thomas A. Watts, Tallahassee.

Tankers Win AAU Championship In Jax

John Rangely led the FSU varsity swimmers to the winners circle in the Florida AAU Indoor championships at the Beaches Aquatic Club pool in Jacksonville over the weekend.

FSU won the meet by taking three first places in the Saturday night competition. Rangely won the 200 yard freestyle; Dick Acosta the 200 yard backstroke; and the varsity took the 400 medley relay.

Rangely was presented the Men's High Point Trophy for the meet in award ceremonies Sunday.

FSU dominated the Saturday events, placing in all events, and completely sweeping the medley relay. The winning relay team was composed of Jim Mullaly, Preston Howland, Don Hartke, and Dan Jeffries.

The varsity splashes took the meet by splitting the fact that they had left eight of the top swimmers in Tallahassee.

Dick Abbott, Gene Dayton, Jim Mauldin, Dick Greene, Doug Kruger, Mike Blouin, Neal Allen, and Larry Pro-fumo stayed in Tallahassee to practice for the National Collegiate Amateur Athletic Championships this weekend in New Haven, Conn.

Netters Face Northwestern

The tennis squad faces Northwestern University on home courts at 2:30 p.m. today. "The way the team played in Jacksonville, we have a good chance against them," said Coach Paul Scarpa.

Lex Wood will oppose Marty Riesen, the number two collegiate netter in the United States. A victory here would greatly improve Wood's chances on the South Africa Davis Cup team.

Playing without the number one man, Wood, the FSU netters squeezed out two victories over the Navy in Jacksonville, 5-4, Saturday. Wood missed the matches because of a cold.

The deciding game in the first match was the first doubles competition. Don Monk and Don Canon defeated the Navy contingent to pull the Tribe ahead, after the singles had split, 3-3.

The second 5-4 match was decided by Steve Burr. Burr came through, said Coach Scarpa, "to give us the second victory."

The netters freed less well in matches Thursday and Friday. The University of Georgia took both games; 5-4 on Thursday and 4-1 on Friday. Wood did not play Friday because of the flu.

Senate Hears Coast Bill Yesterday

Women's Senate met yesterday afternoon in the Honor Court Room at 4:30 p.m.

Bill No. 10 which amends the Knowledge for College was introduced by Senators Nancy Ashley and Sue DeShazo. Under this bill a coast trip will be considered as a regular day trip. A student must return by closing hours.

Senator Dot Fish introduced a bill to change the box on page 8 of the Knowledge for College to read "no matter how late." This change will mean that no matter how late a woman may be returning from a trip she must notify her residence counselor.

Both bills were passed unanimously.

Dorm To Host UP Candidates

Smith Hall residents will have the opportunity to meet and talk with the University Party candidates tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Smith Hall lounge.

Planning for an informal gathering, University Party Chairman Ray Hayes announced that all the candidates will be introduced by the office they are seeking, and the floor will then be open for questions.

In this way, Hayes said, the voters will be able to meet all of the U.P. candidates and inform themselves on their qualifications and plans.

Too often, he said, the voters go to the polls knowing only a little about the candidates they elect to offices.

Math, Music Star Honored, Offered Computer Instruction

A sophomore handy with a drum major's baton, adagio routines and table tennis as well as high speed computer has been selected as one of 10 students from the United States for a special course in use and design of digital computers next summer.

Carol Farrell, a mathematics major, has worked as a student assistant the past year in the Computing Center. He was given the position after completing with distinction as a freshman, a programming course usually offered only to advanced undergraduate and graduate students. Farrell came out first among FSU students participating in the national undergraduate mathematics competition—The Putnam Contest—sponsored by the American Mathematical Association of America. He also began to rack up honors in other areas. He was table tennis champion last trimester, performs an adagio routine in Gymkansas with his partner Pam Bennett of Hartsville, Ill., and is drum major of the Army ROTC Band.

On June 6 Farrell will go to the Digital Computer Laboratory of the University of Illinois for the eight weeks of study sponsored by the National Science Foundation. His coursework there will be concerned with numerical analysis, computer programming and logical design.

Garbage Disposal

(REPRINTED FROM THE FLORIDA ALLIGATOR)

For the past few years, the books used in classrooms across the state have been held suspect by the controversial legislative investigation committee. And for several trimesters, "I wonder if the Johns committee is around?" served as the standard prelude to the presentation of any material that might possibly be construed to deviate from scrupulously good taste.

In the wake of the investigations, the actions of the committee prompted editorial comment from most of the major newspapers, using descriptions ranging from "irresponsibility" to "prudishness." As it proceeded from institution to institution like a bear turning over rocks in a search for earthworms of scandal, it earned the reputation of being able to question the ethics of the most innocent looking material used in our classrooms.

The fellow companion with their suspicion of the intellectual has been the obvious belief by the committee that homosexuality is a pervasive and dangerous evil that has blighted the reputation of almost every public institution they have chosen to investigate.

Having reached some kind of plateau in the investigative processes by obtaining an extension of its existence (which may well prove to be immortal, the committee decided to incorporate the two aspects of its investigation into one endeavor by writing its own book -- about the evils of homosexuality.

Judging from the committee's avowed moralistic attitudes, one would expect its report to be a paragon of tastefulness and tact with enough descriptive material to properly identify the subject under attack.

Instead, the committee turned out a booklet that could rival the most lewd pornography as a standard of obscenity. It contains what some have called step by step and pictorially substantiated instructions for every conceivable type of perversion. The report has been accused of committing journalistic license by including an impressive array of bibliographical sketches without including any indication of the use of technical material or data on basic homosexual problems treated in the report.

If the report had been intended for private use and study by the committee and other carefully selected and responsible organizations, the bluntness and insubstantiation might be partially defended; however, the report contains a solicitation for sales at 25 cents each, and due to the absence of a copyright it may be reproduced by anyone unscrupulously enough to go to the trouble.

The reproduction, like the original, would contain the ultimate in obscenity with the official sanction of the state, as evidenced by the presence of the great seal of Florida.

And the committee will have attempted to eradicate a cupfull of smut by burying it under a mountain of garbage.

Sebring 'Grand Prix' Is Magnetic

Only an idiot would stand twelve hours in a South-Florida sun and fight hundreds of elbows in trying to view a sports car race. But the 1994 Sebring Annual Grand Prix of Endurance managed to draw 50,000 "idiots." This sort of race has magnetism for this sort of people.

A race of endurance combines the good qualities of many different types of races. Drag racing calls for quick pickup and pure might. Oval racing calls for engine endurance and speed. Rally racing looks for driver skill and intelligent handling. Grand Prix racing combines all of these facets in one torturous test.

Those who enjoy speed favor the Grand Stand straight-away at Sebring. The Webster Turns, two 90 degree turns, demonstrates each driver's skill and intelligent handling. Those who wish to see the endurance qualities of each car and engine, sleep for the first ten hours then awake to see who's left in the race.

The "typical" Sebring spectator combines all of these pastimes in one pleasurable day. He wanders from the Main Turn to the straightaway to the beer stand, from the Websters to the long line of freestrooms, then back to his car to sleep the afternoon away. After waking he spends three hours at the Webster's, wanders over to gaze at the burned out Alfa Romeo, stays to see the finish, and drives like a maniac all the way home.

This "typical" spectator may sound like a disinterested chap. But if questioned closely he'll spout all sorts of information -- engine sizes, potential winners, and opinions on various cars. He most likely favors Ferrari to win (as usual), but is rooting for the Ford Corbras to show them up. He can safely guess that at least one Corvette and one Porsche will finish in the top ten. The mention of "Corvettes" will bring an appreciative smile across his face where he would have coughed three years ago.

1, as a typical spectator, spent most of my time following the Ford Corbras as they threatened the Ferraris. Several lap records were broken in the first few hours as the leading Ferraris felt the pressure from the pack of American cars behind.

Be evening half of the cars had dropped out listing the usual reasons -- seized engine, broken rear axle, accident on course. Now the mechanically reliable Ferraris moved up. The drivers who had handled their cars intelligently were moved up each time a faster car failed. Consequently the winning race theoretically was a composite of the most intelligent, fastest drivers who had the best mechanical maintenance and luck.

The winning team for the 1994 Sebring race was a Londoner, Mike Parkes; an Italian, Umberto Naldi; and a near engine prototype Ferrari. They won by a state of perseverance, having to fight off as Ferraris as Cobras, plus a smattering of Chevys, Porsches and Corvettes as well.

At the end of the twelve hours I felt that the best car had won but was never the less pleased that America had finally caught up in the sports car field, having placed four Corbras in the top ten overall.

Monetary Motives Are Large

To the Editor:

I have heard it defined in monetary terms. In terms of enrichment of the mind and as a worthy accomplishment.

Foremost in many students' thoughts, I have concluded, although seldom on their lips, is the monetary aspect. In this respect, I suppose, we have here at school a very efficient machine for ram-reading students through college. Thus enabling them to taste the "fruits" of their labors a little earlier in life.

In terms of enrichment of the mind we have here at school a very inefficient machine. With all its machines directed toward mass production, tends to obscure quality with quantity.

As far as a worthy accomplishment is concerned, I doubt very much if anyone could emerge from this struggle, and it is a struggle, without a definite feeling of accomplishment. Whether or not it is a worthy one remains with the individual.

The bible asks, "What does it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his soul?" Think Oh you soul is not some invisible spirit, it's your own wonderful self, the person you want to bury in a frivolous attempt to please the challenge of our modern world. Worse, you seem so serious in your attempt to do this.

Why? What has ingrained this unquenchable spirit of competition. Why must you take up the struggle of your parents, wrestle with it, while it consumes your life, and then hand the reins over to your children, instilling in them the spirit of surpassing you.

Is it for progress? And where does progress lead? Does it lead to a better world? Does it lead to a higher standard of living or does it lead to a whole world struggling to produce things, anything, even producing things for what has already been produced.

Is there a place in this world, not only for those who can't compete, but for those who won't compete? Must these people be relegated to perform mental tasks for society? Is there a place where the subconscious cannot prod happiness into the arms of success? A place where a thought is not a scheme but where it lingers and is enjoyed, where it is an end and not a means?

Has the last refuge, the University, been sucked into the whirlpool? Where the wings of youth are clipped and blinders applied. Where the reflective are trampled by a herd of asses chasing after the carrot and where the pathetic screams of youth are smothered in a sea of garbage.

Those of you who have your feet planted firmly on the merry-go-round and ridicule those who become dizzy, you who shout immature unrealistic cowardly care less in the twilight of life may step from this screaming carousel and find that it was a blissful ride but your one life has been used up.

Silence Is Evil

To the Editor:

It seems that there is a large amount of heated debate going on about the policy of the Public Forum Committee.

It's sad to realize that people are still arguing about the right of free speech for, as a student, there is still a lot I am certain of: silence never taught me anything.

I have a certain set of beliefs and I think I can back upon what I believe. I realize that a very large portion of what I believe was derived from hearing and reading ideas which I didn't agree with and only small portions were derived from hearing and reading what I did agree with.

I shudder when I think of what my philosophy might be today if all those people who held a contrary philosophy had been forbidden to speak to me. I am sure that ideas in themselves cannot be evil, but the person who is a member of ignorance can be.

BOB GRAMLING

... was one of the outstanding Gymkana team members who helped lead the FSU club to Fourth Place in the Southern Intercollegiate Gymnastic League Championships held at the Citadel in South Carolina, last weekend.

Gymnasts Take 4th At SIGL

The FSU Gymkana Team beat four other universities at the Southern Intercollegiate Gymnastic League Championships to bring home the Fourth place title from the match at Citadel in South Carolina.

Bob Gramling and Bill Davis led FSU's five man team in points. Gramling worked up a total of 35 with Davis making 20 1/2 for the Seminoles Team.

Following Davis and Gramling were Guy Atkinson and John Van Nostrand with 14 and 6 points respectively. Bob Emmons placed 11th on the still rings, missing the top ten by one point.

Davis brought in the only first place title for the FSU team when he scored 11 points on the long horse.

Seminoles Sting Jackets, 3-2

Fred Hatfield's baseballers pushed over runs in the first, third and fifth innings edge the Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets, 3-2 at home yesterday.

Bob Kull got his first win of the year, going the full nine innings for the Tribe. The loss went to Ron Scharf, the first of four Tech pitchers.

FSU Thinclads To Meet SC

The FSU Trackmen will meet South Carolina tomorrow at 2:30 p.m. on the FSU Track Field. South Carolina will bring one of their best teams ever to face the Seminoles.

The took a third place in the Atlantic Coast Conference Indoor Championships. This meet featured track powers from Duke, North Carolina, and Maryland.

The meet will also have an international flavor to it as South Carolina has two men on scholarship from Australia. They are Bob Crombie, who runs the 440 and 880 yard runs, and Allen Rose, who runs the mile and two miles.

In the first two meets this year FSU has made exceptional showings in the field events but this meet could be very close because South Carolina is also very strong in these events.

Don Pharris, FSU pole vaulter, should run into his first really stiff opposition. It will be from SC's Woody Chapman and Roland Brown who have both vaulted 14 feet.

After this meet, the next thing on tap for the Cludenmen will be the Florida Relays in Gainesville on Saturday. Coach Long will take the 440 yd. relay team of Jerry McDaniels, Hutch Johnson, Bob Sable and Al Cato, and shot putter Al Williams to the meet.

The Seminoles Trackmen now have a 2-0 record on the season.

In frosh competition the FSU freshman track team defeated Pensacola Jr. College Saturday. The final score was 91 to 51.

The first place finishers for FSU were: Roy Plummer, in the 440 yd. run and high jump; Billy Nelson, in the 880 yd. run and mile; Steve Landis, in the high hurdles and intermediate hurdles; Leslie King, in the javelin and broad jump; Charlie Fuchs, in shot and discus; and Hull Carr in the pole vault.

FSU's first run came on a double to deep center by Monty McInnis. The blast sent in Jim Reed who gotten on base courtesy of a passed ball and had gone to second on a passed ball.

George Rountree scored the second Seminoles run in the third. He reached first on a fielders choice, moved to second on Gary Nichols ground out to the first baseman. Larry Johnson then drove home the tree in on a single to left field.

The Yellow Jackets were unable to get any rally going until the fifth. In that inning Jim Adams drilled home run to right field that cleared the fence by ten feet. Terry H scored in front of Adams on the fly.

The Tribe quickly came back to the bottom of the fifth to break the tie. Reed walked, went to third on a passed ball, and scored by stealing home.

The catcher was charged with interference on the play for leaving the box to grab Ralph Smith's pitch in trying to put out the runner. Tech made one last scoring try in the sixth inning. Pinch hitter Dick Kaper rapped a triple to the fence in center field with two men on. When the inning ended he was still on third.

The win over the Yellow Jackets gives the Seminoles a six and a record on the young season. The Tribe faces North East Louisiana on the home diamond at 3:30 p.m.

Sports Notes

Northwestern defeated the Seminoles netters yesterday, 7-2. The teams meet again today at 2:30 p.m. on the Tully Courts.

Marty Reissen defeated FSU's Lex Wood. Don Cato, FSU whipped Clark Graebner, Paul Bennett, FSU, lost to Bill Rice.

Steve Guse dropped to Tim Sheehan. Don Mon, FSU, pulled a win over Tig. Templeton. Steve Burt lost to Carver Blanchard, Northwestern.

The Seminoles netters lost all three doubles matches.

What Criteria For Students Are Best

For Governor

Fred Karl

Representative Fred Karl, Democratic candidate for the office of governor, was born in Daytona Beach, Florida.

He graduated from Seabreeze High School, Daytona Beach, in 1942 and attended the University of Florida until October of the same year, at which time he enlisted in the US army as a private.

Karl was commissioned a 2nd Lt. at the age of 16 at Fort Knox, Kentucky, and served as Tank Platoon Leader in the 20th and 2nd Armored Divisions. He was awarded the Silver Star, the Bronze Star and Purple Heart.

Among honors Fred Karl has been awarded are his selection as one of the ten most outstanding legislators by the press in 1959, 1961, and 1963. He was also the Florida Education Association School Bell Award (presented to the person outside the profession making the greatest contribution to education in 1963).

He was voted by his fellow legislators as one of the top three members of both Legislative bodies in 1963. In 1958 Karl was awarded the distinguished Service Award by the Daytona Beach Junior Chamber of Commerce; in 1961 he was awarded the Honorary State Farmer Degree by the Florida Chapter of Future Farmers of America.

Representative Karl's platform includes:

A legislature that is fairly apportioned and truly representative of the people.

Congressional districts that give the populous areas fair representation in the national congress.

A development commission that is organized according to the intent of the law that effectively seeks new industry and more tourists.

A system of public education that functions efficiently and provides all Floridians with a quality education.

An end to promiscuous borrowing and a return to true fiscal conservatism wherein public money is spent only when and where it is actually needed.

A social climate within which diverse groups, including labor, management and racial groups, can freely communicate and find solutions to their problems and the means of reconciling their differences on the local level.

A state government in the open that conducts the public's business in the presence of the public, open meetings of all public bodies.

A conservation program that will protect our natural resources.

A new constitution that will provide for a lieutenant governor, annual legislative sessions, home rule and other needed improvements.

A plan for building roads where the need is the greatest—where the people are.

A return to a meaningful merit system that will insure quality public service from competent government employees.

A state government that recognizes the importance of agriculture in our economy and works to protect and expand it.

Strict and effective enforcement of all highway safety laws.

An effective program to halt federal encroachment on states' rights by causing the state to strongly exercise the state responsibility which accompanies those rights.

Judges to be selected on a Missouri type plan which will free them of political influences.

Florida will never again be a cultural desert. We will preserve the record of our historic past; create a meaningful arts commission and provide quality public libraries.

Support the Democratic Party.

Our state and state must be separate. Public funds must not be used for parochial purposes.

An active Commission on Aging, a program to improve the health, welfare and social needs of our senior citizens.

The sophomore tests appear to be another step in a series which are denying an opportunity for higher education to students in Florida. The most obvious of these steps began with the use of the Florida Twelfth Grade Tests for admission. This has a twofold purpose of cutting down enrollment and eliminating the chance for all but a few Negroes to attend an integrated state university.

The score required has been increased over the past several years and will certainly continue to trend upward. Another probable step in reducing enrollment is the possible tuition increase which is currently being discussed.

I am not saying that the only reasons for these increased requirements are to keep the Negro out and to reduce enrollment, but I do feel that these two reasons are very high on the list. This one way to meet the costs of higher education, and perhaps it is justified for "quality education." But it would seem that state university system has an obligation to provide an opportunity for all who are qualified to take advantage of it.

The question then appears to be how is a qualified student determined. The use of the Twelfth Grade Tests and the sophomore tests for admission and advancement are arbitrary to say the least. Certainly the use of the students' overall grade average would be a better indicator of their ability than a set of hit or miss tests which only test performance and not ability.

Dr. Yoder in the April, 1963, issue of the "Phi Delta Kappan" says that both psychologist and testers agree on the inadequacies of tests of potential. Dr. Yoder says that "classic illustrations of those who would have been missed in a purely scholastic test are those of Darwin, Edison, Churchill, and even Einstein."

The rather ironic catch is that many economists feel that education offers a better return on investment than either business or industry. W. Schuller, president of Econometrics at Chicago, finds about an 11 percent return on education. In spite of this there continues to be a trend in education. At a time when this state is so desperate for more college trained people, Florida continues its trend to have a university education available to an ever-growing group.

The federal government also gives higher education large amounts of aid. For example, the University of California received approximately $200 million a year in federal aid in 1962. Its yearly budget, from the government, in the last five years has increased by $100 million. The government has supplied nine hundred dollars per student by colleges. Florida and other states are equal to meet their obligations to the people, then perhaps the government will have to do it.

FLAMBEAU FORUM Demonstration 'Theory' Questioned

To the Editor:

The so-called "Demonstration Theory" appeared in the "Flambeau" on March 23, by Mr. Paul W. Snyder contains several flaws.

Since he enters his thoughts in the form of theory, I would assume there is reliable research backing it up. However, his evidence indicates no such research, thus making his "theory" questionable.

Mr. Snyder's first hypothesis was as follows:

"If one is a youthful member of a transient group, then he tends to develop negative stereotypes about his host community."

The Norm Group Theory of prejudice is more applicable in the creation of negative stereotypes than is "younger membership" or "transient groups."

This theory, advanced by Sherif and Sherif, holds that all groups develop certain standards and those individuals not holding these standards are part of an out-group. As a result of this situation "negative stereotypes" or prejudice will occur.

Mr. Snyder would have been no more correct if he had referred to Tallahassee's Negro community and had stated, "If one is an older member of a permanent group, then he tends to develop negative stereotypes about his host community. His second hypothesis was:

"If one is a youthful member of a transient group, then he tends to be easily led into participating in protest demonstrations in his host community."

Unfortunately, had Mr. Snyder been more informed on the subject he would have found that authors have presented this idea before him. Norman Davis showed in "The Motivation of the Underprivileged Worker" that members of an out-group can react to their situation in two ways.

At first, people fight back, but if they are weak or cannot win then they finally give up and withdraw into apathy.

Members of such a group usually begin to fight back when they are young and begin to withdraw as they get older. One need not be a member of a "transient group" in order to act in this manner.

The third hypothesis stated:

"If a community is a host community, then there will be more transient groups than in non-host communities."

If Mr. Snyder is trying to say that college towns are more aware of political and social ideals, then hardly anyone can dispute that.

I definitely hope so.

V. "The more that students participate in protest demonstrations, the less stable is their nation's government."

Here he really went over the track. Mr. Snyder seems to equate public apathy with political stability. If Mr. Snyder read "The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich" as he said he did, then it would seem that he skipped the first 200 pages.

Hitler would never have risen to such prominence if the German people had not been too hungry to worry about political stability in their government. Also, how does he explain England—the most democratic country in the world—while it has stated, "If one is an older member of a permanent group, then he tends to develop negative stereotypes about his host community. His second hypothesis was:

Pledges Make Annual 'Wak' To Reservation

By SHEILA APPLEBY
Flambeau Feature Writer

Ten pledges of Woman's F Club, athletic service honorary, made Hell Week's traditional "Walk from campus to the Reservation last weekend. All ten survived and new members of "F" Club are Gayla Beachamp, Josie Harris, Connie Hoek, Janie Kuasella, Sarah Martin, Roy Wooten, Jan Landry, Fayton Wright, Alex Pavlic and Carol Mathis.

The requirements for becoming a member are rather high. One has to be awarded two all-star medals, based on skill and sportsmanship, in two different intramural sports during one academic year, which may run from Sept. to April or from Jan. to Dec.

The intramural games, in which F Club members participate, follow the four sports seasons of the Women's Recreation Association, each season lasting about two months. The first season includes volleyball, basketball and basketball; the second, basketball, shuffleboard, and archery; the third, badminton, bowling, and table tennis; the fourth, deck tennis, softball and swimming.

The F Club is equivalent to the men's letter club. However, a letter is given for participation in intramurals only; since there is just one intercollegiate women's sport at FSU—tennis.

Vice President Kay Fry remarked that "F Club considers itself now an athletic service honorary." Its service activities have varied from year to year (members sold refreshments at the circus this year). Some permanent activities include decorating the homecoming queen's float and the fountain and gates of Westcott.

The club promotes intramural participation by awarding two F Club overall point trophies. So there is one for the Greeks and one for the independents, living in dorms, off-campus houses and FSO scholarship houses.

Organizations receive points for the number of girls participating, the games they win, and how they place in the tournament. These trophies are awarded once a year and Kay hinted that "for the Greeks it is between two sororities and for the independents it is between five organizations—the last sports season will determine the winner."

In discussing Hell Week, the traditional initiation program for F Club members, Kay pointed out, "We feel that if the goats (alias pledges) can get through pledging with a good attitude, they will be good members."

Exchange Program Set By Student Government

The Student Government of FSU is currently in the process of setting up a Foreign Student Exchange Program with a foreign university. Student Government is concentrating on one of the universities in Switzerland with which to establish a reciprocal student exchange program, where for every student FSU sends to a foreign university, that same university would send one of its students to FSU.

The program would entail a full year's study, with a variety of courses offered. Use of scholarships may be available to finance at least part of the exchange program. The student would have to pay no more than he would for a full year at FSU while studying at a foreign university.

There are available to students many summer study abroad programs. These programs entail both study and travel in a foreign country. They usually last from six weeks to two and a half months. The cost ranges from $300 up to $1,000, depending on the duration of the program, and the country to which the student is sent.

A bulletin board with samples of some of the summer study abroad programs, has been put up on the board in front of the History Bldg. Further information can be obtained from Judy Boozie, chairman of the Foreign Exchange Program, at 125 Reynolds Hall or the Zeta Tau Alpha sorority house.

Debate Squad To Attend Meet

Four members of the FSU debate squad will participate in the Delta Sigma Rho—Tau Kappa Alpha, national rhetoric honoraries at Indianapolis, Ind., Saturday. # FSU Scalps Indians, 7 - 4

The battery of Ken Suarez and Munroe Hunt came through swinging for the Tribe yesterday as each man homered to lead the Seminole baseballers to a 7-4 victory over the North East Louisiana Indians at Seminole Field.

Hunt belted his four bagger in the third inning with one man on. Suarez banged a lone homer in the sixth.

The fast paced game was scoreless for two innings, both pitchers getting the sluggers to pop or ground out easily.

The Indians scored the first run in the top of the third. Pitcher Mike Timmerello got on base by an error by Larry Johnson. He scooted home on Joey McGinn's double to right field.

In the bottom of the third the Seminoles staged their first come back of the afternoon. After Suarez had popped out to the center fielder, Gerry Chmielewski hit a hard single to left field.

Pitcher Hunt followed with his home run over the left field fence into the softball diamond. Mike Augustine and Monty McBryde ended the inning by grounding out to the second baseman.

North East was unable to get a rally going in the fourth. In spite of John Hall's double to the right field fence.

FSU added another run to its tally in the bottom of the fourth. Larry Johnson hit a solid blow to short that put him on first with a base hit.

He moved to second when Suarez was hit on the foot by a pitch. Chmielewski then brought Johnson home with a single to center that got away from Bob Leake, the center fielder.

The Indians evened the score in the top of the fifth. Leake went to first on a single through short. He moved to second as David Worthington walked. Both men advanced Timmerello's sacrifice bunt down the third baseline.

McGinn drove in Leake with a single to right. Worthington made it home on Keith Prince's final out to the second baseman, Jim Reed.

The Tribe made its second rally in the bottom of the fifth. Augustine walked and went to third on McBryde's long single to center field. Augustine then ran home on a hard hit ball by Bob Wilcox that the third baseman bobbled. Gary Nichols brought in McBryde and Wilcox on a double to center field.

North East Louisiana came right back in the next inning with their last run of the afternoon. Hall started the inning by hitting to right. He trotted to second on Challey Dykes' base on balls.

Hall streaked home on two wild pitches by Hunt. Ken Creely came in to relieve Hunt on the next batter. Creely and Suarez put out the fire when Suarez picked Dykes off second, and Creely struck out Marvin Brosset and Worthington.

The final Seminole run came as right handed Suarez smashed Timmerello's one and one pitch over the right field fence in the sixth.

The Indians made one last effort in the seventh. After the first two men had struck out pinch hitter Jim Casey lined a single to right. Creely put the next man on first with a walk.

Augustine ended the threat as he hauled in Hall's fly ball to center field.

Creely got the next six men out in order to end the ball game. The six outs came on a strike out and five infield outs.

The Seminoles made one more try for insurance runs in the bottom of the eighth. Suarez singled to left and went to third on Chmielewski's double to the left field fence.

But Creely struck out, ending the Seminole threat.

The win was credited to Hunt, and the loss to Timmerello. Hunt pitched five complete innings and was relieved in the sixth.

He gave up all four of the Indians runs on six hits. Hunt walked two and struck out none.

Timmerello pitched five and one third innings, giving up seven runs on eight hits, and two home runs. Timmerello struck out one and walked one man.

Creely pitched three innings for the Seminoles, yielding no runs on one hit, walked two, and struck out five. Darryl Barnes, in relief for the Indians, gave up no runs on three hits, walked one and struck out one.

The Tribe's next home game is today on Seminole field at 3:30 p.m. with North Carolina.

Coach Peterson Pessimistic Backfield Lacks Depth, Speed

By DAVE ROSS

The outcome of Saturday's Garnet and Gold game left Head Coach Bill Peterson with a rather pessimistic outlook toward next season. He said, "We definitely lack depth in our backfield. Some of our younger boys such as Narramore, Waller and Green must come through for us."

Peterson added that he was still looking for speed and breakaway potential in his backfield. However, he was generally pleased with the passing and defensive play exhibited Saturday.

Being more optimistic Peterson said, "We have a good group of seniors whom we can build a team around. Their attitude will probably spell the difference between a winning and losing season next year."

Concerning the new rule change, allowing almost unlimited substitution, Peterson said, "We feel that this change will help us immensely. In the past we have built and recruited around the three platoon system."

"However, next year we will use two platoons. I believe that we can best utilize everyone's potential by having both an offensive and defensive unit with some boys working both ways."

If the Miami game were next week, Peterson said his offensive unit would look like this: either Tensi or Pritchett at quarterback with Narramore at fullback and Peto and Bilenkoiff at the halfback slots. The line would have Dawson and Floyd at the ends, Williams and West at tackle, Avezzano and McDowell at guard and Schinholser at center.

On the defensive unit, which he said he would match against any in the country, would be Bibert, Bailey, Massey and Ehler in the backfield.

Ideas Inhibited Says Professor

By CAROLYN CHRISTENSEN
Flambeau News Writer would like to clarify my decision regain my position in protest against the restraint against academic freedom here at FSU," stated James Geschwender in a recent interview. "I am concerned more with the attitude that prevents here which tends to inhibit free exploration of ideas and the free expression of one's principles as restrictions upon what I am not referring to any of the violations of academic freedom such as restrictions upon what may be said in the classroom or in the stress of research... What I am more concerned with are the subtle, and thus more dangerous, restrictions.

"My concern really began last year when the Board of Control aimed at directly interfering with the selection of textbooks, the hiring of faculty with deviant political or moral ideas... at this time I considered resignation, but when the Board modified the restrictions in a manner which I thought would be acceptable, I withdrew from the job may-

"The arbitrary and unreasonable disciplinary action taken against the five FSU students arrested for picketing the Florida Theatre concerned me very much. It should be emphasized that these students had never been accused of committing a crime
—they were merely accused of violating a civil court order. Note, I say they were accused, as of this moment they are legally innocent of these charges.

"The courts have not yet made final disposition of their cases. Even if disciplinary action could be justified had the students been adjudged as guilty, it represents arbitrary and irresponsible behavior to discipline them prior to final legal disposition of their case. Then the disciplining was handled in such a manner as to restrict the students' participation in future civil rights activities (campus).

"When I protested against tokenism in integration, I was referring to the fact that those Negroes that are enrolled do not have the same opportunity to use all the facilities that are available to the rest of the student body. For example, as long as the football stadium remains segregated, can one honestly say that our Negro students have the same opportunity to invite friends and family up for a football weekend without humiliation?

"On administration orders, the university police prohibited a group of students from picketing the studium as protest of its segregated seating policy.

"The Liberal Forum applied for permission to sponsor a concert by Joan Baez to raise funds for the civil rights movement. This was denied on the grounds of the separation of church and state which would probably use the use of the state property to raise funds for a religious organization. This decision was held to despite the fact that it was pointed out to the administration that state property was used for fund-raising by the University Religious Council in the publication of the student directory.

Court Member, Class Senators Will Be Elected on Tuesday

Students will go to the polls Tuesday to vote for their respective class senators, officers and members of the various courts.
John Campbell, Deputy Commissioner of Elections, said, "I am hoping that there is large turnout of the student body so that we can select qualified people to serve in the posts. Students are also required to vote on the constitutional amendments."

election will be the same as those for the first. Official polls will be set up at Westcott, Bryan Hall, Smith Hall, the Seminole Club and two at the Student Center.
All students must present their ID cards in order to vote. Number 7 will be punched for the primaries on Tuesday and number 8 will be punched for the finals on Friday, April 3.
Any student having either of these numbers punched should contact the Elections Commission in 210 Longshire before Tuesday.

Students will also be voting on a number of constitutional amendments and are urged to acquaint themselves with these bills.
Measures to be voted on include
Bill 23 which deals with the vote required for submission of legislation to the Student Senate from the Men's and Women's Senate.
Bill 34 states that the majority of the entire court shall be necessary to render effective decisions of the Men's Judiciary, Men's Judiciary, and the University Court.
Bill 24 states that Men's and Women's Senates shall have jurisdiction only over matters concerning their respective sexes.
Also included is a bill proposing that BOP meetings may be called by request of two members of the Board. No official action may be taken at such meetings.

A bill to set definite dates for Student Body and Senate elections will be voted on. Setting up a University Union Board to direct the activities of the new Student Union is the purpose of another of the bills.
Bill IX, the revision of the Honor Code will also be revisited on at this time. Twenty-five percent of the student body must vote on this bill to consider it passed or rejected.
Campbell asked that students give careful consideration of these proposals and then go out and vote.

Johnny Smith Returns Bill With Suggested Changes

Student Body President John Smith has returned Bill XXX to the Senate after an executive veto.
After conferring with Senator Jeanie Williamson and Chief Justice Kelley Smith, Smith suggested two changes in the bill which concerns the Judicial system of student government. He recommended that the Attorney General be added to the committee of investigators.
In explaining his reasons for the recommended changes, Smith stated that Chief Justice must "know a little about the case prior to the hearing."
He should not be included in the scrutiny investigation."
Smith explained that the present system includes the Attorney General and prosecutors. The new bill does not mention the Attorney General as having any function in the investigating process.
He felt that the Senate should consider the great amount of work that went into the planning for the present system of operation.
"In one week of consideration the Senate has changed many important aspects of the FSU judicial system," he said.
When turning up his objections to the bill, Smith said that there are conflicts between this bill and Bill IX and "I believe its passage would endanger the check and balance system of Student Government."

Flambeau Bites The Dust

The "Flambeau" regrets to announce that it will cease publication today with the exception of a paper on the two following Fridays, due to financial reasons.
Students may pick up copies of the "This Week" in Longmire or Westcott next week to keep in touch with campus activities.

'Observe Agreements' Says Dean Oglesby On Proposed March

Dean Oglesby, Dean of Students, has issued a statement concerning the participation of FSU students in the Peace March to be held in Tallahassee today.

"First of all, I wish to emphasize once again that despite rumors to the contrary, classes will be held on Good Friday. Classes will continue as usual and students will be expected to meet their regular academic responsibilities.

"Concerning the rally to be held on Centennial Field, it is my understanding that this has been planned as an orderly rally by its sponsors.
"It is my understanding that there has been an agreement between the sponsors and the city officials concerning the number of persons to participate in the marching around the capital.

"I would like to call to the attention of all FSU students that if they choose to attend the rally they should be alert to observe the agreement between the sponsors and city officials," Oglesby concluded.

"Another organization then requested the right to sponsor Joan Baez to raise funds for the same purpose. This was denied for reasons never made clear to me. This should be considered in conjunction with the fact that YAF (Young Americans for Freedom) was allowed to use university property to raise funds for Operation Information. I do not feel that YAF should have been denied this right. I feel that other organizations should be given similar treatment.

"There has been a certain amount of harassment of students engaged in civil rights activities by various members of the administration.
Some of the incidents I cannot describe without revealing the names of students involved who said they would feel "more comfortable" if their names were not made public.

"Let it suffice for me to point out the effect that a February 1964 article quoting an administration source as saying that Steve Jones would be suspended for the 1964-65 year and another article which stated that disciplinary action was being considered against two other students involved in another civil rights incident.
"President Blackwell was asked at a public meeting what his position would be on a faculty picketing of the off-campus restaurants. He stated that he would have to defend their right to do so but that because of the relationship of the faculty to the University this might not be a very responsible act. Thus, he stated the strong position of defending faculty members, but implicitly got across the message that those without tenure and desiring promotions might be wise to think twice before exercising these rights.

"I have heard several comments to the effect that I am resigning simply because I found a better job and took it. I was satisfied with my position in the Department of Sociology. I had a good teaching load, stimulating colleagues, and opportunities to engage in research.

"Financial considerations were clearly not involved, as I took a salary cut in order to move, besides the fact that my wife is teaching here but will not be after I move.

"I am very impressed with the students at FSU. So many of them are concerned with ideas. This is especially apparent among the liberal groups. But I am also impressed with those who oppose these groups.
They have a healthy way of expressing their attitudes.

Even those who go out of their way to cross the picket lines are impressive in their acceptance of peaceful protest. It is a healthy thing that those who ignore the picket can see nothing unusual in it, and tolerate it without violent reaction."

Flambeau Report

Today marks the end of daily publication of "The Florida Flambeau" for the rest of this trimester. Papers will be printed the next two succeeding Fridays. The possibilities of no paper at all during Trimester III-A are quite good.

Why?

Last year under the then editor, Ben Sharp, the "Flambeau" decided to become a daily paper. The drawback to the scheme, however, was the fact that due to a lack of careful planning, the "Flambeau" attempted to print daily on a twice a week budget.

Sharp completely disregarded any type of monetary control and consequently put the "Flambeau" $10,000 in debt.

This year, the "Flambeau," under Lana Murray, tried to cut down expenses but again paid no attention to the budget and consequently spent $33,000 during the first six months of publication.

When the current staff assumed control in January, we discovered that we had been given the impossible job of trying to print a daily "Flambeau" for six months on $11,000.

We shall not go into debt. If we do not have the money to print, we shall not do so. This is the reason the "Flambeau" will not continue.

What can be done to remedy the situation?

First and foremost, we pledge to you, the Student Body, that next year we will turn out a top quality newspaper and still maintain our budget. However, if we are again allotted the same amount by the student government, you the student body will be the ones to suffer.

It means that features you like, the Greek Grid, the Greek columns, play reviews, faculty interviews, picture pages, student senior and many more will have to be eliminated.

You may not be aware of this fact, but you can count the number of college daily newspapers on one hand. "The Florida Flambeau" is a wonder among colleges everywhere. Not only do we turn out a consistently good collegiate daily newspaper, but we have no school of journalism and no training program of any kind.

The staff of the "Flambeau" comes to work seven days a week simply because they love what they are doing. The only reward we receive is the knowledge that we are trying to do our best to serve the student body. Naturally when we are not allowed enough money to just break even, the staff tends to get discouraged. It seems that after we have worked like hell to get this paper out every day simply for the benefit of the student body, we are at least not given enough money to do our job right.

Such is not the case. The "Flambeau" has been allocated the same amount of money as last year despite the good possibility of rising print costs. It appears to us as if student government, in a real effort to improve all existing organizations and, at the same time create new ones, is in reality, robbing Peter to pay Paul.

The way to make this outstanding university is not to take money away from or hinder existing proven organizations. The "Flambeau" is not alone. "The Smoke Signals" is attempting to publish five instead of three issues next year but has received an increase of only $10. The list is endless.

We hope that after you realize how much you depend on the "Flambeau" daily to tell you what is happening on campus and around the world, you will let your feelings be known to your representatives in Student Senate and Student Government.

Next year, under the Jones administration, we firmly believe that the situation can be improved. With your support, we can put the "Flambeau" into the All-American newspaper category that our campus deserves. We promise to do our part.

Jones Pledges Executive Action

To the Editor:

As a candidate for Senior Class President, I would like to present my platform to the students.

1. To work with the Executive Department in promoting an improved Homecoming program by:

- A. Working for fraternity and sorority skits for the Four-Weeks.
- B. Working with the community leaders in Tallahassee to sponsor Homecoming activities;
- C. Promoting greater student participation in the Homecoming banquet.

11. To work for a more effective Student Alumni Affairs Bureau by:

- A. Working to include all class officers as members of the Bureau.
- B. Working for the perpetuation of Alumni Weekend;
- C. Co-operating fully with the University Alumni Office.

111. To work for a successful incorporation of the Inter-Class-Council into the Operations of Student Government by:

- A. Aiding the Host Bureau under the office of the Public and Inter-collegiate Affairs;
- B. Aiding the University Promotions Bureau under the office of Secretary of State;
- C. Working for better public relations of Florida State;
- D. Providing more students an opportunity to work in Student Government;
- E. Working for greater service for the students through co-operation with the Secretary of Internal Affairs.

I feel that, through hard work, every plan in this platform can be fulfilled. I pledge to the student body. If elected, I will strive diligently to achieve the goals of my platform.

I sincerely urge all students to serve the qualifications and platform of all candidates and participate on election day for the candidates of their choice.

Jim Jones

Brandt Sees Unexplored Possibilities

To the Editor:

Re: Senior Class President.

The possibilities of a class office, especially the one with which I'm concerned, are innumerable and almost completely unexplored.

Promises concerning expected achievements can range far and wide because no one is really sure what can be done, but I believe many programs and goals can be achieved with diligence and the desire to do the job.

Whether or not promises are lived up to in the coming year will be with us to you and your concern. I sincerely hope you will be. Probably one of the most striking features of this campaign is the contrast of your class in 1964 compared to your class in 1961.

There were approximately three times as many class president candidates when we were freshmen as there are today. This means interest has declined and quite a few people have been disillusioned.

But you do have two candidates. I sincerely hope you will choose the good man into office now. I don't ever stronger than when you've caught up in the excitement of a first class election.

I sincerely hope your class at graduate next year with the satisfaction of contributing well and doing favorably remembered. I can help attain this goal.

All I ask is that you consider other qualifications, experience, know-how and then lend support to the man you choose. We need your help. I can not accomplish this position if I see no chance of return, give our class my best.

Jim Brandt

Leadership Loss Will Be Keenly Felt By Those Left

To the Editor:

I cannot allow the announcement of the resignation of Dr. J. Paul Reynolds, Dean of Arts, Sciences, and Social Sciences, to go by without some word from me.

Without the leadership of Dean Reynolds, Dean Werner Baum, Dean Lawrence Chalmers, and Dean Ross Oglesby, and most especially, Dr. Wayne C. Minnick, head of the Department of Speech, we would never have been able to attract to our campus such distinguished playwrights as Mark van Doren, Maurice Valency, and James Forsyth, and such actors as Paul McGrath, Fred Tozere, and Frank Daly to enrich our University program.

Without these administrators, the Arts, Theater, Comedy Festival, which is now beginning to find national distinction, would have been impossible.

Dean Werner Baum has left the University, Dean Ross Oglesby is returning to his teaching duties, and now Dean Reynolds has announced his resignation.

It must be painfully apparent that the atmosphere and financial rewards for our administrators of Florida State University are woefully inadequate to compensate for their enormous duties and responsibilities. These men attract and hold as well as set a standard for the teaching faculty. They create the opportunities and atmosphere for creative and scholarly research.

Every citizen interested in the welfare of Florida State University, every member of the Board of Control, and every member of the State Legislature should be made aware of the importance of these administrators from the President on down, and should see that they are given salaries comparable to other institutions of this size and remuneration in keeping with their responsibilities, as well as an atmosphere in which they may best carry out their responsibilities.

Personally, I want to record my debt to Dean Reynolds for his leadership and encouragement of the theatre program and that my reason for being at Florida State University is largely due to Dean Reynolds, Dr. Wayne Minnick, and the other administrators mentioned.

I ask that the loss of these men go unnoticed, that everything be done to restore to the administrators who remain, and with every success to Dean Reynolds in his new position.

Can Differ Constructively

To the Editor:

Re: Letters to the editor of the Flambeau.

I've been reading your articles, and other articles like yours in the Flambeau, and I wonder what the genre of writing is accomplishing.

For months I have resisted temptation to attempt to answer any of these articles because I did not want to further this style.

It would be much more beneficial and effective to employ the constructive method of criticism rather than the destructive method.

These radicals you speak so denigratorily are not glassy-eyed fanatics who believe unrepentantly in their own infidelity.

They are young, thinking people who sincerely believe that there are practices and principles in the world that are wrong and should be changed.

They have an avid interest in the welfare of humanity of which they are a part. And they are eager to be restored by the methods they can most effectively accomplish their ends.

It would seem that the role of the columnist and critic would be to help these groups by their constructive and constructive criticism.

Nothing will ever be changed or improved if dissenting groups are on sides with the intention of destroying each other.

This is apparent not only in political groups, but in every institution involving human beings: the family, the community, the arts, philosophy, and nations, only to name a few.

I do not want this to be taken as a destructive criticism, the method which I am discussing is a method which I am discussing in reform and correction, to re-evaluate their methods of criticism.

Nancy Brandt

Good Criticism Involves Rules

To the Editor:

The following is a comment on Monday's review of the production of "Trot."

Good criticism involves established criteria in order to arrive at some sort of evaluation.

To make a simple judgment about the majority of the cast: "You were good, you were not good," is not only rather petty and of little constructive value, but it is in itself, also unkind.

Pat Howard

Lillian Amos, Soprano, Will Present Certificate Voice Recital In Opperman

Lillian Amos, soprano, from the studio of Walter James will present a certificate voice recital with the Madrigal Singers Monday at 8:15 p.m. in Opperman Music Hall.

The FSU Madrigal Singers are directed by Walter James and include Patricia Alonzo, Elaine Clark, Sarah Scott Frank, Sarah Hanna, Richard Ladd, Natsika Lupkiewicz, Joseph Napoli, Frank McKeithan, and Lisa Paulik.

They represent a recent movement in the U.S. Universities to revive interest in ancient Madrigal singing. This new interest in reviving the Madrigal affords an opportunity for small vocal ensembles to sing interesting and challenging literature.

Madrigals, which are secular part songs of two or more voice parts, were especially popular in Italy, the country in which they originated, and in England during the latter part of the 16th century and the early part of the 17th century.

In the 17th century, families and friends, in lieu of playing bridge and watching television, gathered together to read part songs from the latest book of madrigals or ballads. In doing this, they were entertaining themselves not only by singing very well-written music but also by reading some of the outstanding poetry of the period.

Interest in Madrigal singing died away in the latter part of the 17th century and was not revived until modern editions of the words of madrigalists were printed.

With the complete works of Morley, Weelkes, Byrd, Wilbye, and others, many performing Madrigal groups were formed an annual singing competitions were organized in the beginning of the 20th century throughout England.

The Singers will open the recital with Prologue from L'Amfiparnasso

"Smoke Signals," FSU's general interest magazine, will be distributed on Wednesday, April 1, at the usual distribution points: in back of Westcott building and in front of the Student Center.

The magazine is free to students who present their ID.

Copies of the "Legend," FSU's literary magazine, will be distributed free to students with ID's Monday, April 6, it was tentatively announced today.

George Miller, chairman of the Student Union Committee, today urged students to vote Tuesday for the Constitutional amendment making the Union part of the Constitution.

Miller said that this amendment is vital to the operation of the Union. It defines the Union Board and keeps it in student government.

It is of vital importance for the Student Union and student government to work together, said Miller.

"Victory and More in '64" will be the theme for FSU's Homecoming next Oct. 9-10.

The theme was selected this week at an organizational meeting of the Homecoming Committee, which is headed by Dr. William W. Rogers as faculty chairman.

Ludy O'Connell and Herb Bruce are student general chairmen for Homecoming.

Registration books close April 4 for the first and second primaries for Florida voters, so students going home for Easter may register in their home counties for the first and second primaries before the books close.

Registration reopens June 1 for the general election.

New officers for the FSU chapter of Junior Chamber of Commerce are: President, Bill Branch, Vice Presidents, Ray Wingate and Bill Daley; Treasurer, Jim Massey; Secretary, Dave Delmecks.

The next meeting will be Thursday April 2, at 9 p.m. in Room 202, Longmire.

The "Tally-Ho" is in need of staff members to work during III-A. Anyone interested may contact Beth Ann LeGier at the Phi Beta Phi House or Partie Childs at the Chi Omega House, or at the Tally-Ho Office, ext. 239.

Joint Recital To Be Today

Susan Jekel, soprano, and Lyndol Michael, pianist, will present a joint recital today in Opperman.

Miss Jekel, a student of Betty Jane Grimm, is a graduate of Rollins College, Winter Park. Since coming to FSU she has had lead roles in "The Matchmaker," "Dark of the Moon" and "Summer and Smoke." She will sing selections from Bach, Mozart and Faure.

Miss Michael is a piano student of Mary Winslow. She is president of Women's Glee Club and past president of Sigma Kappa. She will play selections from Brahms, Schumann, Rachmaninoff and Mozart.

Cajon Street at Call

The State Symphony of Florida, which, it seems, in the FSU Symphony Orchestra plus a dozen or so faculty members, provided an evening of interesting listening Tuesday night. Rarely have I heard so much contrasting musicianship in one evening.

The program was opened with Shostakovich's old warhorse, The Age of Gold Ballet Suite. The performance was marked by some excellent solo work but had an overall lack of lustre. The brass section, in general, played in a rather club-footed manner in every section but the well-known and oft-hackneyed "Polka." The faculty additions to the woodwind section of the FSU orchestra lived up to expectations and helped the overall wind balance.

The second work on the program was the Mendelssohn E-minor violin concerto. The opening and second movements were read adequately enough and gave one evidence of the virtuosity of Mr. Szeryng's playing beyond a shadow of a doubt. The last movement, unfortunately, developed into a race of sorts, in which Mr. Sedore was soundly defeated.

Granted, the tempo is properly set by the soloist; but how much can one ask of a rather inexperienced orchestra? It seemed as though members of the orchestra were momentarily divided on who to follow: Mr. Sedore or Mr. Szeryng. Fortunately, Mr. Szeryng compromised on the tempo in the last half of the program and the net result was anything but a compromise.

The second half of the program consisted of a playing of the Brahms violin concerto. The performance was superb! In vivid contrast with the first half of the program, everyone managed to play as members of an ensemble rather than as musicians playing individually in tempi and dynamics.

The same strings, which, to, had sounded muddled in the Mendelssohn and Shostakovich works, improved both their unity of entrance and their intonation. Mr. Szeryng's performance of the Brahms concerto was as good as any that I heard of it. The tone that he extracted from the Guarneri violin was lush and at the same time brilliant.

Especially worthy of mention is the way he executed the difficult double and triple stops. His intonation and articulation couldn't have been better. The performance of the Brahms concerto resulted in a standing ovation from the rather appreciative audience.

The difference of the orchestral quality in the performances of the Mendelssohn and Brahms works may have been due, as Mr. Szeryng suggested, to the scoring of the pieces. The Mendelssohn is rather transparent and requires more perfection in entrances and articulation than the Brahms does to achieve the same overall effect.

For an encore Mr. Szeryng played a setting of the Bach G-minor fugue and he proceeded to dazzle everyone again with his perfect double and triple stops.

In an interview with Mr. Szeryng after the concert, I discovered, much to my surprise, that he played the concert without feel Mr. Szeryng said that he likes Tallahassee and the State Symphony and that he wishes to help out in any way possible. One certainly couldn't have done much more. It is his hope that this orchestra will develop in stature and become a significant contributor to the arts in Florida.

Dr. Nielsen's Garden Addition To Campus

Finishing touches are being put on a 140 ft. wide circular garden plot at FSU in which 230 camellias will bloom as a memorial to the late Dr. Chester S. Nielsen, for 17 years associate professor of botany.

Located between Florida Drive and Jefferson Streets, the memorial garden is directly across the street from Landis Hall. Camellias were a hobby of Dr. Nielsen's and his mother, Mrs. Charles M. Nielsen. She gave the 230 plants to FSU. Some of the camellias are from Dr. Nielsen's private collection, most of which he gifted.

Two plants of particular interest in the garden are the Edna Campbell plant, a dark red Camellia with a purple cast, and the Mabel Blackwell plant, white tinged in pink.

Irregular shaped stones are interspersed with grass plots that lead to a memorial marker in the center of the garden. The marker reads: "Chester Sophus Nielsen, June 24, 1911-July 17, 1963, Associate Professor of Botany.—One is nearer God's heart in a garden than anywhere else on earth."

In addition to the initial gift by Mrs. Nielsen, friends and relatives have contributed to the Memorial Garden. Included are Mr. and Mrs.

Albert Nielsen of Anoka, Minnesota, and Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Johnson of Manteno, Ill., cousins of Nielsen.

Members of the committee in charge of the planning of the Memorial Garden include Miss Eva May Atwood, Dr. Ivan Johnson, Henry Martin, who with his crew of workers did the ground breaking and planting; and Ray Green, committee chairman.

A native of Chicago, Ill., Nielsen joined the faculty of Florida State College for Women in 1946. He was chairman of the General Education Biology Course and administered the largest laboratory course of the university's curriculum.

Movie Tonight

"The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance" will be shown in Westcott Auditorium tonight and tomorrow as the Campus Movie.

Beginning at 7:30 p.m., the movie stars James Stewart, John Wayne, Vera Miles, Lee Marvin, Edmond O'Brien and Andy Devine.

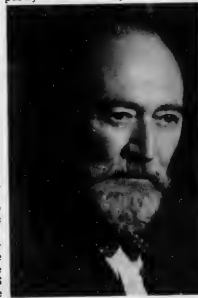

When Liberty Valance terrorizes the small Western town of Shinbone, there are only two men who dare to oppose him. The first is quiet John Wayne, hero of Shinbone and the only man with whom Valance is afraid to tangle. The second stalwart is Jimmie Stewart, the tenderfoot lawyer who is trying to set up a law practice in a lawless town.

Valance chooses the hapless lawyer for a gun fight. John Wayne kills Valance. Stewart accepts the credit, is given the bid for the US Senate, and leaves Wayne to die unwarred and forgotten in Shinbone. Admission will be $.25.

A public lecture on "Classical Humanism and Its Survival" by Prof. Moses Hadas of Columbia University will be a feature of Dr. Hadas' visit on campus following the Easter weekend as Phi Beta Kappa Visiting Scholar.

The public lecture will be at 8 p.m. Monday in Longmire Auditorium. Mrs. Katherine B. Hoffman, chairman of a committee on arrangements, said.

Hadas, who is Jay Professor of Greek and chairman of the Greek and Latin Dept. at Columbia, where he has been on the faculty since 1925, delivered a series of lectures by telephone and Telestar II last year. Sponsored by the Fund for the Advancement of Education, the series on "Great Ideas of Antiquity" went out over a conference telephone, partly transmitted by the Telestar

FSU Sticks Tarheels, 9-0

By BOB CORNET
Flambeau Co-Sports Editor

Marty Howell put together FSU's second shutout of the season, trouncing the North Carolina Tar Heels, 9-0. Howell allowed only four hits in nine innings. He walked one man and struck out three.

Only one Seminole went hitless as the Tribe bombed the three Tarheel pitchers. The sluggers were led by catcher Ken Suarez who went three for three with two singles and a double that gave him two runs batted in.

FSU made its first run, the only one they needed, in the first inning. Mike Augustine singled, trotted to second, and then scored on Bob Wilcox's single to right.

The Tribe picked up three insurance runs in the third. Augustine scored the second run on a walk, a passed ball, and two hits.

The other two runs, Monty McBryde and Larry Johnson, were driven in by Suarez's double to the right field fence.

Suarez scored the fifth run in the sixth stanza. He walked, moved to second on an error by the third baseman Tom Wright, and scored on Jim Reed's base hit to left.

The Tribe grabbed two more "insurance" runs in the seventh inning. McBryde opened the inning with a single to center. Gary Nichols sent him to third with a single to right.

Johnson brought home McBryde with a base hit off the pitchers leg. Gerry Chmielewski drove in Nichols with a sacrifice fly to deep center. FSU took its last two runs in the bottom of the eighth. Reed started the rally with a single through the short stop. He streaked to third on a two base throwing error by the pitcher who tried to pick Reed off first. Augustine sent Reed strollin' home with a booming triple to the center field fence. Nichols got Augustine in on a single to right.

The FSU Cindermen defeated the University of South Carolina yesterday. The final score was 91 to 54. The meet was highlighted by Don Pharis breaking the school record for the pole vault. He cleared 14 feet 6 1/4 inches.

Dick Roberts was also very outstanding as he took first places in the mile record in the 440 yd. run and tied the meet record in the 220 yd. dash.

Al Williams also broke the meet records in the discus and shot put. Other winners for FSU were Al Cato in the 100 yard dash, Floyd Lorente in the high jump, Darryl Guthrie in the triple jump, and FSU's team.

Bert Royce from Ohio State threw the discus 177 feet 10 inches in exhibition. Royce also won in the NCAA Championships.

The win gives FSU a 3-0 record in the meet series.

Leftists Prejudge And Maligned

To the Editor:

Have you ever had a discussion with any leftist acquaintances who make false claim to being liberals? The knowledge that you might hold those opposite ideals knocks the wind out of their sails.

As soon as you bowl over one of their pettides, you lose their friendship. A scowl replaces a smile and they never speak to you again. Except, of course, for sarcasm and insults—reflected behind your back. They will not recognize your right to be different.

Have you ever taken a class taught by a leftist instructor? They become stern and unrelenting in their hate once they have you fixed as different from them. You'll never get a good grade if you let him know that your views do not concur with his on all controversies.

A real liberal is tolerant of all views but a bogus liberal is completely intolerant and has absolutely no respect for your convictions. You won't have a chance in his course if you take the other side.

You'll be graded low because your attitude and personality don't "fit." Yet, in truth, you are the only non-conformist in the class. (Many students have felt this, but have been afraid to speak out.)

Have you ever taken a class with a leftist student in it? If you undermine one of their cherished personal beliefs with a fact, you've lost them for the rest of the term.

They were stupid and comfortable in their dogma and you've disturbed them. They'll either turn their brains off completely, or cut class, or become sullen and sulk and pout, or mutter false accusations under their breath like: "He must be a spy for the John's Committee or a John Birchler or something."

They may even become hostile and aggressive, living for the rare or minuscule exceptions to your useful generalizations; which of course any moron can think up since there are so few universal laws in the social sciences.

After class they run to their little criers somewhere and have their rationalizations reinforced. Then they agree: "He shouldn't be allowed to teach." "He is potentially dangerous." "He must be silenced;" before they run to the administration with trumped-up charges.

Academic freedom is never brought into question when the thoughts of someone other than a leftist are censured.

These little leftist criers are amazing things. With little or no misinformation they prey on and malign people and places. These sessions spawn the grotesque distorted rumors I have encountered in all my travels, their "quasi-official" notes, no regard for the truth.

Their conversation is completely on a different topic, I mean, changes. "Race" is a topic of discussion. They think of nothing else, discuss nothing else, they do else. They must be racist!

There is one school of thought in psychology that says these people believe themselves to be of superior character that they are capable of other members of society. Thus they immerse themselves in a noble cause to gain acceptance by association.

They feel society would be against them if they stood alone. So I join a crusade so they can see themselves that their opponents not against them but are against them. I stand for a sort of "Love me, cause love me."

Another school of thought says the whites who demonstrate vehemently and scream the loudest are the ones who are the most seated hatred against Negroes should otherwise to cover up feelings about it.

Definitely, as so often explained when you debate with them they are angry. They huff and puff and veins stick out on the necks. For their necks get burning red and the collar.

It's at this time, when the case is almost a foregone conclusion, that the adamant authoritarian is like to give my knife another look. I wonder then that the liberal impaled there but just their money and I find it watching them squirm.

They show themselves first as the "right" side, but they can't abide disagreement and live with any truth that cuts with their opinions.

Definitely, they wouldn't climb the rooftops when the universities are an extreme leftist right speak and then remain silent as when the city denies and excommunicates his right to speak. The real champions of liberty are their liberty!

For Governor

Fred Bud Dickinson

In May 1961, Senator Dickinson proposed the Florida Council of 100. Its members include private citizens representing industry, commerce, the professions, and education who serve voluntarily. The Council has a four-fold purpose, promoting: industry, tourism, education, and development of the natural resources of all Florida. Proof that Dickinson has the interests of all Florida at heart are the activities and improvements brought about throughout the entire state by the Council of 100 under his leadership.

Dickinson proved himself one of the most effective lawmakers in Florida's history. He sponsored, or co-sponsored all the important legislation pertaining to schools and agriculture, and was a leader in the fight to streamline Florida's antiquated constitution.

He has never been a one-session representative, but has always worked for all Florida. His voting record in the Legislature, as well as his work as organizer and Chairman of the Council of 100, bears out this fact. Here are a few of the bills Dickinson sponsored:

Bill authorizing state-long turnpikes.
Bill establishing Educational Television Commission.
Judicial Reform Bill setting up District Courts of Appeal in Miami, Orlando and Tallahassee.

Bill requiring non-residents to pay $50 to school tuition instead of getting a free education at the expense of Florida taxpayers.
Amendment to Minimum Foundation Act to improve the school system and increase teacher salaries.

Bill taking sheriffs off the antiquated fee system. Revised citrus codes of 1955, 1957, and 1959.

Resolution to put the 1959 Senate on record against any new taxes and keep spending within income.

Revised State Road Code to set up highway building.
Bill providing penalties for bomb threats to schools, churches and other public buildings.

Bill requiring the Florida State Flag to be flown at public schools.
Bill setting up a screw-worm eradication program.

Bill requiring licensing and inspection of migrant labor camps.
Bill exempting amputees and paraplegics from paying to park at parking meters.

Bill to create Florida Commission on Constitutional Government to alert the public to encroachment of Federal Government on State's rights.
Bill to commit portions of gas tax and license tax revenue to road building.

Bill to control advertising on highways.

Bill to prohibit youths under sixteen years of age from driving motor scooters.

Bill to tighten regulations for closure of unsafe buildings.

Fred Bud Dickinson, Democratic gubernatorial candidate, was born in 1922 in West Palm Beach, Florida. He attended Palm Beach High School, where he organized a student government and became its president. He studied at the University of Florida before the war and then worked his way through John B. Stetson University where he served as president of the student body. He received his law degree in 1948.

Dickinson enlisted as a private in the Marine Corps during WW II and saw combat service from Guadalcanal to Okinawa. He was decorated with the commendation ribbon for bravery and achieved the rank of Lieutenant. The candidate for governor is married to the former Mildred Goddard; the Dickinson family includes four sons and one daughter.

In 1948 Dickinson began private law practice in W. Palm Beach, and became a successful businessman. In 1954 he was elected to the House of Representatives; in 1956 he was elected State Senator. ## BOC Laid Egg With Trimester

To the Editor:

Although the subject of my article may be somewhat less "crucial" than those of more chronic concerns, I also consider about it being less facetious.

To begin, I would first like to congratulate the State Board of Control for the fine work it has done in achieving this University's present academic level.

It is only natural, therefore, that the BOC should strive for improvement, and even more, they seem to have missed the forest for all the trees.

To be blunt, in planning the Trimester system, the BOC has laid an egg. At the present time this system is as useless as some of our campus "philosophers."

Do not misunderstand, for I am not simply echoing some of the childish pleas to "go easy" in Freshman Biology, nor am I complaining about the rapid pace under which we must now live. Again, however, complaints on the lack of time are often well founded.

Support PFCC

To the Editor:

I want to commend you for having James Fields' common sense article in the issue of Friday, March 13th, 1964. As a reader listens to the "candy" of liberals day to day it is a relief to be reminded of the immaturity of children who love the day on the cake even to the point of making themselves sick. Only the wisdom of their old parents saves them from engorging themselves until they are sick.

Pasting the buck of individual responsibility over to other indifferent individuals in a far capital does no guarantee that those individual rulers in the far capital are going to care any more about your welfare than yourself.

I might add that any support you can give to the Public Forum Committee would be appreciated as it, at best, can only provide a minimum of guidance. It is analogous to a parent trying to protect youngsters from the contamination of individuals of ill repute who would destroy their souls.

W. Rogers

Last year, for instance, Dr. Delos DeTar, one of our more distinguished faculty members, wrote about this matter. At that time Professor DeTar was teaching Organic Chemistry at FSU.

Since then, he has been elected as chairman of the Organic Division of the American Chemical Society.

His knowledge and information of his knowledge on the subject, and he openly stated that courses could not be given their due consideration in so short a time.

Thinking of the absence of even a one-day Easter break (and Easter's usual egg hunts) brings me back to my subject, and one need not hunt too far to find the BOC's.

Let's face it, it is almost impossible to maintain the pace without those precious weekends on which to complete the week's assignments.

In thinking of the absence of even a one-day Easter break (and Easter's usual egg hunts) brings me back to my subject, and one need not hunt too far to find the BOC's.

In an attempt to solve the enrollment problem, the Board came up with the Trimester Plan. In effect, with classes open twelve months a year and for WHY?

Freshmen and sophomores will stay and take the various required courses offered in the summer, but what about the upperclassmen in the Advanced Division?

You see, few, if any, advanced courses are offered by the various departments during Trimester III, so how can one move towards degree?

Upon inquiry, I found that the various departments are faced with a very simple problem—finance. It seems that many departments have simply not been allotted the funds to provide teachers for a full 12 months, and teaching just for the hell of it is seldom rewarding.

In an effort to reach some sort of medium, many advanced courses (Comparative Anatomy and the like) are offered during the ridiculous "III" term.

Under this plan a student crams for seven WHOLE weeks, obtains credits, and learns nothing.

There is no need for further complaints, all I ask is that something be done. The "privilege" of graduating sooner is a farce, and I go through an awful lot of trouble for it.

Re: Paul W. Snyder's letter of March 23rd.

I would like to review some of Snyder's "evidence" regarding host cities, youthful demonstrators and stable governments.

First: I am a citizen of the United States of America, and the latest I checked, I found that the city of Tallahassee is located in the United States. Therefore, I do not see in this city anywhere else where I am.

And no matter where I am, I am a citizen of the United States. Being being is not indignantly unfair. I feel that it is not only right but my duty to do so.

Second: The last time I checked the official age of one becoming a voting citizen is 21, not 26.

Third: Mr. Snyder said "These students participate in property destruction, the less stable the nation's government."

I haven't heard about any student protesting in Russia lately, and I go through an awful lot of trouble for it.

Village Vamps

Village Vamps Serve As Official FSU Hostesses

By LINDA DURRANCE
Flambeau Feature Writer

The Village Vamps are a group of FSU coeds who have been selected on the basis of poise, personality, and attractiveness as official FSU hostesses.

VV's date from the days of FSCW. Before 1920 a group of girls began meeting secretly in one of the towers of Bryan Hall as an unofficial clique. This small group of "Village Vanities" was out to beguile and bewitch members of the opposite sex. The customary black dress of VV's began this way.

Village Vamps today are still recognized by their black dresses, but the organization is quite different from the original VV's. The group now meets in several sorority houses and serves the university by welcoming visiting groups to FSU, serving at various teas and receptions, welcoming the football team home after away games, and ushering for major campus functions such as speech presentations and the Artist Series.

Recently elected Village Vamp officers are Beverly Klepp, Chief Heart-breaker (president); Mary Kent Bomar, Chief Two-timer (Vesp); Liz Harper, Keeper-of-dates (secretary); Flo Smith, Chief-gold-digger (treasurer); Jackie Platt, Keyhole Peeper (historian); Kathy DeArmas, Chief Go-getter (projects chairman); and Jane Murrell, assistant projects chairman.

Dr. Stephen S. Winters of the Geology Dept. is faculty sponsor and Mrs. Kay Vernon of Special Events aids Village Vamps in various projects. New members are selected each Fall from freshman and transfer students.

Educators Will Meet At FSU To Discuss New Approaches

Some 40 educators, including administrators from ten American colleges which have pioneered in "significant experiments" in undergraduate education, will meet April 5-8 at FSU for a colloquium on new approaches to undergraduate education.

Most of the four days of discussion will involve new educational programs at these 10 colleges. The representatives will be invited to "tell the story of their college as an experimental institution" to the assembled educators.

The 10 include New College, which will open its doors next September at Sarasota, and Florida Presbyterian College at St. Petersburg, which now is in its fourth year.

Others include older colleges or universities with new kinds of undergraduate programs for part or all of their student body. They are Antioch College at Yellow Springs, Ohio; University of California at Santa Cruz; University of Michigan (Dearborn Campus) and Michigan State University.

Also University of the Pacific at Stockton, California; Parsons College at Fairfield, Iowa; Stephens College at Columbia, Mo.; and Wayne State University's Monmouth College, Detroit.

FSU's committee is headed by Dean Oglesby. Other committee members are Dr. Lawrence Chalmers, Dr. John Folger, Dr. Paul Reynolds, Orwin Rush, Dr. Louis Shores and Dr. Hugh Stickler.

The FSU plan emphasizes free inquiry, discipline, reason, appreciation and health. Under this plan the university will be divided into colleges with the students living in buildings of the college.

In announcing the colloquium, which is believed to be the first of the sort in the country, FSU President Gordon W. Blackwell said that the idea grew out of discussions which were begun two years ago when FSU began looking for an answer to the problem of growing enrollments.

These discussions were held as FSU began looking toward pioneering college for a group of several hundred undergraduates.

Plans for such a college now are maturing enough so that a panel of Florida State educators will disclose them at the Tuesday afternoon session at Wakulla Springs, Dr. Blackwell said.

"I believe the major challenge facing America's large universities lies in the improvement of the educational experience of undergraduates, especially in the freshman and sophomore years, said Blackwell.

"Some program must be developed whereby every undergraduate student has a close and continuous personal involvement with learning even when our enrollment climbs to 15,000."

Mancha Gives Athletic Budget

By AL GALBRAITH

Athletic Director Vaughn Mancha presented the athletic budget for the coming year to Student Senate in a 45-minute address Wednesday afternoon.

Mancha itemized the $792,000 budget, which includes a requested $175,000 from the University Activities budget as drawn up earlier by Secretary of Finance Bill Branch will allot only $140,000 to the athletic budget, which is $10,000 less than was allotted last year.

ELEVEN MEN WERE TAPPED

... Wednesday into Gold Key, leadership honorary for junior and senior men.

New members are Bill Daly, Lex Wood, Sherman Henderson, John Merting, Jim Brandt, Erik Collins, Arnie Gibbs, George Miller, Brian Bibeau, Ray Whitehead, and Alan Roles.

New officers elected Wednesday include President, Ray Whitehead, Vice President, John Jones; Secretary, Erik Collins; Treasurer, Jim Brandt, and Public Relations, John Merting.

Branch replied that next year will be a "year of famine" financially for student activities, and cited the new Student Union and improvements in campus transportation among the reasons for overall budget cut-backs.

The Student Activities and University Activities budgets will be discussed and voted upon in a special Senate meeting at four o'clock this afternoon.

Four bills and two resolutions were passed in a flurry of last-minute legislation, including a bill which was amended after presidential veto sent it back to the Judicial and Rules committee.

The vetoed bill revising court investigating procedures, was introduced by Senator Jeanie Williamson four weeks ago and was passed unanimously the following week. After receiving presidential veto, the committee met with the student body president and drew up two amendments which make the Attorney General a member of the investigating committee and remove the Chief Justice of Honor Court from the investigation.

The amended bill was re-introduced and passed unanimously Wednesday.

A bill which unifies the organization of Men's Senate was passed after approval by the Organizations and Finances committee. The bill was introduced last week by Men's Vice President Frank Ryll.

The third bill considered Wednesday sets up the summer government structure for Trimester III. The bill provides for filling of vacancies, and also calls for a special election the third Tuesday of Trimester III to select nine students to serve as senators-at-large with the class and precinct senators who are enrolled.

I also hope to see more interest shown in the two-party system this fall and hope that more students will display their interest in Student Government through running or supporting students in the fall elections.

"I further hope to clarify some of the Elections Regulations that have caused confusion in the past. I feel that these changes will provide for a fairer and more efficient elections procedure."

Dr. J.H. Taylor Speaks Tonight

Dr. J. Herbert Taylor, new professor in the Biological Sciences and Institute of Molecular Biology, will speak to the chapter of Sigma Xi society on "Sex Chromosomes and Control of Development" at 8 p.m. in the Suwannee Room.

Among techniques of genetics which have become standard procedures since he developed the use of using radioactive labels with tritium and other isotopes to enable micro-photographs to be made of the detailed structure of chromosomes. These carry the genes which determine the nature of living organisms—the genetic material.

Hoffman Featured In Final Last Lecture Series

By KATHY ACKENHUSEN

Final lecture of the Last Lectures sponsored by Mortar was given by Dr. Dorothy Hoffman of the Modern Languages Wednesday night. Mrs. Hoffman spoke on the subject, "The Last Lecture."

Life is the full range of imagination, and should be enjoyed not only in the present, but as a companion. In a dream "Mrs. Hoffman emphasized. A supreme example is the character of Don Quixote in the classic Cervantes. When he encounters the huge windmills, he believed they were fierce giants to be conquered. Nothing could discourage him in his efforts to destroy them. He was driven by internal forces wanting in the external world to make him swerve from his path.

The world needs greater imaginative thought and more analytical minds according to Mrs. Hoffman. This can be an armament and a fortitude in the mind. However, nobody wants to be an innovator. People would rather follow along on the ideas of the past and of other men.

In opposition to this, Mrs. Hoffman says, "If the world is out of joint, who wants to be adjusted to it?" On man out of step, one man hearing the beat of another drum is what the world is sometimes unconsciously in need of. Great accomplishments in all fields have been made by men who dared to follow their dreams. There will be times of conflict in which old traditions will be challenged, but the spirit of dissent is the life blood of progress.

Sports Notes

Sluggers Rack Up 13—3 Record

Seminole baseball, track, golf and tennis teams went through a heavy schedule of events during the past week, at home and away.

The Tribe sluggers improved their record to 13-3 in the Florida State Invitational Tournament on Seminole Field. The Seminole beat Amherst, 5-0; Duke, 10-4; North Carolina, 17-3; and Michigan State, 10-5.

The baseballers lost to Wake Forest 6-4, Tuesday.

Thinclads Win 3rd Dual Meet

The thinclads won their third dual meet last Thursday by taking South Carolina, 91-54. The Track team placed fifth behind North East Louisiana State at the Florida Relays Saturday.

The Tribe scored 21 points by winning two events. Al Williams won the shot put and the 440 relay team took that event. Hutch Johnson, Jerry McDaniel, Bob Sable, and Al Cato were members of the relay team.

Golf Team Places Second

The golf team placed second to the University of Miami at the Miami Invitational Tournament, Saturday. In dual meets the golf team is now 7-0.

FSU Netters Swat Jackets, 5-4

The Tribe netters pulled out a victory over the Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets, 5-4, Saturday in Atlanta.

At home the tennis squad defeated Hope College, 9-0, Monday; and Amherst, 7-2, Monday.

Valdosta State fell to the Seminole netters, 7-0, Wednesday. This brings the netters' record to 9-7.

By JOHN WOOD
Flambeau Sports Writer

A bases loaded single into left center field by Larry Johnson with two out and bases loaded in the tenth sent Mike Augustine home with the winning run in a hard fought Seminole baseball win over visiting Michigan State, 7-6. Coach Danny Whiler, who went to Michigan State from FSU last trimester, used five pitchers against the Seminole hitting attack in the final game of a two game series Thursday afternoon at Seminole field.

Catcher Ken Suarez paced the Tribe offense with three singles in five times at bat, including a single in the bottom of the ninth which made the tie ball game possible by scoring one run and sending the tying run to third.

Relief pitcher Ken Creely, who doesn't like to start a ball game, was credited with the win, coming in in the top of the ninth.

The Spartans jumped off to a 3-0 lead with three home runs, two of which came back to back in the second inning. FSU did not score until the fourth frame. Then they pushed four runs across on two hits and two errors by MSU.

Michigan State knotted the score again in the top of the fifth, thanks to an error by Tribe second baseman Jim Reed. Another error, this one credited to right fielder Tom Thomas, allowed the Spartans to take the lead again in the seventh, 5-4.

The visitors added an insurance run in the top of the ninth when Tribe third baseman Gerry Chmielewski overthrew to first and allowed a Spartan runner to race home from second.

The Tribe sent the game into extra innings by scoring two runs in the bottom of the ninth. After Tom Thomas, the leadoff hitter, was hit by a pitched ball, Gary Nichols sent Thomas to second with a single to right, and set the stage for the Suarez rap which scored Thomas and sent Dave Dahlen running for third.

Gene Ready, who was coaching at first base, came in to bat for pinch hitter Randy Brown, who was batting for Chmielewski, and sent a towering sacrifice fly to the left field fence to score Dahlen from third.

In the top of the tenth, Michigan State threatened again. Ten straight balls by pitcher Creely gave two Spartans a free pass to first.

After Manager Hatfield made his first appearance of the day, to calm Creely down, the Seminole put out the fire by forcing one Spartan at third on an attempted bunt and getting the next two batters to pop out.

FSU started the bottom of the tenth, against the fifth Spartan hurler, with a bang. Centerfielder Mike Augustine got on after a Michigan State error, and moved to second was fielder Monty McBryde beat the bunt.

After a sacrifice hunt by the Spartans who came in for regular pitcher Bob Wilcox when he was hit by a pitched intentional walk to the fourth inning, the Spartans gave an intentional walk to Larry Johnson's single with the bases loaded ended the scoring.

Oglesby Returns To Teaching After Resignation Is Effective

"My memory holds the past and yet paradoxically knows at the same time that the past is gone and will never come again. It cherishes past faces, silenced voices and the lost evenings of childhood. And yet these memories will have more permanency in the great dance of my dream world than they ever had in the world of reality. So I expect to go on," stated Dean R.R. Oglesby in a speech delivered at the SG Banquet Tuesday night.

Dr. Oglesby, Dean of Students, will return to teaching July 1 when his resignation from the post he has held 10 years becomes effective. Dean Oglesby has been closely connected with FSU students in his job as administrator. He has been primarily responsible for registering students, counseling them, housing them, providing them needed scholarships or loans, providing recreation for them, caring for them when they are sick, providing religious counsel, exercising discipline when necessary and helping place them in jobs when they leave the university. During his 10 years as Dean, Oglesby has become a favorite of students, who have been among the most frequent visitors to his office in Westcott. Callers usually have found him in a cloud of smoke from his pipe and a cloud of dreams about his and a cloud of dreams about his one favorite campus projects which one after another have become realities. Alumni Village, Kellum Hall, and Dormant Hall have been some of Oglesby's dreams which have become realities. The new student union was also a dream of the dean.

Various student activities and associations on campus in which Oglesby was instrumental in organizing or expanding include the FSU Circus, Marching Chiefs' band, Gymkana, development of new and expanded intramural programs, gaining national recognition of student government, developing student publications, establishing a student publications lab which does the composition of newspaper and magazine and yearbook for production. Oglesby will return to his first love, teaching. He will resume teaching under the Government Dept. "So as I conclude a decade of service as your Dean of Students, I am thankful for many things -- not only for your love and trust, but for the excitement of our shared aspirations for our University; for the moments of beauty and hope we have shared in song, festival and pagentry; for the bonds of warmth and understanding that have grown from the exciting discovery of mutual agreement; for your shared faith, for though winter is in my hair you have helped me keep spring in my heart.

"So thanks for the memories which still hold; not only of a loved face of ten years ago which is still before me, but for your fresh and expectant faces before me tonight which will live on with me in the afterglow," concluded Dean Oglesby.

Before coming to FSU, Oglesby was dean of students at Oklahoma State University, Sweet Briar, and University of Kentucky. Oglesby that, he taught political science at Duke University, George Washington University, Sweet Briar, and where he majored in English.

Dr. R. Spivey Appointed As New Chaplain

"I look forward to coming to Florida State with great anticipation," says Dr. Robert Spivey, recently appointed University Chaplain beginning July 1, 1964.

Spivey, presently serving as assistant professor of religion and acting chaplain of Williams College, comments that the growth, flexibility, and state of flux at FSU "makes one feel that his presence may be extremely significant in shaping the future."

"I wanted to return to the South because my roots are here and because the South is presently in a state of transition and consequently one of the most exciting part of the country, especially in higher education."

The Chaplain added that he decided to come to FSU because its relatively short history as a University mirrors all the problems and possibilities of a university community."

Senior Class To Donate $800 For Purchase Of New Pianos

CONCERT GRAND PIANO

Approximately $800 is being presented to FSU as the 1964 Senior Class Gift for the purchase of pianos to be placed in the new University Student Union.

Since 1959, the graduating classes have designated that their gifts to the University be kept on deposit in a special fund to provide pianos for the new Union.

The class of '64's gift marks the largest donation thus far in the fund. The pianos will cost more than $4,000.

It is hoped that the University will be able to buy two concert grand pianos, one 9 foot and 7 foot, in concert ebony finish along with one spinnet accosonic piano in ebony with the money from senior class gifts.

Senior Class President Tom Haney said in presenting the money that "the FSU School of Music is undoubtedly one of the finest in the South, but up until now the facilities have not been up to par with talent."

This is an awful picture of a Volkswagen.

It's just not us.

We don't go in much for trading bees or sales jamborees or assorted powwows.

Maybe it's because we don't quite understand the system.

We've never figured out why they run clearance sales on brand new cars.

If there are cars left over every year, why make so many in the first place?

And how come the price goes down, even though the cars are still brand new?

How does the poor guy who bought one last week feel about this week's prices?

How can a dealer keep enough parts on hand when they all keep changing?

How can a mechanic keep track of what he's doing?

It's all very confusing.

Either we're way behind the times. Or way ahead.

WHO SAID

Foreign Study is for Language Majors
Only.

Of course, it's for them, too.

But it's also for undergrads in history, political science, international relations, economics, psychology, philosophy and some other fields.

We know. Over half the students in our university centers in Europe aren't language majors. They're pursuing studies in their own fields, and giving them a fresh, European dimension—without interrupting their college careers.

Foreign study may suit you, too. (It isn't for everyone.) This is the time of life when the experience of Europe can mean most. It will mean most if you use it to deepen and extend your formal studies.

You might look into it—and learn about our programs, including a new one opening next fall at the University of Madrid.

Our centers don't offer mere "civilization" courses. They aren't quick little "ghettos" for Americans. Institute programs immerse you in a great European university as deeply as your abilities allow. (We supplement and guide your studies, as necessary, to make sure they satisfy U. S. requirements.)

Snyder Rates Judo Black Belt

"I got mad because some little fellow could throw me around, so I decided to learn more about the sport," said FSU's only Judo Black Belt, Walt Snyder. Black Belt is the highest rank in judo.

Snyder won his Black Belt in December, 1962, at a meet in St. Petersburg. There he went before a reviewing board of Black Belts to demonstrate his form and technique. He also had to fight in his weight class for two days to show his fighting abilities. Since that time he has fought two more Black Belts, from Homestead, and defeated them both. Snyder has participated in judo for five years, starting in high school. It took him three years to get through first degree brown belt, the last position before winning the black belt.

In judo there are six under don degrees ranging from one to six. These degrees are divided into white and brown belts.

The Black Belt contains ten degrees, from one to ten. There is only one tenth degree Black Belt, an 86 year old Japanese. There are no non-Asiatics above the fifth degree.

Through the fifth degree, said Snyder, advancements are made by knowledge and competitive ability. Above the fifth they are made on knowledge of the art.

Judo is the second fastest growing sport by percentage in the United States, said Snyder. He is aiding this growth by sponsoring a Judo Club on campus.

The Club, organized four years ago, meets in the Wrestling Room of the men's gym every Tuesday and Thursday afternoon and Saturday mornings. Once a month they participate in meets.

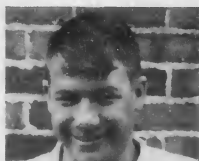

The Club has a steady group of 15 members, two brown belts and the rest white belts. Last year the group won second place at the Annual Southeastern Judo Meet at Gainesville.

Floyd, 37, joined the FSU faculty when he had scarcely turned 21 in 1947. While teaching piano and composition he composed five music dramas. "Susannah," his most famous work, received the New York Music Critics Circle Award as the best new opera of 1956. It was performed before audiences all over the nation and at the Brussels World's Fair. "Professor Floyd has been effective in attracting to the campus new creative talent in all fields of music and in encouraging its development," said a citation read by Dr. Laurence Chalmers, assistant dean of the faculties, after announcing Floyd's selection by a vote of the faculty.

"He has coached singers, taught pianists who are well on their way to professional careers, and has taught award-winning young composers. He has been a source of inspiration to all ambitious young artists at the University and he has provided leadership in the University, the community and the state in the development of the arts."

Floyd, the eighth Distinguished Professor, received a cash award of $500.

His selection was announced at the spring commencement. At the same time, Chalmers announced the selection of Mrs. Katherine B. Hoffman, assistant professor and associate chairman of the Department of Chemistry, by the Coyle E. Moore Jr. Award for Outstanding Excellence in Teaching. A $500 prize went also with this award.

Mrs. Hoffman, a native of Winter Haven, joined the FSU staff as half-time instructor in 1940. She has written two books, "Chemistry For The Applied Sciences," was published in 1963 by Prentice Hall, and another book, designed to interest the layman and young student in biochemistry.

Mrs. Hoffman is the wife of Harold Hoffman, head of the feed laboratory and associate state chemist with the Department of Agriculture.

"The recipient has enjoyed the respect of students and colleagues alike for her devotion to her profession in the classroom, in research and writing, in administration, and in the leadership in the scholarly honor societies on campus," said her citation.

Organist Gives Recital Tonight

Jones, Rackleff Represent FSU At SG Conclave

Student Body President, John Jones, and Sec. of Intercollegiate and Public Affairs, Bob Rackleff, attended the organizational conference of the Associated Student Governments of the U.S.A. in St. Louis, Missouri, April 19-19.

The first general session was the evening of April 17. The purpose of the new national organization and the first draft of the proposed internal constitution were presented.

It was emphasized that the organization is designed to improve student government around the nation through the exchange of ideas, and that the organization will be devoid of political interest.

The constitution which the delegates drew up is to be temporary and it will become void upon the adoption of a permanent constitution by the First National Convention of the Associated Student Governments of the U.S.A. in November, 1964.

After the interim constitution was adopted, the assembly turned to consideration of finances and the election of members of the Executive Council.

During the conference the FSU delegates set out a display of FSU student government publications and stood by to answer any questions about student government and the University.

Student government material consisted of the FSU Student Government Constitution and Statutes, the Honor Code, "This is Your Student Government," a booklet on the SG retreat, a list of activities sponsored by SG, and an overview of FSU SG.

FSU student publications on display included the "Paw-Wow," the "IFC rush booklet,"

"While at the conference, the FSU delegates, through the presentation of FSU materials and thoughtful suggestions in committee meetings and the general assemblies, did much to inform the other participating universities of the effectiveness of student government at FSU," stated Jones.

"Because of FSU's outstanding student government, FSU has excellent opportunities to assume positions of leadership within this national organization, as well as benefiting from new ideas," he continued.

"The FSU delegate feels that it would be beneficial for FSU to associate with ASCSJA and promote the greatest University in the South on a national level, in addition to its present role on the regional level," concluded Jones.

A River Steamboat from the Old South drifted by on the Suwannee River during last year's trip to the Stephen Foster Memorial.

Trips, Reviews, Movies Set For Trimester 3-A

Carlisle Floyd Gallery Selects Two Works Of Dr. Karl Zerbe

Karl Zerbe, professor of art at FSU, has been selected to participate in the first exhibit of Art Gallery--'64 at the New York World's Fair.

Zerbe's two paintings, "TV Face #6" and "Two Bearded Men," will be hung in the only major exhibit at the World's Fair devoted solely to contemporary American art. Professor of Art at FSU since 1954, Zerbe's works have appeared in permanent collections of nearly every major museum in the U.S., including the Whitney, Metropolitan, and Modern Art museums in New York, the Art Institute of Chicago, and Boston's Museum of Fine Arts. Born in Berlin, Zerbe came to the United States in 1934, after studying art in Germany, Italy and France. He headed the Department of Painting at the School of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston from 1937 until accepting his present position at FSU.

Currently a director of the College Art Association, Zerbe is a past president of the Artist Equity Association and recently received a grant from the Ford Foundation for a retrospective exhibition. Last year he was awarded a Doctorate in Fine Arts at FSU.

Other awards include a citation from the Conference on Creative Arts, sponsored by Boston University and the Purchase Prize of the University of Illinois.

Zerbe lives in Tallahassee with his wife, the former Marion Koenig of Worcester, Mass. They have a married daughter, Maria Norton. Art Gallery--'64 is the product of two Manhattan attorneys, Warren Small and George Bresler, who are also art collectors.

Welcome ?

Welcome all young eager freshmen and salutations to all the rest of you that couldn't find a job this summer like yours truly.

They tell us Tallahassee is a great place to be away from in the summer. If the first two days are any indication, we are going to honor those prophets, even in their own country.

Due to the lack of money in the "Flambeau" budget after last year, we have been forced to reduce the size of the paper for the summer issues which will appear irregularly each Friday.

We thought there for a while that Your Friend, the honorable John E. Jones, grand imperial potentate of the student body, was going to be able to come through with some much needed cash.

However, disaster has struck again, and the prospects now appear dim. In fact they appear so dim that they are nonexistent.

Ah well, we didn't want to be informed anyway.

On a more serious note, Miss Marie Williams, director of Social Activities, has done an outstanding job in arranging activities during the coming summer months. She has gone to great lengths to provide the student body with a list of varied and interesting trips including deep sea fishing, a tour of the tobacco auction in Moultrie, Ga., and expeditions to Florida Caverns.

Sunday, she has arranged for buses to take us to the Stephen Foster Memorial for the Florida Folk Festival. Here is your opportunity to escape those same four walls and Walt Disney downtown for a pleasant trip and an interesting program.

The opportunities are provided, it is up to you to take advantage of them.

Please, mother, this is the third trimester, not summer school.

Construction seems to be going along quite nicely on the new student union and the swimming pool. What do you want to bet they get the bowling alleys and billiard rooms done before they complete the office space?

We certainly live in a strange world when our Union comes equipped with all the sins of leisure while we are crying for more classrooms.

Fear not, WFSU-FM, we have not yet begun to fight.

Anybody obtaining a key to any door in Longmire please see John Jones, he would like to know how you did it.

What do you do when you are here in the nation's capital and your fiancé is in Miami having a flake?

'My Fair Lady' Cast Chosen

The cast for "My Fair Lady," which will be presented at FSU May 22-23, was announced today by the FSU School of Music.

Richard Collins, musical director and the director of FSU's Opera Guild, will conduct the orchestra in the performances.

Cast members include Sarah Hanna, Mrs. Eynsford-Hill; Rose Mary Minihan, Eliza Doolittle; Jim Haygood, Freddy Eynsford-Hill; Lonnie Keene, Colonel Pickering; and Tom Cavendish, Henry Higgins.

Also Jack Simmons, Alfred P. Doolittle; Martha Wilson, Mrs. Pearce; Jo Stripling, Mrs. Higgins; Martha Meyer, Mrs. Hopkins; Sam Welch, Zoltan Karpathy; Joe Napoli, Jamie; Dean Woodworth, Harry and Patricia Winner, Flower Girl.

The musical, by Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Lowe, set a world record by running for 2717 performances (seven years) on Broadway. It grossed more than $20 million at the box office.

FSU Has Department Of Octopus Catching

You can't go out and buy an octopus every day but if you are an experienced skindiver like FSU graduate student John Couch you can go down to the Gulf and catch one.

Couch a 26-year-old student from Pensacola, received a master of science degree at FSU this spring. His research project as a major in parasitology was a study of a parasite living in the kidneys of the octopus. He needed a lot of specimens in the course of more than a year's study so he had to make five trips to the Gulf. Two of his favorite octopus-hunting places were St. Andrews Bay at Panama City and the deep water of the open Gulf around the radar tower of the Naval Mine Defense Laboratory.

Even before he began using the octopus in his own research, Couch began to earn a name as one of the Gulf coast's principal octopus catchers. In the summer of 1962, he began catching them for Dr. R. B. Short, professor of zoology at FSU. Short has had graduate students at work for several years on studies of octopus parasites called dicyemid mezozoans. During this first collecting period Couch caught from 70 to 75 octopuses for dissection by Short and his students.

"The best way to catch an octopus," said Couch, "is to go to the bottom of the sea where he lives, find his den and coax him out. It is easy to find the dens, which are simply holes in the bottom. The dens are strewn with the shells of blue crabs, oysters, clams and cockles which the octopus has eaten.

"I take a net down with me and also a small plastic squeeze bottle filled with formaldehyde. I squirt the formaldehyde into the den and the octopus moves to get away from the irritant.

"When the octopus comes out I grab him by the body and quickly thrust him into the net.

Short and his students have been patiently accumulating new knowledge about various species of the parasite, a microscopic creature whose life history is almost unknown outside of the part it spends as a harmless dweller in the kidney tissues of the octopus.

A controversy has raged for years about the mesozoan, a simple creature which is put together out of less than two dozen undifferentiated cells. Some biologists think it is a primitive form in the evolutionary scale, between the protozoans and the metazoans; others think it is a form which has become degenerate by reason of its parasitism.

Short and his students have been studying parasites from the octopus collected from many parts of the world. One student, Robert K. Ridley, is now aboard the National Science Foundation Research Ship Eleni which is cruising some of the waters of the Antarctic collecting any octopuses which turn up in a dredge.

Couch had hardly begun his research on parasites when he discovered a new species. This was from an octopus he captured in Pensacola Bay in the summer of 1963. He wrote his master's thesis on the discovery.

Despite the romantic tales of flights to the death with an octopus (the most notable was Victor Hugo's famous account in "Tollers of the Sea") Couch has found little to cause terror in the behavior of the common octopus, Octopus vulgaris, which lives on the ocean bottom.

He has caught octopuses ranging from a tentacle spread of about one foot to a tentacle spread of four or more feet.

"I did get a scare once at Panama City when I was octopus-hunting in 55 feet of water. I saw one as big as any I've seen, with eight two-foot-long tentacles. I flushed him out of his den under a pipe and grabbed him, but he also grabbed me—and pulled off my face mask. We had quite a little struggle.

"It's pretty disconcerting for a diver to have his face mask pulled off. After I had found mine, cleared it and was able to look around, I saw the octopus on a piling not far away. By that time he was more tired than I was and I was able to bag him and then surface."

In order to bring the octopuses back alive, Couch partly fills a milk can with sea water and puts the octopus inside.

A Freudian Analysis of the Remington Lektronic II

It's a mature shaver. There's no unnatural dependence upon a cord. Built-in, rechargeable energy cells let you shave cordlessly. In case you forget to recharge, there is a cord. Plug it in. Shave on the spot. That makes you feel secure.

And you'll feel secure about your appearance, too. 348 cutting edges of durable high-carbon steel slice whiskers off cleanly. They're honed on an angle so that skin doesn't get ploughed up and irritated.

The LEKTRONIC II will give you a superiority complex. It has a big head. Shaving head, that is. 756 whisker-gathering slots feed whiskers to the cutters faster. Make short work of shaving.

Now here's the part masochists hate: the Roller Combs. They make shaving pure comfort. Roll skin down. Pop whiskers up into cutters, so they're stroked off gently.

What's the greatest Freudian benefit of the REMINGTON LEKTRONIC II?

IT MAKES YOU LOOK SEXY!

The LEKTRONIC II may cost a little more than most electric shavers. That's because it's worth more. LEKTRONIC: Trademark. Shaver: Patent. REMINGTON ELECTRIC SHAVERS, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Nursing Grad Writes Of Peace Corps

An FSU graduate has described her experience as a pioneer member of the Peace Corps in the May issue of the FSU Alumni Bulletin and says the organization is "perhaps one of the greatest ideas ever to develop in America."

Malinda DuBoise, a 1958 nursing graduate, served two years on the British West Indies island of St. Lucia. She worked in the field of health education and assisted in the island's health program. She is currently studying for a master's degree in public health nursing at the University of California.

Miss DuBoise was among the first to respond to the late President Kennedy's call for Peace Corps volunteers.

She writes that the experience "will in time to come be measured as one of the most valuable of my life. "I have gained a keener appreciation of my own country. I now feel a greater responsibility in regard to the role which our country must play in the world today."

Governor Colored At Commencement

An honorary Doctor of Laws degree was awarded Gov. Farris Bryant at the FSU spring commencement ceremonies April 18. In conferring the degree President Gordon W. Blackwell told the 34th governor:

"You are recognized for your ability as a debater and you are known as one of the most articulate men in Florida public life. A dedicated proponent of higher education, you have shown extraordinary qualities of leadership and service to your state in this field."

Two other honorary degrees were conferred at the commencement. There were 1166 candidates for regular degrees, including 1064 candidates for a bachelor's degree, 141 for a master's and 21 for a doctorate.

The other honorary degrees were a Doctor of Science degree given to Edwin Arnold Mendenhall, former publisher of the Snart News and a plantman who has grown from seed and distributed to American home-owners more than 4,000 flowers of the tropics; and a Doctor of Letters degree to Dorothy Barclay Thompson, an alumna of 1938 who was one of the first women in the "New York Times" for more than 12 years.

The commencement speaker was Dr. Fred Harvey Harrington, president of the University of Wisconsin, who summarized his remarks to graduates in these words:

"Our future in America is the future of the world. We are not accustomed to thinking in global terms; our whole tradition is national and of the Western world—not universal. But if we are to survive we must broaden our view."

"Our future in America depends upon joining sciences and the humanities; in linking research and action; in respecting tradition but in endorsing change; and in remembering that each of us as an individual bears a responsibility for all mankind."

Dr. Blackwell told the graduates: "We are today engaged in the most crucial battle in the history of the world—the battle for the minds of men. The success in this struggle will depend in part on how well we at the Florida State University have accomplished our goal of providing sound educational programs and experiences for each of you, and how well each of you has taken advantage of the opportunities offered here."

"We are deeply concerned that your life will be meaningful. We are concerned too that your few short years with us will ripen into a life-long association—that you will continue to share your time and thoughts with us as alumni, as continuing students, and as devoted friends of your alma mater."

The special degrees for Gov. Bryant and the two other honorees were the 22nd, 23rd and 24th ever given by FSU. Other holders have included Ruth Bryant, Owen Rhode, Philip Wylie, Millard Caldwell, Spensard Holland, Leroy Collins and George A. Smathers.

Bryant, 49, was honored particularly for his contributions in public life but Blackwell also mentioned his co-authorship of a political science text, "Government and Politics in Florida," used in state universities.

The citation summarized Bryant's career during which he has served five terms in the House and in 1983 was chosen speaker. The citation noted his selection by colleagues or news correspondents several times as "most valuable member."

The citation of Menninger, 68, a native Kansan, noted that while pursuing a botanical hobby and collecting flowering trees, he had vastly enriched the landscape of Florida and other states and also had contributed greatly to horticultural knowledge.

"Among your many publications, 'Flowering Trees of the World,' a major achievement in the field of botany, is the most valuable and sensitive work on this topic," the citation said.

The citation of Mrs. Thompson said that by her editorial work and authorship she had had an immeasurable influence on the development of parent education in this country. Formerly of Miami, Mrs. Thompson said that by her editorial work and authorship she had had an immeasurable influence on the development of parent education in this country. She is the wife of Stephen C. Thompson, an architectural writer.

FSJ To Open New Institute

Florida State University announced it will hold a Delinquency Control Institute this summer during which police officers and others will make a four-week intensive study of delinquency and its control.

Under the direction of Dr. Vernon Fox, chairman of the Department of Corrections and Criminology, the Institute will be held June 16 through July 11.

On completing the course students will be eligible for four hours of college credit.

This year's institute, Fox said, will emphasize juvenile court philosophy and procedure, law enforcement, and understanding delinquency as an emotional disturbance.

Other phases of delinquency control will be emphasized in two succeeding summer institutes. Students may attend these in sequence and earn 12 hours of credit.

Four Monticello Students Receive New Scholarships

Four students from Jefferson County High School in Monticello have been awarded scholarships for studies at FSU beginning in September.

The four-year scholarships, made possible by a grant of $10,000 from Healthways, Inc., were announced by Healthways' president, A. N. Watson. The winners are John Lesk-Kant, Donna Stover, Catherine Barton and Linda Oder. All are seniors. Healthways, Inc., a private foundation, purchased the four continuing scholarships from the Southern Scholarship and Research Foundation.

The scholarship foundation is a non-profit corporation providing special housing for outstanding students in need of assistance.

Each of the four students ranked to receive scholarships for the 1980-81 year. A distinguished record of academic achievement and extracurricular activity at Jefferson County High School is a requirement of the Student Council, which is interested in marine biology, chemistry and physics in science. Another future teacher is Miss Stover who wants to major in human economics.

Ford Gives Study Grant

A grant of $200,000 to FSU for five years of studies of the fast-growing Cape Kennedy area was announced in New York today by the Ford Foundation.

The grant is to the Institute for Social Research, directed by Dr. Charles M. Grigg, a sociologist. Studies will concern population, local government and housing and other problems of a fast growing seacoast area. The Institute also will provide consultant services.

Working with the Institute will be FSU's Institute of Governmental Research under the direction of Dr. Albert Sturm.

In announcing the grant, Henry T. Hiest, president of the Ford Foundation, said that in contrast to areas of the country where rapid expansion occurred for some 200 years before planning was done, "the Cape Kennedy area already has agencies concerned with determining the best ways to provide for a population expected to increase vastly by 1970."

Efforts of the University, said Dr. Grigg, are to be coordinated with those of the East Central Florida Regional Planning Council, the Governor's Impact Committee (which is concerned with problems of industrial growth and development) and the Community Development Unit of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The Institute presently is at work on a similar, one-year study for NASA, which has provided a $55,000 grant for a series of studies on the effects of the space program on the environment, of utility-financing and community problems.

Among the initial studies, Grigg said, will be an estimation of population increases for the seven-county area for which two sample surveys will be made yearly. The counties are Brevard, Volusia, Indian River, Osceola, Orange, Seminole and Lake.

According to Grigg, Brevard County increased in population from 32,653 in 1950, to 111,435 in 1960, and with an accelerated space program and the emphasis on the moon shot it is estimated the population will pass 160,000 this year.

"The challenge of this program to the faculty is that it presents the opportunity of studying and guiding the development of a metropolitan area from its early stages of growth," Grigg said.

"It will provide a laboratory for the social scientists and the urban planners within which to apply their present techniques and skills."

FSU Psychologist Chosen For Study

...brunette psychologist at ...one of 15 graduate students ...country who will take part in ..."matchmaking" project ...the and computers this sum-is currently working on her Ph.D. in experimental psychology at FSU, has been chosen from a national field of graduate students for summer fellowship research at the Systems Development Corporation in Santa Monica, Calif.

The non-profit organization, spec-talting in research related to national progress and defense, has selected Mrs. Martin, a psychologist, and other human behavior specialists to work on projects which correlate the responses of men to major electronic control systems and computers.

In a day and age when large-scale command and control systems dictate top-level business and military decisions, it is vital that the men behind the machines must be the kind who can and will make our push-button destiny a good one, says Mrs. Martin. The area of SOC research to which she will be assigned will deal also with the functional use of men and space in regard to machines used in data processing and decision making.

Interest in computers runs in Mrs. Martin's family, which is giving her a leave-of-absence to accept the fellowship. Her husband, Donald C. Martin, also an FSU graduate student, is majoring in statistics and is employed by the University's Computing Center. Each hopes to complete requirements for the doctoral degree at FSU next December. The Martins have two children, aged 8 and 9, and now call Tallahassee home, although Mrs. Martin is a native of New York and a longtime resident of Jacksonville Beach. She received her bachelor's degree from the University of Florida's College of Fine Arts and Architecture, and her master's degree in psychology from FSU's College of Arts and Sciences.

U.S., Canadian Greeks' Praise Free Enterprise At World's Fair Exhibit

The contributions of fraternities and sororities to the cause of higher education in American and Canadian colleges and universities is told to the world at the New York World's

The story is portrayed in a special exhibit jointly sponsored by the National Interfraternity Conference and the National Panhellenic Conference in the huge Hall of Free Enterprise on the International Plaza of the fair grounds.

The Hall of Free Enterprise itself, which is sponsored by the American Economic Foundation, is a comprehensive and dramatic presentation of the blessings and benefits of the free enterprise system of the Americas and other parts of the Western world in keeping with the general theme of the mammoth pavilion, the national fraternity and sorority exhibit will be entitled: Young partners in Free Enterprise.

In order to accommodate the thousands of visitors from all over the world who attend the fair and see the exhibit, special guides are on duty to help explain the various features of the display and distribute literature containing basic information about the fraternity and sorority systems. The guides are drawn principally from the ranks of the field secretaries and representatives of member organizations of the two sponsoring conferences.

The displays in the exhibit include realistic portrayals of how fraternities and sororities develop campus loyalty, provide valuable citizenship training, encourage scholarship, promote high standards of conduct, teach business management, and inculcate the best traditions of citizenship in everyday living.

Many little-known but significant facts about the fraternity and sorority system are highlighted in the exhibit for public edification. Examples of these are such statements that more than 75% of all funds contributed by individuals to institutions of higher learning are given by fraternity men and sorority women, and the fact that over 70% of fraternity and sorority members complete their college courses as compared with only 50% of non-fraternity students.

Sponsors of the exhibit hope that not only will the principles and traditions of the fraternity and sorority systems be reaffirmed for undergraduate and alumni members alike who visit the fair but, more importantly, become better understood by the general public and the young people who will become students at colleges and universities in future years.

One Act Plays Set By Theater

Two one act plays, "The American Dream" by Edward Albee and "The Bald Soprano" by Eugene Ionesco will be presented by FSU's University Theater during trimester III-A.

The plays will be presented May 27 through 31. Graduate student Sammy Kilman will be the director. Kilman has made a study of the popular avant garde theater movement which these plays represent. He plans a graduate thesis on the subject. As part of the thesis study, he directed two one acts last fall, "The Maids" and "The Dumbwaiter."

Albee is well known for his recent New York hit "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" Ionesco's "The Bald Soprano" was performed at FSU two years ago by French players making an American tour.

love and marriage-college style

The bridge from student to married student is a long and very narrow one, laced with parental opposition, financial burdens and immaturity. Yet, thousands of young men and women cross it every year.

How well do they make the transition from carefree, fun-loving "dates" to responsible husbands, wives... and often parents?

A recent nationwide study by Redbook magazine brings to light some of the strains, the dangers and the possible benefits of college marriages. It's must reading for every undergrad!

must be aware that our state and our nation must produce creative people—individuals with independent minds—individuals who seek the truth—individuals who can and will meet the challenges and opportunities of the future with vigor, with imagination and with courage," said Blackwell.

Blackwell added that he believed the nation is at the dawn of a new day of educational opportunity.

"Everyone in America, everyone in Florida including our highest leaders and each of you, must come to understand two things: First, that quality education for each person of ability is essential to our future economic and cultural development as a democracy; and second, that the level of financial support required to provide college opportunity for all able young people must rise rapidly in the educational future. Until this kind of understanding comes in Florida, this state will be unable to fulfill its destiny."

"One aspect of the problem is our failure to give due recognition and just compensation to the teachers who make our educational opportunities possible," Blackwell concluded.

Spain's Rain - To Fall In May

"My Fair Lady" is coming to FSU. The seven year hit musical will be staged here May 22 and 23 by the FSU Opera Guild.

"There is no doubt that this will be one of the most popular shows we have ever presented," said Richard Collins, Director of Opera at FSU, who will conduct the orchestra in "My Fair Lady."

The production will be directed by Fred Vorce. Rose Mary Minihan and Tom Cavendish will take the two principal parts of Eliza Doolittle and Henry Higgins.

Tickets for the FSU Opera Guild production will go on sale at the Westcott Ticket Office May 13. Mail orders accompanied by checks will be accepted in advance. Admission price is $2.50 for adults and $1.25 for students. All seats are reserved.

"A miraculous musical, wise, witty and winning," "As perfect an entertainment as the most fastidious player could demand," "These were some of the rave reviews of the musical after its opening on Broadway in 1956.

On closing night on Broadway in 1962 it was generally conceded to be the greatest musical comedy hit in theatrical history setting two records unlikely to be challenged for a long time to come. Its run of 2,717 performances is the longest ever by a musical on either side of the Atlantic. The box office returns exceed by almost $5,000,000 the combined grosses of "Oklahoma" and "South Pacific," leading contenders in the musical marathon.

A second company went on the road with the show in 1957 covering the entire Northern part of this continent as well as playing a two months run in Russia. Productions of "My Fair Lady" have been performed in most of the major cities of the world including London, Berlin, Amsterdam, Brussels, Copenhagen, Rio de Janeiro, and Tokyo.

The success of this great musical may be attributed to Alan Jay Lerner's skillful adaptation of George Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion" and to the musical genius of Frederick Lowe.

Together they produced one of the most delightful scores ever to be written for any Broadway musical. High lighting the score are such songs as "I could Have Danced All Night," "The Rain In Spain," "With a Little Bit of Luck" and "On the Street Where You Live."

Lerner's musical play follows "Pygmalion" closely.

Tally-Ho For '64 Will Honor Dean Of Students R. Oglesby

By DIXIE EWING
Flambeau Staff Writer

Beth Ann LeGate, editor of the Tally-Ho, has announced that the 1964 yearbook has been dedicated to Dean of Students R. Oglesby.

"I am honored to be among those to whom the Tally-Ho has been dedicated," Dr. Oglesby commented. "It was one of the greatest surprises of my life. Almost as surprising was the fact that my wife knew about this three weeks before I did, and kept it a secret that long."

In previous years the distinction has gone to Dr. Reid Montgomery, Director of Student Activities; Dr. William H. Rogers, Distinguished Professor of English; and Dr. Robert Manning Strozler, former President of FSU.

Dr. Oglesby will conclude 10 years of service as the Dean of Students on July 1. During his many years of administration, he has constantly been on some project for the benefit of FSU students.

He has worked to attain new buildings for the campus, and among his credits are Alumni Village, Kellum Hall, Dorman Hall, the new coed Nathaniel Sallee Hall, and the new Student Union.

Dr. Oglesby has also been instrumental in the organization or expansion of many student activities and associations, such as the FSU Flying High Circus, the Marching Chiefs, Gunkans, student publications, and Student Government.

In addition, Dr. Oglesby has taught a few classes each year in order to stay close to teaching and his students. Next fall he will devote his full time to teaching in the Government Dept.

In bidding a farewell to students as their Dean, Dr. Oglesby remarked "My memory holds the past and yet paradoxically knows at the same time that the past is gone and will never come again. It cherishes past faces, silenced voices, and the lost evenings of childhood."

"And yet these memories will have more permanency in the greatness of my dream world which they ever had in a world of reality. So I expect to go on. . ."

The Kremlin Smiles At Our Plight

Now that the President of the United States and the liberal wing of the United States Senate are echoing my sympathies as regards lawlessness as a means toward establishing law, I will endeavor an even further analysis.

Psychiatrists have noted that masochism is apparent in many of the deviant pathologies. Masochism is the compulsion to endure degradation or pain. The masochist seeks his pleasure in varying degrees. He may only wish to be cursed at, spit at, insulted, or have refuse thrown at him.

He may also desire to be beaten, or have his flesh rent, or his bones broken, or to experience the pain of death itself. It is all believed to stem from a massive personal guilt.

Homosexuals and koplagniks are said to be basically masochistic. They want to use themselves in as vile and disgraceful a manner as possible.

It's analogous to the flagellants who used to wander through the European towns during the Dark Ages. They offered themselves to be violently whipped in order to purge the cities of sin. We know now that their cause was inconsequential to them. They were masochists seeking only self-satisfaction through pain.

Some civil rights demonstrators may also be deliberately looking for insults, spite, rotten eggs, and even brutal beatings. They may even be throwing themselves under heavy equipment in a suicidal death wish. They are usually very dejected when there is no violence. A peaceful march without riot police, cattle prods and snappy dogs is appointing to them. They enjoy being shocked, stung, and bitten. They don't like seeing national Negro leaders speaking unguarded in southern towns without a disturbance. They get a special kick out of it.

Sincerely motivated Negro leaders ought not to let their good nature become the arena of sexual gratification for an interested band of pervers.

It wouldn't be so bad if the communist conspiracy wasn't gaining much from it. (I know we're brainwashed that only ignorance)

Flambeau Lecture Review
Dorlag On Miller

Dr. Arthur Dorlag, director of the University Theatre, opened the third trimester series of Wednesday afternoon book reviews with a stirring and sensitive commentary on Arthur Miller's latest drama "After The Fall." This play has caused much furor among critics because of the autobiographical material relating to the playwright and Marilyn Monroe.

"After The Fall" is a "great play" according to Dr. Dorlag. He cited the diction, structure, and staging as reasons for his opinion. The staging is particularly important because the play was written for the "open stage," one of the most exciting new developments in the modern theatre. The "open stage" has no proscenium arch and very little decoration, giving a feeling of boundlessness to the audience. The audience becomes a part of the action, both by acting as a silent character and by its proximity to the real action. The stage of "After The Fall" is devoid of scenery, but within its bounds are found all the characters of the drama.

The stage symbolizes the mind of the protagonist, Quentin. The actions on stage represent the mental processes of the protagonist and follow within the logical structure of his rebuttals of criticism directed toward "After The Fall," noting especially that the character Maggie is not to be taken as Marilyn Monroe, but is a symbol for the same things that the Love Goddess symbolized.

The major action of "After The Fall" involves Quentin's search for responsibility. Miller has assumed the Existentialist theory that Man is the sole source of self-motivation, not God, and developed the idea that all men are responsible for the actions of the race. Quentin, in attempting to help his paranoid wife Maggie, discovers his own culpability. He has to search his soul for the truths he hopes to show her and in doing so, he leaves himself open to self-discovery.

Dr. Dorlag reviewed Miller's own rebuttals of criticism directed toward "After The Fall," noting especially that the character Maggie is not to be taken as Marilyn Monroe, but is a symbol for the same things that the Love Goddess symbolized.

Word Value Is Up -
But Price Is Down

Although reading ability today is important to income, status and enjoyment, it was once literally a matter of life and death.

In the times when few people were literate, English criminals could escape hanging by proving they could read the "neck-verse."

After reading the first verse of Psalm 121, beginning "Have mercy upon me, O God..." the court would rule that the defendant was a clergyman, and then let him go with a slight punishment.

University students of the Middle Ages were not permitted to buy their textbooks. They could only rent them and it was a crime to take any of their books with them after graduation. Books were so scarce that no one could hope to own more than a few volumes in a lifetime.

Some time between 700 and 800 A.D., the world's first printed newspaper, the "Ti-Chau" appeared in China. In 1615, the city of Frankfurt, Germany, boasted the first weekly newspaper. It wasn't until 75 years later that the first American paper, the "Public Occurrences", appeared.

"The man who reads" helped to change American history, according to some historians who estimate that newspapers friendly to the Patriot cause hastened the American Revolution, by as much as 20 years.

According to statistics our population has increased 37% since 1940, newspaper circulation in the same period has gone up 45%, magazine circulation 110%, and the number of books published has increased by 445%.

Let's say for a minute, this is you.

Once you wear the gold bars of a second lieutenant in the United States Air Force, what's in store for you?

Well, you may fly an aircraft entrusted with a vital defense mission. Or you may lead a research team tackling problems on the frontier of knowledge. You'll be helping to run an organization that's essential to the safety of the free world.

Sounds like you'll be called on to shoulder a good deal of responsibility, doesn't it?

But when you come right down to it, that's what your college years have been preparing you for. You've got ability and a good education. Now's the time to put them to work!

You'll have every opportunity to prove your talents in the Air Force. By doing so, you can put yourself and your country ahead.

If you're not already enrolled in ROTC, you can earn your commission at Air Force Officer Training School—a three-month course that's open to both men and women college graduates. To apply, you must be within 210 days of graduation.

100 Chemists Here For Annual Meeting

The 100 Florida chemists are in Tallahassee today and tomorrow, for the annual meeting of the Florida Association of American Chemical Societies. The convention began at noon yesterday at the Howard Johnson Motel on State Parkway, the headquarters, and most of the delegates are today in the nearby

Holiday Inn. A highlight of the meeting will be the presentation of the coveted Florida Award tonight at a banquet at 6:30 p.m. in the Holiday Inn. Harry P. Schultz, of the University of Miami, chairman of the Florida Section, will present the award at the banquet and also will preside at a general assembly and business meeting at 4 p.m. Most of the arrangements have been made by members of the Chemistry Department at FSU. Bruno Linder, of FSU, is general chairman for the meeting. Ray V. Lawrence, of the USDA Naval Stores Reserve Station, Olustee, the chairman-elect of the section, is program chairman.

Twenty technical papers will be delivered at sessions from 9:30 a.m. to noon and from 1:30 to 3:45 p.m. today.

The general subjects, times and chairmen for the technical paper sessions are: 9:30 a.m., "Biochemistry and Organic Chemistry," George Kelley, Jacksonville University; 9:30 a.m., "Physical Chemistry and Inorganic Chemistry," Howard Powell, University of Miami; and 1:30 p.m., "Organic Chemistry," John M. Derfer of the Glidden Co., Jacksonville.

While the chemists are meeting for the technical sessions this morning their wives will have a separate program. At 11 a.m. they will visit the LeMay Art Foundation, the FSU Museum and the Tallahassee Junior Museum, where they will have lunch. Mrs. Earl Frieden, wife of the head of FSU's Department of Chemistry, is in charge of the ladies program.

Tomorrow's session in 306 Science Building will bring the meeting to a close. This session is also for high school teachers of chemistry.

FSU Economics Professors Write For Foreign Journals

Bonnie Merritt Joins WAC Nurse Reserve

Bonnie Anne Merritt, a junior at FSU's School of Nursing has enlisted in the Women's Army Corps Reserve under the Student Nurse program. She will continue studies at the University until graduation in 1966 when she will be commissioned a Second Lieutenant in the Army Nurse Corps. She will be required to serve three years on active duty.

Drs. M. L. Greenbut and G. Macestich of the FSU Department of Economics are the authors of articles published recently in leading foreign journals.

Dr. Greenbut was invited by the editors of "Kogyo Ritsui" to write a paper on location theory for their journal. The resulting paper, entitled "The Two Sides of Location Economics," was translated into Japanese by H. Nishitaka of the Spanish, and German.

Aoyama Gakuin University in Tokyo as "Ritchi-Ketzaigaku no Ni-So-kunne" and published in the February 1964 issue.

Dr. Macestich, a previous contributor to the "Review of International Affairs," last month published a paper entitled "The Main Springs of Economic Growth and Development." This journal, published in Yugoslavia, carries articles in Serbo-Croat, English, Russian, Japanese by H. Nishitaka of the Spanish, and German.

... Snyder On Kremlin

... that phrase, but shouldn't all people that drastically exist in reality be discussed?

... has made us afraid to speak up things? The best question of all is who would benefit the most if Civil Rights Bill is not passed? Answer of course if the communists.

They don't want to see reforms in enemy nations. That would bring relative tranquility and would drastically reduce the chance of selling revolt or taking propaganda advantage of the internal turmoil.

The Reds want to see the Civil Rights Bill defeated. They also know that continued reckless disturbance of the peace and irresponsible vandalism will anger the people into rebelling against this force. To turn popular opinion against the Bill is exactly what the Russians want and is exactly what the leftists are doing. So it doesn't matter if the more active demonstrators are card carriers or not as long as their actions bring smiles in the Kremlin.

The extremists argue that it is doubtful that the recent illegal demonstrations have endangered the passage of the Bill. But as usual, they are out of touch with reality. They can't believe that the majority of the people both North and South are for civil liberties but against civil disobedience.

It's been a long time since the leftists have felt the public pulse, otherwise they wouldn't make so many misjudgements. They still can't understand also that we must run this country and everything init and are hell bent on keeping it that way!

I say "we masses" instead of "the masses" since I never presumed myself to be superior to the common man as so many false white liberals.

Multi-Purpose Campus Plans Built-In Smallness

A California plan for providing "built-in smallness" in a new university which eventually will be required to accommodate 27,500 students was outlined to some 40 educators from a dozen states attending FSU's University's Colloquium on Experimental Colleges. Dr. Dean E. McHenry, chancellor of the University of California at Santa Cruz, which will open its doors in October, 1965, was one of three educators presenting plans of their new college programs. Others were Dr. Paul L. Dressel, University of Michigan; and Dr. Woodburn O. Ross, Montezuma College of Wayne State University.

A panel composed of a committee, headed by Dr. R. R. Oglesby, dean of students at FSU, reported on discussions which have explored needs for a new approach in undergraduate education at FSU.

Dr. McHenry said the regents "in effect told me to build a multi-purpose university campus capable ultimately of accommodating 27,500 students." In the south central coast area of California, in finding "better ways in which students can learn" planners followed the directions of University President Clark Kerr to "so organize the campus that it will seem small as it grows larger."

A ranch site of 2,000 acres in Santa Cruz County was selected and a campus plan was developed to make the most of a view of Monterey Bay, the great redwood forests nearby and varied elevations. Construction was begun only this year. The backing of the state of California "is a plus factor of immense importance in carrying the plan through," McHenry said. The current annual support budget from the state for the university system is equivalent of more than $4 billion, invested at 4 per cent.

"The essence of the Santa Cruz plan is to organize instruction in such a way that the advantages of a small college—close instruction, sense of belonging, residential setting—are combined with those of a large university—great scholars, excellent libraries and laboratories and superior cultural events. We hope in this way to bridge the gap between the curricular and the co-curricular and fill the chasm that so often yawns between students and faculty," continued McHenry.

The university expects to start with a faculty of about 60, a staff of 75 and a student body expected to number 500 in October, 1965.

A key feature of the Santa Cruz plan is to organize "a series of liberal arts colleges that will average about 600 students, most of whom will 'live-in.' By combining living and learning they expect to reach the whole student and to augment educational effectiveness. Preliminary cost studies indicate that they can operate on the residential college basis at a cost no greater than on a conventional."

Living, dining, social, athletic and other activities all will be combined in the residential colleges with academic and administrative. All of the residential colleges will provide a liberal arts education "but they will vary considerably in shade and emphasis."

The first college, Cowell, is expected to have 600 students, only 200 of them commuters, along with a faculty of 30 to 40 "fellows" and 10 to 12 preceptors (graduate students). The provost would live on the site and so will 10 or 12 of the fellows. "The colleges will be student-oriented, but the atmosphere will be seriously intellectual. The academic program will be heavy, the hours long. A determined effort will be made to reach the 'whole' individual and to occupy his entire attention during the academic week," said McHenry.

When the university has 27,500 students, there will be 15 or 20 residential colleges, all with a student body of 250 to 1000, along with some professional schools, advanced or graduate education, mural sports will be emphasized in the residential colleges, with participants and few spectators.

North Florida high school bands are meeting on the FSU campus for the 24th Annual Band Contest and tomorrow.

FSU will host the northern half of the University of South Florida band festival. The southern half is being held in the all-state contest, according to Robert Braunagel of the FSU Music faculty.

The state festival contest entries already received superior ratings in district band festival contests, Braunagel said.

FSU judges will be Bruce Jones, band director at Louisiana State University; Otto Kraushaar, band director at the University of North Carolina; and Robert Waggoner, high school band director from Atlanta. Paul Yoder will judge the sight-reading and student conducting.

Solo and ensemble competitions are from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. today and 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. tomorrow. They will be in Opperman Music Hall and in rooms 342 and 205 of the Music Building.

Congress Views New Aid Program; Bill Offers 'Worry-less' Education

Any capable student will be able to attend college without financial worries if a new national student assistance program is approved by Congress.

The bill, authored by Senator Vance Hartke (D-Ind.), provides for a multi-purpose program of student financial assistance, flexible enough to meet the diverse requirements of the nation's post-secondary institutions, and balanced between loans, scholarships and student employment activities. The proposal would provide for more than a million students a relatively low cost.

"The basic aim of the program," Senator Hartke said, "is to insure that no capable student will be denied the opportunity for education beyond high school because of his or her parents' inability to meet the financial burden."

Hearings on the Hartke bill are underway in the Senate Education Subcommittee with prominent educators, leaders of education associations and figures in the administration testifying in its behalf. More than 20 Senators have asked to be listed as co-sponsors of the Hartke bill.

The four basic parts of the Hartke proposal are:

1. Undergraduate Scholarships—A program of four-year undergraduate scholarships to be awarded by scholarship commissions in the states to entering college freshmen. Grant of up to $300 awarded based on need, academic promise and high school record.

2. Long-term Student Loans—The present loan limit of the National Defense Education Act would be raised from $1,000 to $1,500 for undergraduates and from $2,000 to $2,500 for graduate students. Loan authority would be broadened to include new institutions, such as two-year technical schools.

3. Educational Loan Insurance—A program to guarantee commercial or college loans negotiated by colleges and universities. Eligibility would be based only on full-time enrollment and satisfactory academic progress. Loans so insured would be limited to $2,000 per academic year to any one borrower, and $10,000 total. Repayments could be extended for a ten-year period following graduation.

Seminoles Fall To Tigers

By GENE BALLARD

Auburn University combined good hitting and Sharpe pitching to sweep a two-game series from the Seminoles 4-2 and 19-5, Tuesday, and Wednesday. The two games gave the Tigers a sweep of the season series since they defeated the Tribe 7-5 earlier in the year.

On Tuesday Auburn's Monte Sharpe looked sharp as he limited the Seminoles to only six hits, four of them in the first inning, in outdueling the Seminoles' Cliff Reneau.

Sharpe was practically invincible after the first, gaining first victory of the year. The Tiger hurler struck out ten men and walked two.

Reneau's six game winning streak was stopped as he picked up his first loss of the year. The tall hurler gave up eight hits and struck out six.

Sharpe was backed up by timely hitting by Shortstop Otis Bibb and Third Baseman Jimmy Barfield. Bibb scored three runs, and Barfield went 4 for 4.

The Tigers broke a 2-2 tie in the eighth inning to get the victory. Bibb and Barfield hit back to back doubles, and Rommie Baynes singled in the winning tally.

Wednesday will go down as a dark day in FSU baseball history. On that day Auburn took advantage of 22 hits and four Seminole errors to take a 19-5 victory.

Winning pitcher George Nichols was the leading Auburn hitter. He pooled a three run homer in the second and a two run double in the sixth to pace Auburn to a 7-2 lead. Marty Howell lead the parade of six Seminole pitchers and took the loss. He was bombed for four runs in 1-2/3 innings.

Highlight of the game was the Auburn half of the eighth. The first nine men reached base safely as Auburn scored ten runs on six hits, four walks, two errors and a hit batsman. The Seminoles will carry a 18-9 record against Georgia Southern next week.

Seminoles Sign Four Cagers

FSU has signed four high school basketball players to grant-in-aid scholarships. Coach Bud Kennedy announced today.

The four, first to be signed by the Seminoles for the coming year, are: Rick Childress, 6-4 forward from Birmingham, Ala.; Don Biggs, 6-7 center from Macon, Ga.; Bob Stevens, 6-5 forward from Palatka; and Butch Sullivan, 6-0 guard from Smythport, Pa.

Childress went to Enslay High School in Birmingham and was named to a high school All-American team selected by the mag-

Biggs is a 1963 graduate of Lanier High of Macon. He attended The Citadel for one semester.

Stevens was an all-state choice this season at Palatka High School, while Sullivan was a Pennsylvania all-state choice, averaging 27 points a game.

Coed In AAU Meet

FSU Gymnast Gail Songerath will compete in the National AAU meet in New York City Wednesday.

Miss Songerath, who has already qualified for the final Olympic trials in August, is given a good chance to place in the national meet.

A sophomore physical education major, Gail made the 1960 Olympic team while she was still in high school. She was the youngest member of the team.

In an Olympic qualifying meet April 10, in Statesboro, Ga., the FSU coed had the second highest point total with 73.15.

Second basemen Reed, a 5-9, 160 pound senior, was elected last week by the squad over two other candidates.

As the lead-off man for FSU's District III NCAA champions last season, Reed batted .290 and led the team in stolen bases with 12. His fielding and base running have played a major role in Seminole success so far this season.

In his second year at FSU, Reed was an All-American baseball player at Manatee Junior College before joining the Seminoles.

JONES GOES OUT MERTING GOES IN

Former Cabinet Members Kept

John E. Jones resigned today as president of the student body upon the discovery that he was no longer able to meet the necessary qualifications for office required by the Student Body Constitution.

Vice President John Merting was immediately sworn in as President by Chief Justice Everett Steadman at a hastily called ceremony on the steps of Longmire.

Jones was unavailable for comment as he is not in school at the present time. He is reportedly working for Mayor Hayden Burns in his fight to be the Democratic nominee for governor.

The President of the student body must enroll and attend all three trimesters.

"This was a completely unexpected occurrence," said President Merting. "Consequently I have not had time as yet to formulate a comprehensive program. This is a unique and trying situation for the entire student body."

"I feel it is in the best interests of FSU to retain as much continuity in the administration of Student Government as possible. I plan to keep the President's cabinet nearly intact."

"Next year will bring the opening of our new Union and pool and should be the greatest year ever for FSU. Only with the cooperation and interest of the entire University community can all of these programs be fulfilled," he concluded.

Merting's first official act in his new office was to appoint Jeanne Williamson as acting vice president.

The permanent vice president will be chosen by the Student Senate in September.

Thus the reins of government pass abruptly to Merting, the standard bearer of the Student Party in the Student Body Officer elections last spring.

Jones was a member of the rival University Party.

Merting was a senator for two years before running successfully for the vice presidency last trimester.

Although not versed in the ways of the executive, he compiled an outstanding record for service in the legislative branch before assuming his duties as vice president at the beginning of this trimester.

Miss Williamson has also been a senator for two years.

The unexpected turn of events left Jones' supporters in stunned disbelief.

"This certainly is a blow to Student Government and to the University," said Bill Wood, Jones' pick for the secretary of the University Union.

"This is all the more reason to support the new president John Merting. He has been handed an almost impossible task."

K for C Test Given

The Knowledge for College Test will be given Thursday, from 4-6 p.m. in the second floor auditorium of Longmire.

All girls who have not taken this test before must successfully pass it or re-take the exam.

Circus Goes To Europe

FSU's "Flying High" circus troupe will take to the air tomorrow for their first European tour.

From New York, the circus will fly to Paris and from there to Barcelona for the first of 18 performances in four cities in as many countries.

Director Ad Gilbert hopes the all-student circus, which has amazed American audiences for 15 years, will also captivate European audiences.

Filing Closes

Commissioner of Elections John Campbell announced today that filing closes at 5 p.m. Tuesday for candidates seeking positions to the Summer Legislative Council.

Nine positions of senators-at-large will be decided in the elections June 2.

All candidates will have a mandatory meeting with the commissioner of elections Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in Longmire auditorium.

Any candidate unable to attend should contact the commissioner of elections at FSU ext. 2975 before the meeting.

Sponsored and financed by the Columbia Broadcasting System, which will film the troupe's receptions in Barcelona, Nice, Florence and Athens, the trip will last three and one-half weeks.

While educational experiences and expeditions are planned in the key cities where the troupe will perform, the only side excursions will be visits to Paris and Rome and a day at the World's Fair on the homeward leg of the tour, said Gilbert.

Two of the students, J. Brent Picard and Dorothy Ann Gilmore, have been selected as "foreign correspondents" for the trip. Each will mail back nightly reports of the troupe's impressions and experiences abroad, which will be compiled for the "Flambeau" and other newspapers.

For more than two weeks, the 28 students, selected from the 100-member complement of "Flying High" performers, have been on campus for intensive practice sessions and briefings on the customs, food and languages of countries in which they will perform.

Haydon Burns

To the Editor:

The results of the first primary election for the Democratic candidate for governor of the state of Florida showed that the vast majority of thinking Floridians want Mayor Haydon Burns of Jacksonville as their next governor.

Mayor Burns led the field of six candidates by standing on his record of growth and progress for his home city of Jacksonville and by taking stands on issues other candidates shied away from.

Mayor Burns, with your help, will be the next governor of Florida. What he has done for Jacksonville he can do for all of Florida.

For sound, progressive, conservative management of state affairs, for the tried and true leadership, and for a man dedicated to making Florida the number one state in the nation, I would strongly urge your support for Haydon Burns in the second primary May 26.

'Fair Lady' To Open Next Week

"ORDINARY MAN"

... Henry Higgins, played by Tom Cavendish, expounds his virtues in preparation for the upcoming production of "My Fair Lady."

From Cockney flower girl to English lady of English society, the speech therapy is the "heart" of the story, of Eliza, leading character in "My Fair Lady," the new production of the Opera Guild and 23.

A graduate student, Rose Minahan, has the role of Eliza. Little, Her adventures begin as a professor of phonetics, Higgins, played by Tom Cavendish, acts her as the subject of experiment.

Four Teachers Chosen Consultants

Science teachers have been selected by FSU to help write the books and laboratory materials for the science high school open-classes, Turkey, in September. Teachers, knowledgeable in the methodology in teaching chemistry, physics, mathematics and biology, will arrive on campus for the first part of a two-semester assignment.

The summertime work as consultants will help to help 32 Turkish teachers and 11 Turkish scientists put together curricular materials for the ninth grade.

The curriculum-writing project is part of a program of establishing a new High School of Science for an elite group of 300 Turkish students, 100 of whom will start in the ninth grade in September.

FSU's Science Education Department, headed by Dr. J. Stanley Marshall, is working under a $125,000 contract with the Ford Foundation to help the Turkish Ministry of Education set up the high school.

The associate director of the science high school project, Garwood A. Braun, today announced the selection of the following high school teachers as consultants:

Ronald D. Townsend, physics teacher at Maine Township High School, Park Ridge, Ill. ## Paper Presented

Dr. Irvin Cooper, professor of music education at FSU, has been invited to present a research paper on choral possibilities of the adolescent changing voice at a conference of the International Society for Music Education in Budapest June 26-July 3.

He will speak to the some 500 music educators on the subject of research he has done on some 100,000 junior high school boys in 29 states. He has studied the voice potentials of boys of 12 to 15 to 20 years.

Choppin's New Book Published

"Nuclei and Radioactivity" is the subject of a new book by Dr. Gregory R. Choppin of FSU which has just been published by W. A. Benjamin, Inc., New York.

Published both as a paperback and in a cloth edition, the book is intended to supplement other books in first year college chemistry courses and to serve as a textbook for courses in radiation science.

One chapter covers the applications of radioactivity in chemistry and nuclear industry and recent advances in the fields of agriculture and medicine through the use of radioisotopes.

The 160-page book was published in the General Chemistry Monograph Series. It is the second book by Dr. Choppin, a professor of chemistry.

Dr. Choppin was a member of a chemistry group at Radiation Laboratory, University of California, before coming to the FSU faculty in 1956. He was a co-discoverer of element 101 (Mendelevium) while in California.

Quagliano Gives Talk

Dr. James V. Quagliano, professor of chemistry at FSU, delivered the keynote address at the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Association of College Chemistry Teachers held at Duquesne University.

While at the Pennsylvania Institution he also delivered a series of three lectures at a Department of Chemistry colloquium.

We'd like to say some nice things about America's young adult drivers

And we think we've got good reason! Last January, we selected twenty 18- and 19-year-old young men and women through the Junior Achievement program to drive our team of Chevrolets in the Mobil Economy Run, April 3-9. It was the first time any company had relied entirely on drivers with limited experience in this exciting competition.

We brought these young adults—most of them college students, some from the business world—to Arcadia, California, in late February. For six weeks, our expert teachers trained them in the skills of economy driving.

Then, on April 3, they set off on the Run, 3,243 miles from Los Angeles to New York.

We were going against the grain. It takes high proficiency to win the Mobil Economy Run. Competition is tough. Why did we rely on drivers with such limited experience?

Chevrolet wanted to give the Chevy Teen Team a chance to prove in front of the nation that they and the 6.5 million licensed drivers in their age bracket are safe, sane people behind the wheel. We felt the Run offered a splendid chance.

The Corvair, Chevy IIs, Chevelles and Chevrolets driven by the Chevy Teen

Team in the Mobil Economy Run did remarkably well compared with the class winners in overall miles-per-gallon figures. The final results are a tribute to the high degree of driving skill displayed by the Chevy Teen Team representing the youth of America.

No wonder we're proud of America's young adult drivers. We couldn't have a better reason.

Exhibit Premiers Sunday

Sunday is the formal opening date of "Painting-64," an exhibition featuring the work of George Milton, curator of the FSU Museum.

The exhibit will be at the LeMoine Art Foundation, 214 South Calhoun Street. Opening times Sunday will be 2-3 p.m. for members of the Foundation and 3-5 for the public.

"Painting-64" is a collection of 25 paintings and 15 construction collages. These are the first works by Milton since his return from a six-month tour of Europe and the Near East.

Milton received his master of arts degree from FSU and has been the museum curator since 1956. His most recent showing was at the Florida Artists' Groups 15th Annual Show at the University of South Florida in Tampa. There he won honorable mention for his painting "The Seamstress."

In Tallahassee, Milton's work has been shown at the Lewis State Bank Little Gallery. His works have also been displayed at Madison Square Garden in New York City, in Atlanta, Georgia, Havana, Cuba, and throughout Florida.

The LeMoine Art Foundation, Inc., was founded late in 1963 as a non-profit organization promoting art in the Big Bend area.

Others from FSU who are LeMoine Group Artists are Fred Metzke, Leon Mead, Harlan Shaw, Laura Lee, Mary Lou Kuhn, William Watkins, Ralph Hurst, and George Holschuh. "Painting-64" will continue at the LeMoine Gallery through June 6, 1964.

Ruth Anne Rich Awarded Study

Phanlet Ruth Anne Rich, who received her bachelor's degree in music at FSU in April, 1963, has been awarded a Fulbright-Hays scholarship for a year's study in Paris.

Miss Rich is the second recent piano student of Prof. Edward Kilenski of the Schola Musica to win a Fulbright grant. William Alton, who received his master's degree at FSU in 1960 after five years of study under Kilenski, is now studying at the State Conservatory in Hanover, Germany.

Alton and Miss Rich both won nationwide contests of the National Federation of Music Clubs in April, 1961. Alton won a $1000 prize as the best pianist in a contest for young artists and Miss Rich, at that time a 19-year-old sophomore at FSU, won the nationwide piano contest for students.

Miss Rich currently is studying at Peabody Conservatory of Music at Baltimore toward a master of music degree. She will sail for France Sept. 17 and study at the Conservatoire National Supérieur de Musique.

Last April Miss Rich was graduated magna cum laude as the first School of Music Honors Program graduate. She also received the Dohnanyi Faculty Citation.

Numerous honors in scholarship and music were received during her FSU career by Miss Rich, the daughter of the head of the music department at Mercer University, Dr. Arthur Rich. She won the Marie Morrissey Keith Scholarship Award of the NFMC and the Young Artists competition to play with the Transylvania Symphony Orchestra.

Student Represents US At Anniversary

A 20-year-old sophomore at FSU, Josef DeVollente, has been selected as the American representative at the 15th anniversary of the Berlin Airlift in which his father was one of the 31 American pilots killed. Sharing honors with DeVollente, a criminology and corrections major at FSU, will be the daughter of a British pilot who lost his life in the airlift operation. They will be guests of the Luftbrückendank, an organization devoted to perpetuating the memory of the Berlin Airlift, for a week's stay in Germany.

A full program of activities has been planned for the two visitors including a tour of East Germany and an audience with West Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt.

Only five at the time his father was killed in a mid-air place collision as he returned from one of the flights to Berlin, DeVollente will be returning to that country for the first time since he was a child.

Honorary Taps

The Beta Lambda Chapter of Epsilon Pi Tau, International honorary professional fraternity for Industrial Arts and Industrial Education, has recently tapped its new apprentices.

Chosen for membership were Ivan Bates, Vincent Beebe, Albert Caraway, Woodrow Cheek, Thomas Chersheimer, Jerald Goodchild, James Kirkland, Douglas Kruger Jr., William McLean, and Robert Mertz.

Following the initiation ceremony, the members placed a bronze plaque, cast by one of the members, at the foot of the dogwood tree the fraternity planted last year at Florida High School.

The tree commemorates the founding of the Beta Lambda Chapter at Florida State University March 21, 1963.

The closing event of the day was the Founders Day Banquet, at which Dr. Edward Hankin of the Industrial Arts and Vocational Education Department addressed the membership.

Epsilon Pi Tau is the only student honorary fraternity concerned with Industrial Arts and Industrial Education.

Requirements for eligibility for membership are a 3.0 scholastic average in the major, above average competence and skill in several areas, and continuous participation in Industrial Arts and Industrial Education activities.

Corps Deadline Nears

Graduating seniors still have an opportunity to get into Peace Corps summer training programs, according to Dean Jack Arnold, campus Peace Corps Liaison, but it will take some fast action.

Interested seniors can get a Peace Corps Volunteer Questionnaire from their post office or their Peace Corps Liaison Officer.

The Questionnaire should be completed and mailed to the Director of Recruiting, Peace Corps, Washington, D.C. 20525 as soon as possible.

Dean Arnold reports that 138 students at FSU have applied to the Peace Corps since school opened last fall. 24 former students are now serving and 5 others have completed their two year tours.

More June grads have applied this year than in the three previous years since the Peace Corps was established.

lished, but opportunities are greater than ever. More than 5,000 applicants will be selected for summer training.

Too many students think they need professional or technical training before Peace Corps service. Others have the false impression that they must be fluent in a foreign language.

Professionally trained people are needed, and those who can speak a foreign language are in demand, but the majority of Peace Corps Volunteers are liberal arts graduates who spoke only English before they got into the Peace Corps.

According to Dean Arnold the need for Volunteers who can teach English, science and mathematics is much greater than the Peace Corps can supply.

There are thousands of opportunities for liberal arts graduates to teach in secondary schools.

TREASURE OF BABYLON

The Emerald was among the dearest treasures of the gem markets of Babylon today nearly 6000 years ago — your May birthstone — means one of the most valuable objects in the world.

Cleopatra, Queen of Egypt wore wonderful emeralds came from her own Emerald mine in upper Egypt.

Another royal personage Nero, also respected the lovely blue-green jewel. To him a strained eye, he used what might be called the world's first sun glass—a large Emerald. When watching the gladiators in the arena, he viewed the often bloody scene through the soothing green "lens" of his precious gem.

Medieval people believed that the key to love and domestic bliss could be found in the clear depths of an Emerald. In Russia, Emeralds were the most prized of the Crown Jewels, and even then, were among the most valuable in the world.

When buying Emeralds color is the greatest factor affecting their beauty and value. The most prized are the deep velvety green with the bluish side, gems which are as free from inclusions (flaws) as possible. The work of inclusions or flaws is quite common in the Emerald, and the French refer to this as jardin—the garden of the emerald.

People who love emeralds and particularly those who celebrate their birthdays in May, are fortunate indeed since excellent quality synthetic emeralds are now being made by man. These stones require an expert gemmology to accurately detect their origin. They show the same fine color and possess the same mineral properties as the natural product but at a far lesser cost.

The jeweler who guides you to an Emerald and other gem purchases should possess a comprehensive knowledge of Gemmology, proper instruments for determining the quality of gem stones, business experience and ability and above all, the integrity to pass his sound judgment on to you.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ Rose Minihan Leads Cast Of Hit Show

By CAROLYN CHRISTENSEN
Flambeau News Editor

The FSU Opera Guild production of "My Fair Lady," the longest running Broadway hit in musical history, opens tonight in Westcott Auditorium at 8:15 p.m.

The Lerner and Loewe adaptation of George Bernard Shaw's play "Pygmalion" will feature Rose Mary Minihan as Eliza Doolittle, the Cockney flower girl and the musical's "fair lady."

"Both artistically and technically, the production is shaping up better than any I can remember," said Assistant to the Director Earl Foster, who has worked with opera at FSU for five years.

The success of the production so far has been facilitated by the high degree of cooperation between Director Fred Vance, Technical Director J. Robert Swain, and the cast.

He described the sets as a mixture of the traditional and the abstract, with authentic details such as crystal chandeliers.

"The music is well-scored," said Foster, "with a minimum of instrumentation which will allow the voices to be heard unusually well. The orchestra is conducted by Richard Collins."

Foster explained that the difficult job of managing the 17 changes of scenery was made more efficient by use of drops and cars run on and off stage on steel rails.

He described the sets as a mixture of the traditional and the abstract, with authentic details such as crystal chandeliers.

"The production is neither 'Pygmalion' nor is it opera, but a combination which exceeds both in many ways," continued Foster.

The curtain rises on the portals of Covent Gardens where Professor Higgins is taking notes on British dialects (Why Can't the English, notably that of Miss Eliza Doolittle, He tells her that he and his friend Col. Pickering can teach her to speak like a lady).

When Eliza begins to take proper pride in her manners, her Cockney mannerisms and moralities become so exasperating that he nervily gives up.

Eliza is in turn driven to distraction by his thoughtless treatment and incessant instruction. At length, however, she learns correct pronunciation, and they celebrate with a dance.

After the ball, Higgins and Pickering are congratulating each other on their respective successes, completely forgetting Eliza.

Hurt and angry, she rushes out, running into Freddy Enysford-Hill who professes his love for her. In the meantime, her father, now become famous through his philosophies, decides that it is time he married the woman with whom he has been living for years and spends one final night on the town.

The Professor finds his pupil at the home of her father, the realities of woman. He finds her as just at his mother's house where she has gone for warmth and sympathy, but he realizes her tentative offerings of grace.

On his way back to his own house, he reminisces about the way she has affected him. He is sitting at home listening to recordings of her voice when she quietly returns as the curtain falls.

'The Condor' Here Thursday

"El Condor," a stage play through which Latin America proclaims her convictions and her aims, will be shown in Westcott Auditorium Thursday at 8:30 p.m.

The play has an eleven-nation cast of 60.

While the action of "El Condor" is laid in the mythical country of "Latina," the issues it deals with are no myths but urgent realities in the domestic and foreign policies of the Western Hemisphere.

Problems of corruption, communism, lagging Alliance for Progress programs, and the cries of "Cuba Si-Yanqui No!" which echo up and down the continent, provide the background of the plot.

On the stage, divided families, frustrated youth, rioting students, and crooked politicians and sincere but bewildered "experts" play their roles in the drama.

Into these confused cross-currents comes a fresh factor. Results are unexpected and swift.

G President Announces Changed Laundry System

Student Body President John Merritt announced today that the University Administration has approved a new Government plan for the reorganization of the FSU laundry.

Under the new system, all freshmen and women will be required to use the laundry service for one year.

been in danger of losing the service altogether, a situation we certainly did not want to see occur," said Wigelius.

"As the matter now stands, the laundry will be guaranteed a certain projectable income upon which to base its program for next year."

Under the old system, all women students were required to pay a $17 laundry fee each trimester. Men were not required to use the service.

The new bill provides that upperclassmen may pay a six dollar fee for flat work only, the regular $17 for the complete service, or refrain from using the laundry entirely.

"This bill provides every freshman with an opportunity to try the laundry for himself and then make a decision," said Wigelius.

his own decision about the service it offers," said President Merting. "We in Student Government consider this a definite step forward. However, there is always room for improvement. We will appreciate any suggestions students may have concerning the working of the laundry," he concluded.

Merting also pointed out that the bill is of a provisional nature. According to Merting, the new system will be tried for one year. If it is found to be a success, a new bill will be introduced into the Student Senate to make the plan permanent.

A standing Student Government committee will be organized in the fall to study the laundry's efficiency during the next two trimesters.

For people who can't stand the sight of a Volkswagen.

Some people just can't see a VW. Even though they admire the car's attributes, they picture themselves in something fancier.

We sell such a package.

It's called a Karmann Ghia.

The Karmann Ghia is what happened to a Volkswagen when an Italian designer got hold of it. He didn't design it for mass production, so they wouldn't think of giving it the mass production treatment.

They take the time to hand-weld, hand-shape, and hand-smooth the body.

Finally, after 185 men have had a hand in it, the Ghia's body is lowered onto one of those strictly functional chassis.

The kind that comes with VW's big 15-inch wheels, torsion bars, a four-speed synchromesh transmission and that rather famous air-cooled engine.

So that along with its Roman nose and graceful curves, the Ghia has a beauty that is more than skin deep.

FSU Given Federal Grants for Chemistry Building

announced today two federal grants totaling $1,584,529 toward a new Chemistry Building which is to be erected next year.

The building, of contemporary design, will be a triple-towered structure, 11 stories high and will be connected to and with the existing Biophysics Building. The National Science Foundation has awarded $1,046,525 of the support for the building and the National Institutes of Health $538,104. The $1,584,529 total is more than three times the amount of outside support for any previous construction project on campus.

A state appropriation of $2,750,000 will go with the federal grants toward building and equipping the big building, which will be the largest academic building on campus, with 170,000 square feet of floor space. Dr. Richard Glick, chairman of a committee of the Department of Chemistry which has been in charge of planning for the building, said it is expected that construction will start early in 1965 and that the building will be completed during the first half of 1966.

The new building will face Call Street and will be just east of the Molecular Biosciences Building. On floors one to four it will be connected with the Molecular Biosciences Building. Near the main entry will be a 200-seat auditorium.

The six top floors, Glick said, will be devoted entirely to research. The basement and ground floor will have shops, stockroom and auxiliary facilities and the second and third floors will have classrooms and teaching laboratories.

The second will include areas supporting the undergraduate laboratory teaching functions of upper level courses in organic, physical, analytical, inorganic, bio- and radio-chemistry. The third will include administrative offices, classrooms and lounge facilities.

Between 300 and 400 research personnel can be housed in the building in addition to persons involved in teaching and administration.

At the present time the department has 25 faculty members directing graduate activities, along with 110 graduate students, 46 of whom entered the department during the present school year.

There are 34 postdoctoral research associates and several visiting professors.

By 1968-69, Glick said, it is expected there will be nearly 400 research participants—28 faculty members, 204 graduate students and 73 postdoctorals. The graduate program in chemistry was established just 14 years ago and now is one of the most active in the South.

The department brings to the University yearly about $1 million in outside research grants. In addition the molecular biophysics and space biosciences programs receiving about $750,000 additional in grants are headed by chemists. The building is being designed by Harry E. Burns and Thomas E. Ewart Jr., both of Jacksonville, in association with the architect for the Board of Control, Forrest M. Kelley Jr.

Glick said the building itself is expected to cost about $3,700,000.

Plant Awarded ODK Certificate

Joseph M. Plant Jr., assistant professor of engineering science at FSU, has been awarded one of five 1964 Distinguished Service Certificates given by the national leadership honor society for men, Omicron Delta Kappa.

Plant, a member of ODK for the past 33 years and province deputy since 1959, was awarded the national honor at the society's golden anniversary convention in Roanoke, Va.

Nominated for the honor by the FSU Circle of ODK which he helped found in 1950, Plant was cited for his distinguished service to the society and its ideals.

Plant joined the FSU faculty in 1947 as an instructor in mathematics, and was in charge of the pre-engineering program for several years. He now directs a Cooperative Educational Program in the University's School of Engineering Science.

A native of Columbus, Ga., he holds a B.S. degree in mechanical engineering from Auburn University, and a M.A. degree in physics and education from the George Peabody College for Teachers.

Prior to coming to FSU, Plant taught at Auburn University and spent six years in the military service.

Scientist Invited

Dr. Robert E. Stevenson, associate professor at FSU, is one of five oceanographers in the nation invited to participate in the Earth Science Curriculum Project at Boulder, Colo., this summer.

The Project will bring 42 scientists together at the University of Colorado from June 22 to Aug. 15 for a writing conference. Sponsored by the American Geological Institute and financed by the National Science Foundation, the group's meetings will result in preliminary editions of new earth science texts, manuals and teachers' guides.

A geologist, meteorologist and oceanographer, Dr. Stevenson has been a research associate with FSU's Oceanographic Institute and an associate professor of meteorology, since July, 1963. Before joining the faculty, he served as associate director of the Texas A & M College's Marine Laboratory at Galveston, Tex., and conducted research for the U.S. Navy in London.

Beginning in September, the new text will be used in humanities courses at both UF and FSU, as a critical reference work on the classics studied in paperback versions of the originals, by students.

Davidson, Dr. Herndon, Dr. Reaver and Dr. Ruff wrote the first volume, "The Humanities in Contemporary Life," several years ago. This text has been used in the humanities divisions of the universities as well.

Prof. Is Editor

Dr. Richard A. Bartlett of FSU's Department of History is editor of a new edition of "The Yellowstone National Park," just published by the University of Oklahoma Press.

The history, written by Hiram Martin Chittenden, was first published in 1895 and went through several editions. It still is the best history of America's oldest and largest national park up to 1895, Bartlett says.

The book's author was an army engineer turned historian. He also wrote "The American Fur Trade of the Far West" in 1902 and several other histories.

The Yellowstone River and its area figured in many of the early explorations of the West, Bartlett said, including the Lewis and Clark expedition.

Yellowstone National Park was created by Congress in 1872.

Bartlett, editor of the new edition, is the author of "Great Surveys of the American West," published in 1962 by the University of Oklahoma Press. The work won the Spur Award of the Western Writers of America as the best non-fiction book of the year.

SOMETHING FOR NOTHING

In these days of high competitive retailing, it's hard to come to a final decision on a product advertised in newspaper, radio, television or direct mail, would be difficult. There are so many claims and deals being offered in various fields of retailing that it is increasingly difficult for the consumer to separate the "gold" from the "dross." Let me illustrate.

Late last year I was called upon for an opinion on a certain watch that a store manager had received. The watch was advertised in the store's store in the state of the box was a printed prospectus which said $675. Guy by figuring the cost of the twelve tiny single cut diamonds, the cost of the 14K gold case and a very modest 17 jewel movement, I came up with a figure of $225. When given the information, the store manager replied, "I thought so."

The U. S. Department of Justice estimates that hundreds of millions of dollars are sucked out of the pockets of Mr. and Mrs. America every year by sharp practices at the consumer level. Better Business Bureau all over the nation continue to warn and caution consumers to deal with firms who have stood the test of time and whose products and services have proven their desire to serve the customer in the best way.

In the jewelry industry, the fictitious price method of doing business has always offered unlimited opportunities for jewelry mail order houses who like to call themselves "wholesalers" to carry on their "something for nothing" campaigns. Over the years we have seen hundreds of consumers fall for the Fictitious Price method of doing business only to learn at some later time that they like thousands of other Americans, have fallen prey to one of the most common rackets in our jewelry industry. We suggest that you shop, compare sales presentations, compare prices, compare the store itself, and then, and only then, will you have some idea of the competitive price of the article you wish to buy.

Winters Named Basic Studies Head

'Dream, Bald Soprano' To Continue Through Sunday

A double-billed presentation of "The American Dream" and "The Bald Soprano" continues tonight at 8 p.m. in Conradi Theatre. The latest plays will run through Friday.

"The American Dream" by Edward Albee is a cynical takeoff on some of the ideas about American "middle-class" living. Sammy Kilman, director, has selected Sam Baker and Annette Hannon to take the lead roles of the very modern Daddy and Mommy in the play.

Baker has acted in numerous University Theater productions. He won the Les Jouglaeurs awards for his performances in "Inherit the Wind" and "The Matchmaker."

This summer he will appear with the Asolo Theatre Comedy Festival for his third year.

Other players include Pat Bain who plays Grandma, Sam Pasco as the ideal American boy and Barbara Quinn as Mrs. Barker.

In the setting for "The American Dream", Hal Poe, designer-technical director, has presented the big dreams of American people today in the triple-sized house furnishings.

This set is an integral part of the scene and story itself.

"The Bald Soprano" by Eugene Ionesco is a one-act play about which Ionesco says: "Life is a grotesque practical joke constantly pulling away chairs from under man's dignity and reason. Nothing is sane; reality is a hall of distorting mirrors reflecting the grime of our own pretensions."

The play projects the idea of the impossibility of communication between people today.

Earl Fisher and Barbara Spelman are the leads in "The Bald Soprano." The two portray a typical couple beset with some of the difficulties facing all such twosomes today.

Also included in the cast are: Rhett Bryson as Mr. Martin; Mary Darr as Mrs. Martin; Janine Chapman; Mary; and John Hoffman, The Fire Chief.

Both plays are directed by Sam Kilman, a graduate student in theater. He recently directed "The Maids" and "The Dumbwaiter."

He has played at FSU roles in "Henry IV, Part I" and "Look Homeward Angel" for which he received two Les Jouglaeurs awards.

Should a run-off election be necessary, it will be Friday Preliminary results of the election will be posted in the entrance to Longmire as soon as they are available.

Any further questions concerning the election should be directed to the Commissioner of Elections in 210 Longmire.

Dr. Stephen S. Winters, an FSU geology teacher for 15 years, has been appointed associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and director of the Division of Basic Studies.

The Basic Studies Division is responsible for instruction and student counseling during the freshman and sophomore years. It seeks to provide an opportunity for a broad knowledge as the basis for specialization or professional training of a student as an upperclassman or graduate student.

Winters, an associate professor of geology, will take over his new duties Sept. 1 from Dr. Conrad E. Tansy, assistant professor of English, who will return to full time teaching.

The new director of basic studies will continue some teaching.

Dr. Winters' classes know him not only for his lively lectures but for his insistence on student participation. To assure participation in large lecture classes, he regularly uses a nine-foot-long bamboo pointer to single out class members as he directs questions to them.

He expressed the view in a Mortar Board Last Lecture last fall that professor and student should be brought together outside the classroom.

"I believe that learning, like bathing or praying, is a personal business—either you want to do it or it can't be done. And because I believe it to be a personal matter, it requires an environment where the student and teacher get to know one another—regardless of class size."

"This means listening as well as speaking by both—and not just in the classroom. I long for and look for the unplanned, spontaneous and informal talk over coffee and cold beer."

A native of Newark, N. J., Winters received his bachelor's degree from Rutgers University in 1942, and, after a two-year service tour in the Pacific, completed his master's and doctor's degree at Columbia. He taught at Rutgers for a year before coming to FSU in 1950.

A member of several professional organizations, Winters was elected president of the Southeastern Geological Society for 1958-9.

His major area of research and teaching has been in stratigraphy and paleontology. For three years he taught the survey course in geology over the educational television station WFSU-TV.

Winters directed Science Camp for two summers here and in 1961 did teaching and research in Panama and the Canal Zone.

Winters is popular with students in and out of class. Twice he brought the highest price among faculty members' sold at the annual faculty auction held for charity.

He is presently faculty adviser to Delta Delta sorority and chairman of the faculty advisory committee for Alpha Phi Omega, men's service fraternity.

Dr. and Mrs. Winters, who live at 1919 Alban Ave., are the parents of two children, Philip, 14, and Martha, 10.

Pool To Open For Use July 1

July 1 is the date scheduled for the opening of the new pool at FSU announced Dr. Reid H. Montgomery, director of student activities and the University Student Union.

The swimming pool has already been completed. However, the dressing rooms will not be ready for use until the completion date.

Students are requested to refrain from using the pool until it is officially opened. The water presently in the pool is only for testing purposes.

The cost of this Olympic-sized pool is $304,000. It is being financed by accumulated student activities funds.

The pool was built primarily for student recreation. It will be open to all students, faculty and staff members and their families.

The charges for the use of the pool will pay for its operation and maintenance, Dr. Montgomery said. The amount of these charges has not been decided.

The water and the broad concrete deck of the pool can be heated for year-round swimming. An eight-foot-high masonry wall will be built around the pool, serving as a windbreak.

The pool will also be an asset to varsity swimming at FSU. "It will provide one of the finest facilities for competitive swimming and diving in the Southeast," said Dr. Montgomery.

Special features in the pool include underwater windows for observation. These are located in the area jutting out into the rectangle near the ten-meter-high diving tower.

An underwater communication system is planned to aid coaches in giving instructions to the swimmers.

The water depths range from four feet to 20 feet deep under the diving tower.

The pool is a regular 50 meters long and 25 yards wide.

Hours for the pool will be announced at a later date.

Youth Symphony To Play Tonight

Two young musicians, Jan Blackmon and Paul Grotzback, will perform solo numbers with the Tallahassee Youth Symphony tonight. The program is at 8:15 p.m. in In-Op-erman Music Hall.

The youth orchestra, made up of junior and senior high school students, is conducted by Jack Swartz of the music faculty and Glenn Helms of the University School.

Miss Blackmon, piano pupil of Mary Reuter, will play Mendelssohn's D minor Concerto.

Grotzback, 17-year-old junior, at Florida Hgh, will play the Mozart Clarinet Concerto.

Wigilius Says P Is Elected

Contrary to previous announcements, a new Student Body Vice-President will be chosen for the year by the Summer Student Senate created by the Student Body Association," said Secretary of Mike Wigilius today.

Thus, in an interview with the Flambeau, expressed concern over the fact that considerable criticism by faculty members and students had been directed at new President John Merting for his appointment of Jeanne Williamson as acting vice-president.

The Constitution clearly states the Senate shall appoint a new President. President Merting has appointed Miss Williamson to insure continuity in the executive until the newly elected Senate meets.

The Summer Senate will elect a President for Trimester III.

The regular Vice-President will be elected in the fall by the full Student Body.

Gratefulness Expressed

To the Editor:

Allow me to express in "The Florida Flambeau" my gratefulness and many, many thanks to the President, Dr. J. Cummer, Dr. E. Bayce, Dr. W. Hair, Dr. S. Marshall, Dr. M. Wilson, Mrs. F. Way, Dr. M. Caldwell, Dr. Stone and all other professors, teachers, and classmates who came to see me or wrote me during my hard time before and after my operation.

They showed me that they don't share only their knowledge or a classroom with their students, but they also have a friendship and close feelings for them.

They also showed me how every person is of supreme worth in your country.

I know that my personal value was not so high, however it makes you feel so good when you see people you appreciate so much coming to visit you!

I will never be able to express what I felt but I can tell you that I will be always grateful.

Thanks again.

You can help build a living memorial to John F. Kennedy

If you have been wishing there were some way you could pay a personal tribute to the memory of the late President, here is your opportunity. The American people are completing the project he was planning when he died, the John F. Kennedy Library, in Boston, Massachusetts.

The goal is $10,000,000. Thousands of donations, large and small, have already brought in $5,000,000. A national magazine gave the $75,000 profit from their memorial issue. A girl in Cincinnati sent Caroline $1 for her daddy's library which she had saved from her lunch money.

MORE THAN A LIBRARY. Presidential libraries were built by public-private subscription for Hoover, Roosevelt, Truman and Eisenhower. The priceless documents of each administration are collected there, and the libraries turned over to the American people for their use. John F. Kennedy wanted his library to be more than a museum, however. As he envisioned it, it will also be a place where teachers, scholars and administrators, will be learning and trained to bring to public service the highest ideals and practical skills.

If you want to help keep alive this dream for America that was John F. Kennedy's, you will want to join.

Contributions will be acknowledged by Mrs. Kennedy. Your name will be recorded in the Great Book of Contributions, which will be on permanent display in the Library.

HOW TO GIVE. If you wish to contribute to the memorial building fund for the John F. Kennedy Library, fill out the coupon below and mail it with your donation. All contributions are tax deductible.

Flambeau Play Review

I feel the obligation of beginning this review with an apology to the people who, with eager eyes and righteous indignation have followed my last two reviews, and are hoping for an excuse to write angry letters to the "Flambeau" during the heat of the dull Sunday afternoons.

This review is in general good, so if you want dirt I suggest you turn to the editorial where some scandalous, radical, and enlightened idea is sure to be waiting for you. (Ed. note: How true.)

In the Opera Guild's production of "My Fair Lady," the parts joined together and formed a delightful evening of musical theater.

Special recognition should go to the dancers and the choreographer, Jack Simmons. For once the dancers seemed to be a part of the dramatic action, rather than a herd that had been called in at the last minute because they had rhythm.

The chorus was also excellent and, with the assistance of Fred Vorce's direction, became individuals instead of a backdrop for the movements of Higgins and Liza.

Contract Grant Awarded Institute

FSU's Oceanographic Institute has been awarded a contract renewal grant of $27,000 by the Office of Naval Research, the Institute's Director Albert W. Collier announced today.

The grant underwrites research on microscopic algae from the deep sea, a project which has been directed by Collier for several years. Collection of the minute diatoms used in the oceanographic research is being made by graduate students, said Collier. The students, working aboard the University of Miami's research vessels, gather specimens during periodic voyages through the Florida Straits and the Bahama Islands.

Monograph Published

A research monograph, "Crystallization of Polymers," by Dr. Leo Mandelkern, professor of chemistry in the Institute of Molecular Biophysics and the Department of Chemistry at FSU has just been published by McGraw-Hill Book Co., New York.

The $59 page book is part of the publisher's series in advanced chemistry.

The monograph discusses synthetic polymers as well as naturally occurring ones of biological interest and importance.

Dr. Mandelkern served as a member of the National Bureau of Standards staff for ten years before joining the FSU faculty in 1962.

Robert Gaillard, a graduate student, has just returned from a voyage made under the recently inaugurated FSU-University of Miami cooperative program in oceanography. The program, which promotes joint use of facilities and staff of FSU's Oceanographic Institute and Miami's Institute of Marine Science, began this spring.

Hayward Mathews, another graduate student at FSU, will collect specimens for the Naval Research project on a current voyage aboard the R/V Gerda, said Collier.

Firm Publishes Book By Kobre

"Dynamic Force of Public Relations Today," a book by Dr. Sidney Kobre, professor of public relations and communications at FSU, has been published by William C. Brown Company of Dubuque, Iowa.

The 296-page volume provides students with a broad public relations horizon. Dr. Kobre directs attention to the "publics" of an organization, the employees, the shareholders, the consumers and the members of a community.

The book deals with business and industrial public relations, but also has extensive chapters on non-profit groups, such as health and welfare organizations, as well as government agencies.

Dr. Kobre also deals with school and college public relations activities.

A number of the chapters are concerned with public relations tools of communications. These include the writing of news articles and the production of special events, exhibits, brochures and house publications. Dr. Kobre has chapters on still photos and motion pictures for public relations work.

Four years in the writing and one in the production, the book is backed by Dr. Kobre's extensive experience. He holds an A.B. degree from Johns Hopkins University, and a Ph.D. from Columbia University. He joined the FSU faculty in 1949.

Advisor Named

Arthur S. Adams, director of university personnel at FSU, has been appointed to the Leon County Occupational Advisory Committee for the Business Education Department of Lively Technical School.

The purpose of the committee is to advise and assist the Lively Technical School in setting up the courses in business education.

Napoli Selected Lead

Joseph Napoli, an FSU junior, has been selected by composer Carlisle Floyd to sing in the opera "Susannah" presented by the Cincinnati Summer Opera Association July 8 and 11.

Napoli who sang in 11 performances of "Susannah" this year with the State Opera Association of Florida, has the role of Little Bat McLean.

A music education major, Napoli is from the studio of Herta Gunter of the School of Music faculty. He has appeared as soloist with the University Singers, the FSU Choral Union and the Madrigal Singers.

Active in Opera Guild productions, he was most recently seen in "My Fair Lady" as Jamie.

FSU To Sponsor Aerospace Education Workshop

FSU will sponsor an aerospace education workshop for elementary and secondary teachers July 10-July 13. Enrollment will be limited to 60 teachers, said the course director, Dr. C. Robert Blackman, assistant professor of education, in a statement outlining the purposes of the workshop.

Open to school teachers from all subject areas of education, and non-technical in nature, the course is being offered for undergraduate and graduate credit.

Titled "Science Education 403," the workshop will provide teachers with aerospace knowledge and experiences, including flights, tours of aerospace installations and lectures and demonstrations by outstanding leaders in this field, said Dr. Blackman.

"The workshop will not be stated toward science teachers alone," he added. "It is anticipated that it will include special study groupings concerned with the relationships of aerospace education to the general curriculum, to science education, and to elementary and secondary education."

"Those taking the course should gain an understanding of the great and rapid progress which is being made in the conquest of space," he continued, "and learn ways to utilize aerospace knowledge and experience in the classroom."

Preference will be given to Florida teachers, for whom the cost will be approximately $100 for the three-day workshop. Classes will meet for five hours daily, except Sundays, and all participants must complete University registration and receive admission acceptance, or re-acceptance, to qualify for the workshop. Sponsored by the U.S. Air Force and the Florida wing of the Civil Air Patrol, the workshop will receive assistance from the aerospace industries and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. Co-Director of the course is Dr. Robert

D. Martin, assistant professor of education at FSU.

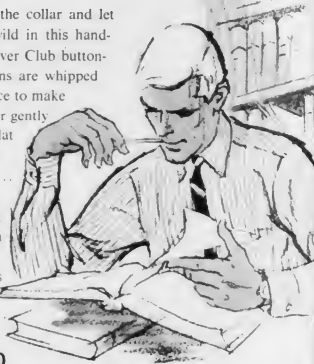

Consultants include Ken C. Perkins, Director of Aerospace Education, AF-CAP Liaison Office, Southeast Region, Nashville, Tenn.; Col. Betty McNabb, Southeastern Regional Aerospace Education Officer, CAP; Dr. G. Ballard Simmons, Dean of the Institute of Educational Studies at Florida Atlantic University; and John T. Kirby, research advisor with the Florida Education Association.

Representatives of the U.S. and aerospace industries will participate in workshop preparation and planning.

BUYING A DIAMOND WHOLESALE

One of the greatest American come-ons is the lure of buying a diamond wholesale. Generally, there are ethical wholesale jewelers who do seek individual consumers as their customers. As there is no law in Florida, Georgia or Alabama that prohibits any man from buying himself a wholesale ring, although some six or seven states have passed such legislation.

Diamonds offer one of the most flagrant opportunities for the fake wholesaler to earn his method of doing business — namely — mark him up so they can be hawked down or disguise the true quality with flowery description that deprecates the prospective customer into thinking he is obtaining a finer quality diamond than is actually the case.

If a $20 diamond is overvalued at $200, it certainly is a bargain at a 40 per cent discount. Maybe you can remember an old song in which some years ago, called "I can get it for you wholesale." It started out "I'll give you an old song in which some years ago, called "I can get it for you wholesale." I can get it for you wholesale.

Today's advertising of diamonds often features them at 40-50 and sometimes even 75 per cent off — of course the "darker" is off from what, and who establishes the price.

There is still another kind of "Fake Wholesaler" in our jewelry industry. He's the person that uses the "Courageous (and) printed up with 'wholesaler' on his cards and stationery. These are distributed by his friends and relatives with a space for the name to be filled in. These usually state that Mr. Tucker is entitled to wholesale privileges and wholesale discounts. This would be a laugh except for the fact that it is fraudulent, deceitful and dishonest.

If a so-called "wholesale jeweler" is willing to sell anything to an individual not in the jewelry business you may be sure they are "Fake Wholesalers." Again, when an individual not in the jewelry business tries to buy a diamond at "What he thinks wholesale" he usually pays more than if he had bought the stone from some jeweler who is a member of the American Gem Society.

Dave Mead— Flambeau Book Review Program Begun

Dr. James Jones spoke Wednesday on "Convention" by Fletcher Knebel and C. W. Bailey II. The novel is the story of a future Republican National Convention in which the actions which lead to the nomination of the Republican presidential candidate.

Dr. Jones felt that the book was unimpressive. He said the characters were poorly drawn, there was an oversimplification of motives and issues, and a distinct lack of drama. The plot of "Convention" is very simple. The political favorite is naive in politics and too frank with the press. His opponent is used to political wheedling and dealing. The "bad guy" uses such tricks as computers, fake tickets, and arm-twisting to win the nomination.

The theme of the novel is the intervention in politics by private enterprise. The labor unions and businessmen are backing the "bad guy." The authors imply that there is no place in politics for meddling businessmen.

Jones said that "Convention" was much less effective and less dramatic than "Seven Days in May," which is also by the same authors. This writer was disappointed in the review because Dr. Jones did not go into depth concerning the action of the book. He spent most of his time reflecting on the "state of the art" in political fiction and the authors' previous work.

Dr. Jones did not defend his value judgements. He hurried through a cursory summary of the plot and repeated himself often.

However, the review was delivered under adverse circumstances. The attendance totaled six persons. This was not conducive to more than a mediocre review.

The insult to Jones' professional integrity may have been intended, but this writer wonders why faculty participation, especially by the planning committee, was so bad. The choice of books may be one of the causes of poor student attendance.

A new program in information science leading toward a master of science degree is being offered at FSU to students who have majored in a science as undergraduates. Under the direction of Dr. Gerald Jahoda, professor in the Library School, the program prepares students for expanding career opportunities in industry and government. Courses in abstracting and indexing, literature searching, instrumentation of information services, information center administration as well as basic courses in librarianship will be offered to the information science major.

In addition, the program includes one or two trimesters of work experience, either on campus or in an information center of campus. A full time student will be able to earn a degree in from 15 to 18 months.

Applicants must have majored in a biological, physical or mathematical science, have two years of a foreign language, and a grade average of B in major and collateral courses. They must have an acceptable score on the Graduate Record Examination. Further information can be obtained from Dr. Louis Shores, of the Library School.

There will be a deep-sea fishing trip Saturday, June 6. Transportation will leave from in front of Bryan at 6:00 a.m. The tour will return by 7:30 p.m. The tour will be an $8.00 boat fee. Students should sign up and pay for the trip by noon, Tuesday.

...My Fair Lady

Henry Higgins, Shaw's Pygmalion, the one who creates, and Eliza Doolittle, his Galatea, the person created, are two of the most difficult roles in the musical theater.

Miss Minihan, although she seemed a bit worn out by the middle of the second act, and Thomas Cavendish managed to bring their characters to life and keep them within the bounds of credibility.

After a weak start, Cavendish found his character in "I'm an Ordinary Man," performed with a wit and vitality he sustained for the rest of the play.

Miss Minihan charmed her audience in "All I Want is a Room Somewhere," and her graduate transformation from flower girl to duchess was exciting and moving.

Jack Simmons brought a sure sense of comic timing to his portrayal of Alfred P. Doolittle, Eliza's amoral father, but lacked the strength and vigor necessary to bring this rowdy character to life.

Lonnie Keene's Colonel Pickering was a well-done caricature of the typical bumbling Briton who will always muddle through.

The sets were unobtrusive, having neither the artistry of the sets for "Susannah" nor the unrelieved ugliness of those provided for "Carmen."

The propgirls deserve a slap on the wrist for allowing that shining silver tea set to ruin one of the scenes in the second act.

"My Fair Lady" is the greatest American musical since the now-classic "Of Thee I Sing." The Opera Guild's production provided the most stimulating evening of theatre I've had at F.S.U.

Isometrics Urged For Trim Figure

For people who want to get in better shape but haven't much time—there's now "instant exercise."

No-movement exercise or isometrics, if you want to be scientific, cuts you down in size—and that's where it matters when you struggle into a bathing suit—by firming up the muscle tissue.

It doesn't take much time—ten seconds for each exercise—or much trouble. You don't "move a muscle"—that is, not so you can notice it. But before you throw away the calorie counter, appetite depressant pills and bathroom scales in favor of an exercise book—take a word of warning from FSU physical education specialist Peter Everett who has supervised several research studies on the subject.

Everett says, "It's still a matter of balance between what you eat and the exercise." He advises his students who want to lose weight in this manner: "You have to eat less than you expend in activity."

"Exercise alone has been overrated as a way of losing weight," said Everett. "It's main benefit is in building the strength and endurance you need."

However if it is flab you want to lose—and who doesn't—then isometrics may be your dish. It works this way: You overload the muscle—the muscle tissue firms up—and you get a slimmer looking figure.

Charles Atlas became one of the forerunners of the concept back in 1929 when he began to publicize what he called "dynamic tension." His ideas differed from those of today in that he worked muscles against muscles while we "work muscles against immovable objects," Everett said. Then in 1953 a German researcher (Mueller) published results of tests that showed the no-movement exercises had merit in the area of physical conditioning. Before you could say "isometrics" a hassle arose in the physical education world as to the merits of the "no movement" exercises as compared to "isotonic" exercises—so plain old fashioned callisthenics.

A student in physical education and recreation at FSU, Tom Martin of Pittsburgh, Pa., has just completed a study comparing the effects of the two types of conditioning programs as part of his work for the doctoral degree he will receive in August. He found that isometrics are proving they do increase muscular strength but lose in endurance while the isotonic (callisthenics) also increase in strength and still remain the same in endurance. He used 68 college freshmen and sophomores in the experiment.

Everett believes that a combination of the two types of exercise produces the best results. In order to lose weight, the calorie reduction factor would have to be added. You lose when the body is forced to use up the fat stored in various depositories, according to Everett. He adds, what almost any weight watcher can affirm, "the area first to put it on is the last to take it off."

Beating, bouncing, vibrating machines and pounding and pinching do very little good, according to Everett. They follow a theory that fatty tissues disintegrate giving a weight loss in a certain spot on the body. "Facts show that the possibility of 'spot reducing' is questionable," said Everett. When one reduces he loses fat deposits all over the body.

Some folks who have quit smoking and starting gaining have taken up walking. About this Everett says, "It gets you out in the fresh air which is nice but it is not much for weight losing. Body weight can be reduced by burning about 4000 calories per approximate pound. If a 200 pound person walked an hour he would use up about 400 calories. He would have to walk 10 hours in order to lose one pound."

Nine students were elected as senators-at-large to the Summer Legislative Council in campus-wide elections Tuesday.

The nine were elected from a slate of twelve candidates. They will be sworn into office Monday by the Chief Justice of the Honor Court Everett Steadman, pending the return of their campaign expense statements.

Those elected to the Council and their vote totals were: Sharon Cunningham (204), Bill Daly (173), Anne Claire DeVane (232), Bob Green (164), Sherman Henderson (197), Phil Potter (150), John Roussos (143), John White (129), and P. C. Wu (215).

Unsuccessful candidates were Murray Cohen (94), Bill Connor (123), and Clyde Hadman (91).

One other candidate was disqualified when a check of grades revealed that he was not eligible to hold office. An average of 2.0 is required for membership in the Summer Legislative Council.

After taking office next week, the Council will elect a president-pro tem, who will assume the duties of the Vice-President of the Student Body. This person will serve in his capacity for the remainder of the summer.

Jeanie Williamson was appointed earlier by Student Body President John Merring to fill the office temporarily.

Next fall, after the precinct elections, the regular Student Senate will elect a Senator to fill the office permanently.

Dr. Charron Named Director Of FSU French Institute Program

FSU has been selected for the second year to host a National Defense Education Act French Institute. Dr. Victor Oelschlagel, head of the Department of Modern Languages at FSU, announced today.

For eight weeks, from June 21 to August 14, 45 American French teachers will create their own French community on the FSU campus, for the purpose of improving their own ability in the language, increasing their knowledge of French culture, and learning to use new methods and equipment in the teaching of French.

The Institute is under the direction of Dr. Jean Charron of FSU's Department of Modern Languages. It will be staffed by six regular and visiting faculty members, a number of French "Informants" (walking dictionaries and encyclopedias), for the most part exchange teachers from France, plus distinguished visiting lecturers.

Associate Director and Director of Laboratory is Miss Nancy Shirley, instructor at Emory University.

Professor Sanford Newell, chairman of the Modern Language Department at Converse College, will teach Applied Linguistics and Language Analysis.

Professor Georges-Paul Collet of FSU will lecture on the Culture and Civilization of France. Methods will be presented by Mrs. Elizabeth Etinger, Associate Professor at Converse College.

Demonstration classes will be handled by Mrs. Jeanne Palyok, a French teacher at Dreher High School, Columbia, South Carolina. Joseph Pesseat, instructor at the University of British Columbia, will conduct classes in conversation and writing.

All of the faculty have several years of Institute experience behind them. Some of them have as much as five years.

The participants will be subjected to a rigorous program over 40 days, a week in the classroom of language laboratory.

The classes will be very closely coordinated. Material and problems presented and discussed by one teacher will be dealt with from another angle by other teachers according to their area of specialization.

The goal of the Institute is to have the participants eating, drinking, breathing, thinking and even dreaming French. A no-English rule will be in force throughout the Institute, both in and out of the classroom—whenever the teachers are in the company of fellow participants.

To ensure that this is most of the time, the teachers will be required to live in the "Maison Lafayette," a new, air-conditioned sorority house where French atmosphere is created with French menus, newspapers, magazines, and recordings. In addition, French holidays will be celebrated, a French film will be shown each week, and informal get-togethers will be scheduled, featuring picnics, songfests, or excursions—all, of course, in French.

The Institute is financed by the Federal government under the National Defense Education Act. This year the Institute has received a grant of $80,000.

Public school teachers may apply for a $75 a week stipend to cover living expenses, with extra grants for dependents.

The 45 participating secondary school French teachers, representing 16 states, are being selected from some 175 applicants.

The teachers-turned-students will attend classes from 7:50 a.m. to 9:00 p.m., four days a week and from 7:50 a.m. to 1 p.m. two days a week. There will also be an optional lab period.

Thursday and Saturday afternoons will be left free for informal gatherings, personal chores, or scheduled activities.

In addition to improving their accents and broadening their knowledge of French culture, the participants will learn new methods of teaching modern languages.

The traditional emphasis on reading and writing, rather than speaking. Many students found themselves unable to communicate when they came into contact with native speakers.

During World War II, new methods of language teaching began to be developed, with emphasis on speaking the language before learning to read and write it.

The audio-lingual approach makes language training as possible as early as grammar school.

SMOKE SIGNALS OUT

The Summer issue of SMOKE SIGNALS will be distributed to all students on Tuesday, June 9, in front of the Student Library and in back of Westcott Building. The magazine is available upon presentation of a student ID card.

Socialist League Reprimanded By SG Executive Committee

By AL GALBRAITH
Flambeaux Staff Writer

The Young People's Socialist League has been reprimanded by the Student Government Executive Committee, Attorney General Ed Scott announced today.

According to Scott, who was assisted on the committee by John Jones and John Merring, the committee objected to the distribution of material which advocated "actively resisting and breaking the immoral laws of the United States in this country" during registration for the summer trimester at Tully O'Connell.

The material objected to consisted of a page printed front and back with this message:

information from the Summer Executive Council of the Young People's Socialist League.

The page explained the function of YPSL and called for student support in its "active program of picketing and civil disobedience."

It went on to support integration, the Liberal Forum, and academic freedom.

Scott's committee, according to the letter, which was dated April 29, objected to the part calling for students breaking the laws of the country.

His letter said, in part: "We do advocate that freedom of speech and dissent is essential and vital if we are to keep a living democracy in this nation."

However, we, as members of the Executive Branch of Student Government and students of Florida State University, cannot tolerate or condone the actions of a recognized student group that advocates and invites students to join in breaking laws even though the groups may consider the laws to be "immoral."

Scott concluded: "We are looking forward to a outstanding year; however, this can only be accomplished in an atmosphere of respect and cooperation among the students, the Student Government, and all organizations."

The FSU chapter of YPSL was recognized as a University organization by the Student Senate last trimester.

Vaccine Available

The trivalent oral polio vaccine will be offered every Friday in June for $1.00. Anyone needing their second dose should go by the University Infirmary during its regular clinic hours.

W.H. Rogers Awarded Degree

William Hudson Rogers of the English Department has received an honorary Doctor of Literature degree from Davidson College, North Carolina.

Rogers was graduated from FSU in 1913.

He was named to his Alma Mater by Rogers' first return for a semester—back when he was a student—back when, as he says, "it did not have a major" because "your name wasn't known in those parts."

Rogers began his teaching at Grundy, West Virginia.

He moved his wife and Ph.D. degree from the University of Virginia.

Rogers joined the faculty of Davidson in 1922. From 1947 to 1950 he served as acting dean of College of Arts and Sciences.

He was selected as first vice-president of FSU. He was named an honorary member of Phi Kappa leadership honor society.

Phi Kappa called Dr. Rogers "the personification of the gentleman and a scholar" when he was elected a member of the organization.

Rogers is also a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Phi Beta Kappa, and the Raven Society (Virginia).

The summer will mark the end of Rogers' 42 years of teaching at Davidson.

Gators Run Maze For FSU Scientists

After two years running mazes in an FSU laboratory, seven alligators now have been turned loose to face the more complicated maze of pathways in the marsh grass of their native Florida habitat.

In the FSU psychology laboratory, the choices facing the alligators were simple ones: turning left or right at the end of an eight foot long runway.

Out of his experiments with the alligators, however, doctoral student Robert S. Davidson Jr. hopes he has developed a new methodology in maze technique, adding some of the methodology of the "Skinner box," another psychological device, to the two-choice runway.

His use of alligators for maze experiments is the first by a psychologist, so far as is known here, although previous work has been done with animals lower than the rat which usually is used. These animals have included earthworms, cockroaches, fish and several others. The famous psychologist, Yerkies, ran frogs and crabs in a runway having the same floorplan as Davidson's.

Psychologists are conducting several experiments here with a variety of animals, most of them reptiles, and so when Davidson's alligators were brought here from Wakulla River two years ago, their housemates in a converted residence, the Sikes House, were an assortment of snakes, turtles and even a few Central American iguanas.

Working under the direction of Dr.

Barron B. Scarborough, associate professor of psychology, Davidson set his alligators to running a maze with its four foot wide course divided at the exit end into two separate exits.

To start the animals down the maze and keep them going Davidson hit upon the idea of using heat as a stimulus. He ran onto this idea almost by accident.

"I had been told alligators liked to sun a great deal and presumably liked heat," he said. "To make them comfortable I hung a heat lamp about seven feet from the floor where we kept the alligators and left it burning overnight."

"To my surprise they had all moved away from the lamp in the morning and subsequently I found they would always get away from the heat of the lamp. So heat lamps became the aversive stimulus to get them off down the maze."

The heat lamp brought the already high room temperature of 90 to 94 degrees F. up to 105 degrees along the floor of the maze. At the end of the maze the alligators would get a cooling splash into a tank and two-lick shineret bait, whether they chose left or right.

The alligators fairly quickly would go down the maze and as they did so Davidson watched their reflection in an overhead mirror. In order not to disturb them by his presence, however, he watched through periscopes in the door to an adjacent room. After a maximum of 10 to 40 trials, Davidson found that the alligators consistently began to leave the maze by the same exit—either the left or the right one. In this respect they differed from rats, which in a similar situation have been found to alternate from side to side—presumably because they are more the explorer sort.

After an alligator got in the habit of going either left or right at the end of the maze, he would be habitually chose then was blocked off by a transparent plexiglass "cull" so that he could get to the water and fish reward only by using the other passageway.

By measuring the alligator's success in learning to use a new exit some of the same kind of information about his behavior may be obtained as may be obtained for some animals in the Skinner box, Davidson said. By measuring the time taken to traverse the maze by each animal on each trial, the experimenter arrives at a graphic picture of the variability between trials. Davidson reports that, under the conditions of his experiment, variability in response is reduced to a minimum.

Davidson has run his alligators, which have acquired such pet names as "Tiger" and "Old Yellow Stripes," several times a day. He has set every other day, or four days a week.

So far he hasn't completely analyzed the considerations involved in the maze. He has set up observations. He expects to do so in the months ahead as he prepares a doctoral dissertation. He also expects to conduct some similar experiments with rats as a check.

Davidson has begun a year of internship at the Coral Gables Veterans Administration Hospital and then he expects to get a Ph.D. Originally from Bakerfield, Calif., he received his undergraduate education and also a master's degree from Occidental College and before coming to FSU nearly three years ago studied for two at Pomona. While the Davidsons were living in Tallahassee, Mrs. Davidson, the former Joy Ferguson of Fort Collins, Colo., became well known to concert audiences in the capital city for her concert singing and her roles in opera.

Conclave Ends Today

Fourteen experienced conductors including several from Canada, have been on the FSU campus since Monday for a conducting symposium under the direction of Richard Burgin, member of the FSU music faculty and an associate conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Burgin, well known concertmaster and distinguished professor of music at the University of Toronto, was the keynote speaker in the week-long symposium by Robert Sedore, conductor of the Florida State Symphony.

The conductors worked with the University Symphony every night in study sessions on technique of directing college and community orchestras.

Winding up the symposium is a concert tonight by the University Symphony Orchestra under the direction of selected guest conductors from the participants.

Scheduled for 8:15 p.m. in Opperman Music Hall, it is free and open to the public.

Conductors registered for the 1964 conducting symposium include the conductor of The St. Lawrence, Louisiana Symphony; assistant conductor of the Dallas Texas Symphony; assistant conductor of the Birmingham Symphony; conductor of the Kingsport Tennessee Symphony; conductor of Hollywood (Florida) Philharmonic Orchestra.

Also the conductor of the New York Orchestral Society; conductor of the Midland (Michigan) Symphony.

Valuable Labor Force Uncovered

A recent survey has revealed that the 546 spouses of FSU faculty and administrators constitute a large labor pool for needy employers in the Tallahassee area.

The 11 graduate students enrolled in Dr. Harvey Tischler's Human Factors in Administration seminar sent questionnaires to the wives and discovered that the large labor source offers a variety of skills, depth in education and experience, and both full-time and part-time work aspirants.

Of the 343 replies to the questionnaires, 150 wives indicated their willingness to work (60 of these for 30 hours or more).

Teaching, secretarial employment, and general office work were the most frequently listed of the 228 occupational interests mentioned by respondents.

Less common skills uncovered in the sample included woodcutting, data processing, textile chemistry, Japanese literature volume work, printing, general agriculture, and massage.

That faculty and administrative wives would bring experience and versatility to prospective employers is indicated by the 50 respondents who indicated previous job training in at least two different occupations and the 17 who indicated three or more occupations.

Out of the 336 responses to an age-group question, the largest number (43%) are between 31 and 50 years of age and one out of three of these (35%) expressed a desire for part-time or full-time work, if it were available.

The educational backgrounds of the wives are considerably higher than the average population. All finished high school and 81% are college graduates. Of the latter group, 10% have master degrees and an additional 4% have a doctorate.

The data collected was coded and punched into IBM cards to form a ready classification of wives by type of work desired, available working hours, recent employment status, age-group, educational level, major field of study, and special employment skills.

The results have been made available to the University Personnel Office, the Florida State Employment Commission, and to the State Merit System, and to the State Merit System to assist in publicizing this labor group to both private and public employers.

All interested hiring officials, however, will be referred to the University Personnel Office for specific names and addresses of candidates whom they may wish to interview.

Participants in the survey included Bob Barringer, Blackwell, John Leesch, Cutajar, Anita Donaldson, Honda, Bill Joiner, Web Moore, Wade Lewis, Bob Schmidt, and Turja.

Dr. William H. Rogers To Retire After Forty-One Year Career

Today marks the end of an era at FSU. Dr. William Hudson Rogers of the English Dept. will teach his final class at FSU today when his Early Shakespearean Plays class meets for the last time. Dr. Rogers has taught at FSU for 41 years. Just last week he was awarded an honorary Doctor of Literature degree from his alma mater Davidson College in North Carolina.

Dr. Rogers was born in Virginia Feb. 4, 1894. He received his bachelor of arts at Davidson in 1913 and went immediately to teach school in Grundy, West Virginia for two years. He completed his masters degree in 1916 at the University of Virginia. War interrupted his schooling as the Kaiser's forces began to upset Europe. Dr. Rogers went to France as an ambulance driver and for his bravery was awarded the French Croix de Guerre, the highest military honor that France may bestow. After his tour of duty, he returned to the University of Virginia where he obtained his Ph. D. in 1922.

Dr. Rogers was then invited to teach at the Florida State College for Women. He accepted and moved to Tallahassee from where he was never to depart. Following a long career as the chief instructor in Shakespeare and Browning, Dr. Rogers was offered the post of Acting Dean of Arts and Sciences in 1947. He took the position but his heart was in the classroom and he gave up the office in 1948. In 1957, Dr. Rogers was selected as the first Distinguished Professor at FSU. He was named an honorary member of Gold Key, the FSU student leadership honorary, in 1958.

Omicron Delta Kappa called him "the personification of the phrase, 'a gentleman and a scholar'" when he was elected a member of that service organization. Dr. Rogers has also achieved membership in Zeta Psi social fraternity, Phi Beta Kappa, and the Raven Society (Virginia). In an interview with "Flambeau" reporters, Dr. Rogers reminisced about the days when the campus population was 750 and was centered around Westcott. One thing was the same, however: "I don't remember any year of the 41 I have been here when the grass cutter didn't choose my class hour for cutting the lawn outside the window."

As for advice to others, Dr. Rogers admonished youth to be sincere and honest in relations, considerate of others, and to cultivate the love of beauty around you. After his official retirement takes effect, Dr. Rogers plans to fish, refinish old furniture, and read volitionally. He also plans to express his years of experience and love of literature in writing.

Twenty-Six Turkish Teachers Begin Two-Week Inspection

Twenty-six science teachers from Turkey, selected to staff a new High School of Science opening in September, have begun a two-week inspection of high school science facilities in Florida preliminary to a summer-long textbook-writing session at FSU. Dr. Stanley Marshall, head of FSU's Science Education Department, which has a grant of $625,000 from the Ford Foundation to help set up the high school, greeted the teachers and their arrival from Turkey and scheduled visits to three Florida school systems. Today they will visit Hillsborough County schools and the University of South Florida's new Planetarium and on June 16-18 Dade county schools.

On Monday, June 22, they will return to the FSU campus for work on textbooks, laboratory manuals and other materials to be used this fall by 100 gifted students selected for the ninth grade. A Turkish science editor will help write the books. The teachers will be joined on June 27 by 13 Turkish professors of science and mathematics who have been helping for the past year to get the new high school under way. The Turkish group will be complete with the arrival before June 27 of three Turkish scientists and a translator.

The entire group will work on campus through Aug. 21. The new high school, which will be at Ankara, is designed for education of gifted students and particularly to help increase the flow of scientists and technologists into a Turkish economy which has been undergoing rapid changes in recent years. The high school also is intended to serve as a model for other Turkish high schools.

One grade will be added each year until a three-year school with about 300 students will be in operation. Curriculum materials for the upper grades will be developed in succeeding summers.

Reservation To Close

The Reservation will be closed tomorrow through Monday due to final exams in first-term courses. It will reopen for the usual hours Tuesday.

Dr. William Hudson Rogers But this rough magic I here abjure; and, when I have required some speedy music, which even now I do,—to work mine end upon their senses that this airy charm is for, I'll break my staff, bury it deeper than did ever plummet sound I'll drown my song.

Dr. Linder Awarded Fellowship

Seigenheim Fellowship has been awarded Dr. Bruno Linder of FSU's Department of Chemistry for a year of research in Holland. Dr. Linder and his family will sail for New York in August. His research will be done at the University of Amsterdam's Institute for Theoretical Physics headed by Prof. Jan de Boer.

Meanwhile Linder will leave next week for the University of Wisconsin where he has been invited to serve for a month and a half as visiting faculty member of the Theoretical Chemistry Institute of which Dr. Joseph Herschfelder is director. A theoretical and nuclear chemist, Linder does some of his research with the tandem van de Graaff positive ion accelerator at FSU. His teaching is in the field of physical chemistry.

Dr. Linder's primary research interest is intermolecular forces—the forces which are responsible for holding molecules together. He is a native of Poland, grew up in Dutch West Indies and received his bachelor's degree in 1948 from Upsala College in New Jersey.

Scholarship To Honor Trussell

A science education scholarship has been set up in honor of Dr. Malvina Trussell, who is retiring as professor of science education at FSU at the end of the present term. The scholarship, to be called the Malvina Trussell Elementary Science Education Scholarship, was announced at a dinner for Miss Trussell at the Holiday Inn last Sunday night.

Miss Trussell is winding up a 44-year teaching career, 15 years of which have been at FSU. She is a former president of the American Nature Study Association.

Blackwell Gives Commencement Talk

MIAMI BEACH, June 7—Today's college graduates can expect shorter moneyback guarantees on their education than ever before, Dr. Gordon W. Blackwell, president of FSU, told the University of Miami's Commencement class Sunday.

As commencement speaker and recipient of an honorary Doctor of Laws degree at UM's graduation ceremonies, Dr. Blackwell called the graduates' attention to the powerful forces at work in the modern "knowledge revolution."

"Depending on what field you are in, the moneyback guarantee on your facts and data, research and technical processes will range in time from about the standard guarantee on a new washing machine to 10 or 15 years," said the FSU president.

Quoting "multiversity president" Clark Kerr of the University of California, Dr. Blackwell noted that knowledge...and continuing education...may be the most powerful elements in modern culture. "What the railroad did for the second half of the last century and the automobile for the first half of this century may be done for the second half of this century by the knowledge industry," he said.

"The most thoughtful of our leaders see clearly how knowledge will determine the future. In this state there is a growing awareness that Florida's future and Florida's higher education are irrevocably joined. I say there is awareness—but certainly not complete understanding of the critical role of education, for neither our public nor our private institutions are adequately supported by either funds or commitment," Dr. Blackwell said.

"There is no place for a pecking order in the higher learning," he added, commenting on the growing need for cooperation between and greater support for both public and private universities. "Each must be made strong," he said.

One of three honored guests at the ceremonies, Dr. Blackwell received the LL.D. degree from University of Miami President Henry King Stanford who cited Blackwell for "recognizing that universities do not live by brick and mortar alone."

President Stanford continued: "...He has effectively spoken out against the forces which tend to restrain centers of inquiry during times of social upheaval, which tend to restrain public universities from achieving the very objectives of questioning the status quo for which society developed universities in the first instance."

As chief executive officer of one of Florida's major universities, he strives for the goal of progress through enlightenment."

ABOUT WATCHES

Graduation time is again and in this position one's educational career and one's close friends and family can remember this occasion with a "fine watch."

Watches today are quite different from those produced 30 years ago, so word of advice might be in order —

There are two general classifications of watches, jeweled-lever, which is finer quality and the jewel-lever. In the jewel-lever synthetic rubies are used at the points of friction. These rubies are drilled with a tiny hole and it is these holes that the wheel to the watch turn almost frictionless. Actually the jewels cost very little but they perform a most necessary function.

Keep in mind that just because a certain watch has a powerful advertising program behind it doesn't prove that the particular make is all that is claimed to be. Actually the finest watch in the world (the Patek Philippe) and many other quality watches are seldom advertised. Usually, preferring to depend on the knowledge of a dealer to recommend, advertise and service their product.

The pin-lever watch is constructed very inexpensively. In this type of timepiece metal pins and bearings are used instead of jewels. Therefore the life of a pin-lever watch is short and usually costs over $100. In years service is almost nil.

Over the years great changes have taken place in the watch industry. Brands that once were renowned watches are no longer with us. Therefore select the jeweler who will guide your watch purchase is quite important. He should know what is a good value in a watch and above all have a service department staffed by qualified watchmakers proper instruments for determining the accuracy of his watches, pressure tanks for checking the tightness of a waterproof case and above all the integrity to pass his sound judgment on to you.

Leon Instructor Receives Award

Mrs. A.R. Cox, a Leon County teacher now studying toward a doctorate at FSU, has been awarded one of two graduate scholarships by the Delta Kappa Gamma society of Florida.

The Florida organization of Delta Kappa Gamma, national professional honor society for woman educators, annually awards one or two scholarships to members working toward advanced degrees.

Currently completing her course work in curriculum development, Mrs. Cox will soon begin research on a problem related to the library as a factor in curriculum improvement. Mrs. Cox was librarian at both Cobb Junior High for eight years and presently is on leave as librarian at Leon High.

For the past three summers she has taught library science at Western Carolina College.

During 1963 and earlier this year, she served as visiting instructor on the staff of the FSU Library School teaching classes in Sarasota, St. Petersburg, Orlando, Pensacola and Panama City with the Florida Institute for Continuing University Studies.

Her husband is a staff member in the Vocational, Technical and Adult Education Division of the State Department of Education.

Mrs. Cox taught school in Marion County before coming to Tallahassee.

The other recipient of the Delta Kappa Gamma scholarship is Mrs. Ruby B. Carson of Winter Park.

A PUBLIC SERVICE AWARD

FSU Sociologists Publish Book

A new book by two FSU sociologists, RACIAL CRISIS IN AMERICA, is described by the New York Times as a "brief but excellent reappraisal of the social revolution now sweeping the nation, one that is soberly realistic as it is timely."

The authors of the book, published by Prentice-Hall as a Spectrum paperback, are Dr. Lewis M. Killian and Dr. Charles M. Grigg. Both are professors of sociology and Grigg is director of the Institute for Social Research.

The work is the outgrowth of five years of studies, particularly of the function of bi-racial committees in the South.

In addition to the Times, which devoted 1000 words to the book in the New York Times Book Review, the new book has been reviewed, among others, by the St. Louis Post Dispatch and New York Herald Tribune.

Claude Sitton, in his by-line review in the Times, quotes the authors as saying "Americans, particularly white Americans, must soon awake to the fact that the crisis in race relations is second in gravity only to the threat of nuclear war."

The reviewer adds "It is, say the authors, a time for pessimism. The problem of Negro-Caucasian relations may be no closer to solution than it was a century ago. True, the segregation characteristic of the post-Civil War era is being eliminated rapidly. But this does not mean that progressive, essentially peaceful integration is inevitable. In fact the prospect is, at best, one of cold war for the foreseeable future."

Describing "the cultural deficit" of Negroes throughout the nation, Killian and Grigg argue that it "does constitute a real barrier to integration. It limits desegregation to tokenism; it makes the conflict over token desegregation an unending and fruitless one."

"An assault on segregation unaccompanied by an equally vigorous assault on the cultural deficit can result, at best, in the creation of a three-tiered system of stratification in which the Negro middle class is neither white nor black and is rejected by both the white classes and the black masses."

Wiping out the cultural deficit, say Killian and Grigg, "would require the sort of financial sacrifice that foreign aid programs require; the sort of capitalistic enterprise that expands into foreign markets."

Confederate Letters Donated To FSU

Copies of 12 letters from a Confederate soldier, including an unfinished and unsigned one written the night before he was killed in a skirmish, have been turned over to the Robert M. Strozler Library at FSU by Mr. and Mrs. Rod K. Shaw. The letter were those of Roderick Gopero Shaw, a member of the 4th Florida Regiment who was 21 when he was killed in action early on the morning of May 28, 1864, near Dallas, Georgia.

Shaw wrote his uncle and guardian, Col. Thomas R. Smith of Attapulgus, Ga., on the evening of May 27: "My dear Uncle:

"After four or five days, I again take pleasure in writing you that I am still safe and well. Skirmishing going on daily, it seems that we can not come to a general engagement, Sherman likes to flank and I do not believe Johnston wants to fight very badly, thinking that the Yankee army, weakens more rapidly than his own, I think we could bring them to an engagement if a fair trial were made, I leave now for a skirmish myself for 24 hours, Goodbye until tomorrow evening."

Lieutenant Shaw was a great uncle of Rod K. Shaw was great uncle of Rod K. Shaw, who is treasurer and business manager of Florida State. In addition to the letter from Roderick Gopero Shaw there is one from his brother, James Kirkpatrick Shaw, also a Confederate soldier. The younger brother was Rod K. Shaw's grandfather.

The letter was written 17 days before his 17th birthday from a Confederate camp.

Lieutenant Shaw's letters, except for the final one, are in his older sister, the late Jesse Shaw Smith of Quincy, The original letters, photographs of which have been given the library, are now in the hands of William T. Bodford of Tallahassee, great grandson of Jesse Shaw Smith.

Shaw recounts personal experience and details of battles and skirmishes including action at Fort Pickens, Murfreesboro and near Chattanooga. The letter from near Chattanooga dated Oct. 8, 1863, reports: "President Davis arrived last night and rode around the lines today looks quite thin."

One on April 16, 1864, from the quarters of the 1st and 40th Regiments, is filled with many watermelons planted, "I expect to enjoy the one you provided I can get a furiough. . . You must write

Dr. Dittmer Selected New Vice President of Scholarastic Affairs

Dr. Karl Dittmer, who was head of FSU's Dept. of Chemistry from 1949 to 1958, will return to the institute in September as vice-president for academic affairs.

Since leaving FSU in the fall of 1958, the 50-year-old chemist has been program administrator for the Petroleum Research Fund and director of the Division of Research Grants and Fellowships, American Chemical Society, Washington.

President Gordon W. Blackwell made the appointment of Dittmer as the most important academic job at the University and I am happy to have him back to work with a man who already is well respected here. Dr. Dittmer has had long experience in university teaching, research, and administration. In recent years he has filled a strategic position where he has had frequent contacts with foundations, federal agencies, and universities throughout the country.

I am confident he will bring unusual strength to FSU as he assumes responsibility for our 10 schools and colleges and the library.

Dr. Dittmer will be the first to have the post of vice-president for academic affairs but the duties of this office are essentially those of dean of the faculties, a position vacated last summer by Dr. Werner A. Baum.

Since then, Dr. E. Laurence Chalmers, assistant dean of the faculties, has filled in.

In his nine years at FSU, Dr. Dittmer was primarily responsible for building what has become one of the strongest chemistry departments in the nation. Principally in recognition of this, he was given the Florida Award of the Florida Section, American Chemical Society in May, 1958.

He also took part in organizing an interdisciplinary program of nuclear research leading to an appropriation by the 1957 Legislature which provided a Nuclear Research Building with two accelerators and auxiliary equipment.

Dittmer was born in 18, 1914, in Helron, N.D., received his A.B. degree in 1937 from Jamestown College, his M.A. in 1939 from the University of Colorado, and his Ph.D. in 1944 from Cornell Medical School where he studied under Nobel Laureate Vincent de Vigueur.

He was a member of the chemistry faculty of the University of Colorado for three years before coming to FSU in 1949.

Dr. Margaret V. Campbell Retires Because Of Illness

Dr. Margaret V. Campbell, professor of modern languages and FSU's first television teacher, is retiring because of illness bringing to a close her 29 years of teaching here.

Many thousands of persons around Tallahassee and in the Jacksonville area followed her three-month-long series of weekly programs, "Let's Learn Spanish," in 1956-57 and used the supplementary study book she prepared for the course.

The programs were produced by University Broadcasting Services before FSU had its own television station. They were aired over commercial stations in Tallahassee and Jacksonville. Among the viewers were then Gov. Leroy Collins and his family.

A native of Ft. Pierce, Miss Campbell grew up in the Canal Zone, completing high school there. As a major Spanish minor in French she received a bachelor's degree in 1922 and master's degree in 1935, both from Florida State College for Women, and a Ph.D. degree in 1946 from University of North Carolina.

Starting her teaching career here in 1935 after teaching Spanish and French in Staunton, Va., Florence, S. C. and St. Augustine, Fla., Miss Campbell became known to thousands of students as a counselor and teacher and as director of the Inter-American Studies Program.

The first Ph.D. degree in the Dept. of Modern Languages went to one of her students in 1953. She also has taught off-campus courses at Bradenton and has delivered some 100 lectures on Latin American subjects.

Her specialty in research became Latin American literature and particularly that of Chile. Her first study in Chile, in 1941, was financed by three scholarship and travel grants. In the summer of 1962, she met several literary figures and was treated royally as she continued her research. Shortly after her return to this country, the leading paper in Santiago, "La Nacion," published a series of articles.

She brought back two manuscripts, one of an unpublished play by Maria Brunet, "The Lonely Tree," and the other a prize-winning novel by Leonardo Espinoza, "Port of Deception."

She began English translations of the books on her return.

Now in a nursing home, Dr. Campbell is looking forward to getting back to the work on the translations when she returns to her own home Tuesday.

On the Chile trip Miss Campbell already had a slight lameness from an illness and it became worse. She persisted in teaching, however, until she was injured in an automobile accident last February.

A member of Phi Beta Kappa and Phi Kappa Phi and long active in their FSU chapters, Miss Campbell also has served as president of the Southeastern Conference on Latin American Studies and has been active in the South Atlantic Modern Language Association, of which she has served as secretary and board member.

Her publications include a monograph, "The Development of the National Theater in Chile to 1841," published by the University of Florida Press in 1958.

All Are Invited By Blackwells

FSU students, faculty, and their families will be guests of Dr. and Mrs. Gordon W. Blackwell at a semi-formal garden party at their home Thursday night.

The garden will be decorated with gaily colored oriental lanterns for the occasion. Mrs. Robert Lawton and Mrs. Paul Reynolds are serving on the decorating committee. The party will be from 8 to 8:30 p.m. at the home, 1030 West Tennessee Street.

Receiving at the door will be Mr. and Mrs. John Champlin; Mr. and Mrs. Ross Oglesby; John Merting, student body president, and Miss Patsy Burnham, chairman of the University Union board.

Deans and their wives and all of the staff and faculty will assist as hosts in the house and in the garden. Scheduled to pour are Mrs. Laurence Chalmers, Mrs. Stephen Winters, Mrs. John Arnold, Mrs. Preston Hardy, Miss Elizabeth Lynn, and Mrs. Reid Montgomery.

Math Clinic Opens

An eight week Summer Mathematics Institute for teachers and supervisors in Grades 1 - 6 opens at FSU this week with 30 persons from 19 states attending.

Under the direction of Dr. Eugene D. Nichols, head of the Dept. of Mathematics Education.

Dr. Atwood Leaves For Tour

Dr. Eva May Atwood, instructor in modern languages at FSU, departed Honolulu airport June 14 via Japan Air Lines Jet Courier with 40 other American students and faculty to begin an encounter in understanding Asia.

Called the Third Asian Seminar, the program is run by the World University Service and the U.S. National Student YWCA.

Its purpose is to encourage American students and professors to learn firsthand about the people of other cultures by traveling to their lands, living in their homes, attending classes and undertaking work projects with them.

The group of 41 completed a general orientation at Honolulu's East-West Center prior to departure for Japan.

During a two-week stay, they will live with Japanese families on various walks of life, attend lectures, and travel outside the cities to get a thorough introduction to Japan.

They will then visit Hong Kong and Thailand to engage in similar educational and cultural programs.

In Delhi they will begin an intensive orientation of India by living with Indian students and teachers and meeting with leading businessmen and administrators.

They will divide into a student and faculty group.

Indian and American students will cooperate in social affairs projects, while the faculty group will visit cities, villages, plants and universities. The groups will reunite in a mission road near Calcutta, before returning to the U.S. in August.

Highlights of last year's tour were interviews with Prime Minister Nehru and other Indian leaders plus completion of three projects: construction of a gymnasium wall at Shivaji College in Delhi and of a mission road near Calcutta, and mobilization of an entire village, Belachur, into an activity of self-help. American and Indian students together completed these projects, which served as vehicles for exchange of ideas and development of strong friendships.

Dr. Ford To Lecture

Dr. Charles A. Ford will speak in FSU Lecture Hall in the Business Bldg. at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Dr. Ford, editor-in-chief of Compton's Picture Encyclopedia, is being sponsored by the University. The lecture is open to the public.

Person Yessin Presents Recital

Person Yessin, a doctoral piano student at FSU, will present a recital on Tuesday night at 8:15 p.m. in Person Music Hall.

The program will consist of four pieces: "Impromptu, Opus 90," Schubert's "Seventh Sonata," and "Variations and Fugue on 'Name of Handel.'"

The recital is open to the public, and is given at the invitation of the Jacksonville University where he is a member of the Division of Music and Fine Arts.

He has just finished his latest recital for RCA Victor.

His record is of special interest to teachers who can use it to present additions to the repertoire and to compare interpretations these infrequently performed positions.

Lubbock, Texas (L.P.)—Students at Texas Technological College got a day break between Dead Week and final examinations during the 1964-65 year. The day break along with the entire school calendar was approved recently by the Board of Directors. The Council of Deans recommended the calendar.

"I feel that a large amount of credit for the adoption of this day break should go to Dr. W. M. Pearce and the Council of Deans," commented Student Council President Roy Furgeson. "Their willingness to listen to our proposals and their cooperation with us in our research was one of the main factors in the adoption of the plan," he said. Dr. Pearce, academic vice president, said that the day break will not cause an additional class day to be added to the school year. Because the academic calendar for the current spring semester is set, a day break was reported impossible for this year.

The plan proposed by the students was accepted by the administration without a change. It was first proposed last spring during the student body elections. In September the Student Council voted unanimously for the plan. The resolution adopted said in part: "The Student Council believes that adoption of this proposal will give students an opportunity to prepare adequately for final examinations and will enable the students to attain the goal toward which everyone is working—greater academic achievement."

FSU College News Exchange

Los Angeles, Calif. (L.P.)—Occidental College students have rendered criticism, both good and bad, of the newly-instituted 3-3 program. From the discussion of topics, a list of general recommendations were compiled. Briefly, they are as follows:

Shorter assignments would be conducive to increased academic standards, allowing time for deep analysis and independent research, rather than superficial reading to get through the assignment.

Professors ought to collaborate on scheduling of tests and/or increase the number of tests. A schedule in which different classes are allowed to give tests only on certain days could be established.

To increase student-teacher contact, four suggestions were indicated: (a) more discussion in classes, rather than five days of lectures; (b) smaller classes; (c) increased number of office hours; and (d) more language classes scheduled for fourth hour, so that if they must be split up, there would be more time for each class.

It was suggested that Occidental go on the quarter system rather than remain on the 3-3 program.

Boulder, Colo. (L.P.)—University women evidently believe that "rules are just helping them," says Polly Gerhardt, president of Associated Women Students on the University of Colorado campus.

Miss Gerhardt, in an interview, said that coeds generally accept hours regulations, not because they are less responsible than men, but because the rules are helpful in arranging their daily routines. "Maybe women will always want this," she said.

"I suppose there are some women who feel their rights are being impinged upon I don't know," she said. They have representation on AWS. Why don't they use it if they aren't satisfied? She said women should feel free to bring up anything they want to discuss at AWS meetings. Do women resent the differences between their rules and men students' rules? "I think there is a basic difference between the way men and women look at things," she said. "It's not a cut and dried thing."

According to Miss Gerhardt, AWS

House and Senate can change women's rules on hours, but their decisions are naturally subject to review by University administrators and the Board of Regents. This year a constitutional provision that only the Senate can make rules was suspended to give both houses a part in decision making.

The more freedom University women want, the more responsibility they will have to take, she said. "And they are taking it slowly and surely." Women's hours regulations have become more lenient here because women have asked for changes. Miss Gerhardt cited the change several years ago from an 11 p.m. to midnight curfew on Sunday night, and senior key privileges first granted in 1955.

Lawrence, Kan. (L.P.)—An anonymously authored set of notes under the title of an "Outline of Western Civilization" seemed to be made available for sale to University of Kansas students.

The notes have been condemned and derided by other faculty members of the Western Civilization department, but "The Authors" as the Authors' preface is signed, still to update annually and publish the outline. The notes were first prepared in 1959.

Professor James E. Seaver, who is on leave as director of the Western Civilization department, once reportedly termed the notes "a thorn in my side once, but it's calloused now and they don't bother me anymore." Professor David Jones, action chairman of the Western Civilization program, but practically every page is a summary or condensation of required readings with very little criticism or evaluation.

The notes are intended, according to the preface, "as a reference aid with three purposes in mind: to help the student in grasping and preparing for the weekly assignments, to assist him in reviewing the material while preparing for comprehensive examination, and to bolster an aim of the Western Civilization program: that every educated person should know and appreciate the ideas and ideals which have molded the civilization in which he lives."

According to Professor Jones the notes are "obviously aimed at the grade grabbers who don't want to do much reading. Instead of the feat for the mind that the readings supply, the outline is 'intellectual pabulum' for those who desire to scrape through without doing much reading or applying themselves."

He said the notes defeat the purpose and broad, liberal education. Professor Jones concluded: "Teachers can easily spot the notes' clichés. I lose faith in the student I hear repeating the words of the notes."

Whitewater, Wis. (L.P.)—Whitewater State College is one of eleven colleges and universities chosen to participate in a nationwide study of teachings of values for students are preparing for careers. The Whitewater proposal, selected by the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education from more than 300 proposals submitted to the association.

The studies seek to identify the most effectively teaching the values of freedom of inquiry, democracy and integrity of the individual and the use of reason as the factors limiting research in the past has been the fact that there have found it difficult to research projects to affect teaching loads.

The proposed study will be financed primarily from a grant by AWS which is seeking foundation support for the study. Whitewater has requested $94,000 to finance its proposed study over the four-year period. The Whitewater proposal, developed by a committee of eight faculty members and was written by Dr. Richard J. Brown.

The study will seek to measure influence teachers, subject matter, extracurricular lectures and dance programs have on the development of value concepts. It will be limited to students preparing teaching careers and will be developed through teacher education courses.

Teachers who rate high for effectiveness in teaching values will be assigned to experimental series of freshmen throughout the state educational programs. Students in the experimental series will live in residence halls where studying programs will emphasize core values. Courses studied by experimental groups will be related to the core values in content presentation.

A series of lectures presenting differing views on issues involving core values will be arranged for experimental group and will be followed by discussions.

Attitudes toward the core values will be measured at the beginning and conclusion of the program and compared with those of students not participating in the experimental program.

Retired Military Rank High in Survey

Retired military men compare favorably as teachers with their colleagues on Florida junior college faculties, in the opinion of administrators and students in the colleges.

This was shown in a survey just completed at FSU by James T. Rogers, a doctoral student who is returning to the faculty of Pensacola Junior College this month as dean of students.

Rogers submitted a questionnaire to the 66 retired service persons now on the faculties of 17 Florida public junior colleges and got administrators and students to compare them as teachers with career teachers.

The military personnel "do not differ significantly from career teachers in the estimation of administrators," Rogers said in summary of his conclusions.

The research was done for a Ph.D. degree.

"Administrators responsible for the employment of teachers would not object to employing additional retired military personnel provided they were of the same high caliber as the ones who are presently teaching in Florida," he said.

As teachers, many of the retired military people are especially strong in the science-mathematics area, he said.

The retired military personnel "are favorably accepted by students and are considered to be average or above average in comparison with career teachers," he said.

In the survey of the retired personnel themselves, Rogers found they were influenced in their choice of Florida as a state in which to teach "by the recreational possibilities and their attendance at a Florida graduate school."

Florida is known in the educational world for the large number of retired service men teaching in its junior colleges, Rogers said. Large numbers of teachers teach in California, Texas, and New York, he said.

Typically, military men have retired in their forties, taken graduate work toward advanced degrees and then joined college faculties.

Rogers conducted his research under Dr. Raymond E. Schultz and Maurice D. Litton in the School of Education. He is a fellow in the Southern Junior College Leadership Program supported by a grant from the Kellogg Foundation.

A native of Cleveland, Miss., the 30-year-old college administrator received his bachelor's degree in biology from Delta State College. For two years he was a Navy flight instructor at Pensacola. He had been a member of the Pensacola Junior College faculty for one year before beginning his studies at FSU two years ago.

His wife, Patricia, is getting a bachelor's degree in child development at the end of this trimester.

FSU To Receive New Films

FSU's Photographic Archives are richer by three kinescopes this week as the result of recent donations made by Wometco Enterprises and its Miami television station, WTVJ. Added to the more than 30,000 items in the Stroz Library collection of photographs and films of historic interest to Florida were three black-and-white 16 mm television films, presented by Florida's first commercial television station.

Accepting the films from Wometco's president Mitchell Wolfson, FSU President Gordon W. Blackwell praised WTVJ's response to a request for documentary films of this nature.

The trio of films includes the Leroy Collins-Charley Johns gubernatorial campaign debate of 1954; "Miami Ties a Million," a program tracing the early history of Miami, and "Fifteen Years With Four," a program which traces the history of Florida's first commercial television station and documents important events in the period of Florida history from 1949 to 1964.

President Blackwell also called attention to the "superb job" being done by Alan Morris as curator for the Library's Photographic Archives. Morris and Ralph Renick, vice-president for news at WTVJ, coordinated the selection and presentation of the kinescopes which represent the first TV entries in a new "sound of Florida history" section of the archives.

The archives, established in 1950, are comprised primarily of photographs related to Florida history dating back to the Civil War period. According to N. Orwin Rush, director of libraries at FSU, the new section was established early this year with a presentation of selected tape recordings of 1963 Legislative proceedings made by House Speaker Mallory Horne.

Ten Tapped By Honor Society

FSU's chapter of Beta Gamma Sigma, national honor society in business administration, tapped 10 new members this week.

Election to Beta Gamma Sigma is the highest scholastic honor a student in the field of business administration can attain, according to Dean Charles A. Rowetta of FSU's School of Business.

Two groups of students were tapped: graduates and seniors.

Summer Groups Invade Campus

With the third trimester half over, FSU will receive the first contingents of several hundred high school students who will spend a week or more on campus during the summer. Trimester 3-A, which has just ended, had 5,247 college level students enrolled. Many of them will stay for 3-B.

Today, several teen-age camps or institutes will get under way: Math and Earth Science Institute, with 30 students who will be here through Aug. 1; Music Camp with 175 junior and senior high students who will be here through July 25; the Speech Institute with 23 high school students who will study through July 18; and the Art Camp with 42 students who will be here through July 4.

Among later sessions is American Legion Boys State, which will bring over 500 high school juniors to the campus July 5-11.

In addition to the teenage sessions, some institutes and workshops for adults will get under way this weekend and others will start later. Those already underway include the four-week Institute of Delinquency Control which is expected to enroll 20 or more and a Conference on Electricity and Magnetism, which is expected to have 20 college and junior college teachers enrolled through July 10.

Also a Latin Institute with 15 junior and senior high school teachers through July 24 and an Aerospace Education Workshop with 20 teachers who will be here through July 3.

The French Institute is scheduled Sunday through Aug. 14 with 40 junior and senior high school teachers enrolled.

Awards Given To Three Musicians

Citations for excellence went to two students of music at FSU and to one music teacher this week. Frank Edmondson III received the Warren D. Allen Citation for excellence in scholarship. A candidate for the master's degree in music theory, he received the bachelor of music education degree from FSU in April.

A trumpet player, he has appeared in concerts by the Symphonic Band, the University Symphony and the Opera Orchestra.

The Ernst von Dohnanyi Citation for excellence in performance went to Bonnie Bromberg. Miss Bromberg received the bachelor of music degree from FSU in August, after which she plans to return for graduate study in music.

The young pianist has won both state and regional contests of the National Federation of Music Clubs and a Brevard Young Artist Award. John I. Cooper was announced winner of the Ella Scoble Opperman Citation for distinguished achievement in the teaching of music and for leadership.

Cooper received the bachelor of music degree at FSU in 1955. He has taught in the public schools of Florida since that time.

The citation will be presented in September, 1964.

Contributions Needed

Students who plan to receive their degrees in Aug. 8 should pay the $5 diploma fee not later than June 26 at the University Bookstore.

FSU Scientists Harness CP Enzyme

Man's attempts to "harness the atom" are well-known but a trio of FSU scientists have just harnessed an enzyme, a feat less difficult but important to man.

What is more, they have harnessed this powerful chemical molecule in man's bloodstream with a simple product all Floridians know well—citric acid, a common biochemical product in citrus fruit.

Citric acid, according to Dr. Shigenasa Osaki, James McDermott, and Dr. Earl Frieden, chairman of FSU's Dept. of Chemistry, may play a key role in the human system as a regulator for an important catalytic enzyme, ceruloplasmin (CP).

"This may be of particular interest in Florida," says Dr. Osaki, a research associate from Tokyo, Japan, who will present the team's findings next month (July 27) in New York City, at the International Congress of Biochemistry.

CP, an active, minute protein molecule in the blood stream, contains virtually all of the copper ion of the blood, ions that set many key biochemical processes in motion. Some of the chemical reactions which CP stimulates are beneficial to healthy human beings, while the same reactions can produce harmful by-products in persons having certain types of diseases, the scientists report.

The results of the research project have intriguing possibilities in the fields of medicine and basic research.

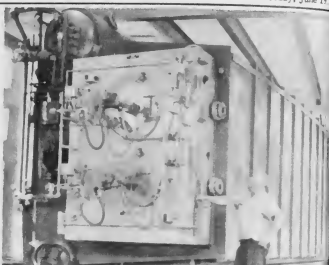

Heading the list of tentative benefits which may derive from the use of citric acid as a regulator of this essential enzyme is its application in stabilizing prominent biological substances like adrenaline and Vitamin C (ascorbic acid).

Keeping the chemical activities of these vital properties under control is a problem in several diseases including certain mental illnesses which may be caused by the chemical action of CP on adrenaline. According to the FSU scientists, if the "adrenochrome hypothesis of schizophrenia" proposed by Canadian scientists Hoffer and Osmond is correct, then control of CP's catalytic activities may have a clinical application of major importance. Hoffer and Osmond maintain that abnormal levels of adrenochrome (a by-product of CP-adrenaline activity) in human systems can produce a schizophrenic psychosis on the order of a split personality, severe depression and other psychotic symptoms.

If this is proven true, then the FSU team may have provided a treatment for the biochemical psychosis by short-circuiting the powers of CP with proper levels of citric acid. Such short-circuiting methods can also prevent CP from burning up (oxidizing) valuable body supplies of Vitamin C, according to their report. The relevance of this research project to medicine is further seen in the role CP plays in another illness, Wilson's Disease, in which a deficient supply of CP causes deposits of copper to form in the liver and brain, as reported little more than a year ago by physicians at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York.

While the FSU discovery offers no immediate clinical application for this disease, it does add several more facts to the body of knowledge pertinent to the powers of this essential, but sometimes contrary enzyme, CP.

THE 55-TON BOILER

... shown here will add 62 per cent to the steam capacity of the heating plant—an addition needed to serve new buildings now under construction. The new boiler, which has a capacity of 75,000 lbs. of steam per hour will be installed in a new boiler room (note beams and pipes now under construction).

Boiler Placed In Steam Plant

A 62 per cent increase in steam heating capacity will be provided by a new 55-ton boiler recently installed in FSU's heating plant.

The boiler was needed to serve new buildings, including a large dormitory, the Physics Research Building and the University Union, which are now being completed, said Supt. Spencer T. Kinard of the heating plant.

Four boilers now in use provide a total of 120,000 lbs. of steam per hour. The new boiler, two and one half times the capacity of the old ones, adds 75,000 lbs. per hour, Kinard said the boiler arrived at and was moved to the heating plant by jockey. It is now installed in a new boiler room in addition to the present plant. The new room has space for two additional boilers of similar size. The old equipment was "about capacity" with recent additions to the campus, Kinard said. The boilers used one was installed in 1927, others in 1930, 1937 and

'Earthquake' Book Is Review

"Earthquake Country," a book about the California earthquake belt, will be the subject of the new book review at FSU Wednesday.

The review, at 5 p.m. in Longmire Building, will be preceded by an informal reception at 4:30 p.m. in the large lounge.

Reviewer will be Dr. William F. Friedman, FSU geologist. He says that in earthquake belts you can expect one big one every 50 years. The San Francisco earthquake was about at the turn of the century and that would make it near time for another big one, according to the geologist.

The book, by R. Jaeger, discusses the San Francisco earthquake and less spectacular type of motion through which rocks are slowly and systematically torn apart.

Other plans to use "Earthquake Country" as a point of departure for discussion of some of the spectacular earthquakes in other parts of the United States, particularly during the past few years. He will talk about the Anchorage earthquake of Spring, 1964; the Hebgen earthquake on the edge of Yellowstone National Park in the summer of 1959 and several others.

He will also discuss what makes an earthquake and our chances of improving our knowledge in the future. In instruments that measure the buildup or strain accumulation that precedes earthquakes.

Also on the FSU activities program is a deep sea fishing trip Saturday, June 27. The band, chorus and orchestra of Music Camp now under way on the campus will present a public concert next Sunday. It will be at 6 p.m. in Westcott Auditorium.

Diploma Fees Due

"Smoke Signals", FSU's general interest magazine is now accepting contributions for the September issue.

Short stories (up to 2500 words), articles of interest, cartoons, photographic essays or humorous photographs are all solicited.

Address all contributions to "Smoke Signals", room 410 Longmire Building, FSU campus.

Those desiring further information or wishing to work with the magazine should contact Jim Preston at the "Smoke Signals" office.

Announcements

Dr. William Laird of the Dept. of Economics and Dr. Donald Schillion of the School of Education at FSU have prepared a study of "Economics in the Florida Schools" for the use of the State Department of Education.

The six-page publication reviews the certification standards for teaching economics in the state's high schools.

Training records and teacher assignments of those teaching economics in the schools were included in the study. Eighty-one people were found to be teaching the subject.

An article by Dr. George MacEachon of FSU's Dept. of Economics appears in a recent issue of the Italian journal, "Revista Internazionale di Scienze Economiche e Commerciali."

The article is entitled "Three Views of Inflation: The Great Debate in Retrospect."

A paper by Dr. M. L. Greenhut of FSU's Dept. of Economics appears in the spring issue of the journal "Land Economics."

The paper is entitled "When Is The Demand Factor of Location Important?"

Faculty Plans Summer Work

Members of the FSU Department of Statistics faculty will be teaching, doing research and exchanging scientific knowledge from California to England and France during the summer.

Dr. W. A. Thompson Jr. will attend the NATO Summer School in Non-linear Programming in Menton, France, and the International Symposium on Mathematical Programming in London, England. In London he will present a paper, "Graph Theory Methods in Mathematical Programming and Statistical Theory."

J. G. Kellum, for 38 years the business manager of FSCW and for whom Kellum Hall is named, died Tuesday in Tallahassee Memorial Hospital.

Kellum was 92.

Funeral services were at the First Presbyterian Church yesterday, the Rev. R. Davis Thomas officiating. Burial was in Oakland Cemetery.

Kellum became business manager in 1907 when FSCW was a 13 acre campus with four frame buildings. When he retired in 1945, the College had a main campus of over 300 acres with 50 buildings, a 940 acre farm, and a recreational area, the Reservation, on Lake Bradford. Kellum was born Oct. 5, 1871, on a farm near Lake Butler. After attending Feasby Normal School and the University of Nashville, he taught school in various rural areas.

His last teaching assignment was in Gainesville High School in 1905. In 1901 he was elected assistant chief clerk of the House of Representatives and head clerk in 1905. He was also selected as a secretary of the Board of Control in the same year.

In 1907, at the request of the president of FSCW, Kellum became business manager.

At FSCW he was known for his ability to get by on shoe-string-budgets.

He was responsible for building most of the old FSCW campus, some of which is still used by FSU. Kellum served as president of the Southern Association of College and University Business Officers from 1936 to 1937.

He was a charter member of the local Rotary Club and president in 1939-40.

He was president of the local Chamber of Commerce in 1921, and was also a Mason and a member of the Sons of the American Revolution.

Kellum was a member of the First Presbyterian Church and served on the building committee that supervised the reconsecration of the church in 1932.

In 1959, he got up from a sick bed to be present at the dedication of Kellum Hall in his honor.

Kellum was also responsible for the landscaping and the planning of the campus.

He was instrumental in the starting of the dairy farm, the laundry, the printing shop, the dress shop, and the book store and post office.

Although in declining health, Kellum and his wife frequently attended campus functions. His last appearances were earlier this year. He is survived by his wife and by a son, Lt. Col. Edwin G. Kellum of Washington, D. C.

Lois L. Schnoor Retires After Sixteen Years Of FSU Service

When Miss Lois Laverne Schnoor of the music faculty retires Wednesday, she will complete 16 years of teaching at FSU and 13 years of community service as director of the Tallahassee Junior Chorus.

A teacher for 33 years, Miss Schnoor will resume her teaching elsewhere in the fall. She has accepted a position as associate professor of music education at the New York State University College at Potsdam. She will spend the summer in Silverton, Colo., where she and two sisters will operate the Three Sisters Art Emporium. Miss Schnoor paints as a hobby and some of her paintings to be shown at the art shop are of Florida landscapes and flowers from the local area.

The shop could well have been called the tri-state gallery. One sister, Mrs. Edna Lowell of Mesa, Arizona, specializes in painting mountain scenery and landscapes of that state, and the other, Mrs. Maida Carpenter of Merton, Texas, selects her subjects from the scenery of Texas.

Harris To Head Alumni Section

Jacksonville Insurance man Tim Harris leads a slate of new officers and directors of the Duval County FSU Alumni Club just beginning its duties for 1964-65. T. A. Waits, executive secretary of the FSU Alumni Association, announced today.

The grades of which Harris was elected president, is charged with coordinating FSU alumni activities and FSU's annual fund drive in Duval County.

Other new officers include Tom Donovan, vice president; Mrs. Kimball Peaks, secretary; and Jerry W. Vinson, treasurer.

Directors named during the recent balloting were Mrs. William F. Stubbs, Thomas H. Dunn, William E. Durham, Jr., Robert F. Watts, John Griner and Clayton Miller.

Requirement Check

Students who plan to graduate in December, 1964 or in April, 1965 should check their General Education Requirements in room 102-B of Westcott.

Miss Schnoor originated the Tallahassee Junior Chorus. Starting with 43 boys and girls in grades four through six, she spent many hours in practice session with the youngsters before they gave the first concert in November, 1951.

Twice yearly concerts since that time have delighted Tallahassee audiences of both children and adults. Many of the concerts have been on special holiday themes.

Miss Schnoor has taught piano, violin, and voice, music history and literature. She has organized band, orchestra and chorus groups in many schools but the Tallahassee Youth Chorus was her first community choral group of young people.

Their last concert was recorded by Fred Boska in Tallahassee and plans are underway to have a professional recording made.

Miss Schnoor came to FSU in 1948. During her first years here she directed the music program at the University School from kindergarten through the sixth grade.

She also supervised the music intern in these grades and planned and conducted demonstrations for the elementary education majors.

Juvenile Control Institute Opens

Only when the community safety is in jeopardy should the names of juveniles involved in court cases be released, a group of 13 persons, many of them law enforcement officers, agreed at FSU's 1964 Delinquency Control Institute.

The institute opened last week and will run for four weeks. The question of secrecy of names came up for discussion during the first week's program, concerned with legal aspects of delinquency.

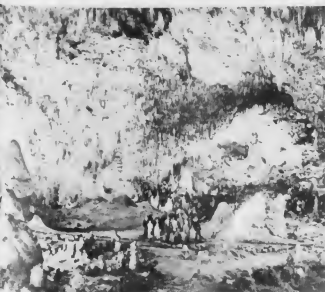

Dr. Vernon Fox, head of the Department of Criminology and Corrections at FSU and director of the institute, summarized what appeared to be the consensus of the group on secrecy as follows:

"The only justifiable for publishing names of juveniles is in cases serious enough so that the safety of the entire community is jeopardized and the community should know in order to protect itself—but these cases are very rare."

Generally too many names of juveniles are published as an emotional reaction, to the sacrifice of the welfare of the child involved."

Insurance Sold Today

Today is the last day for interested students to sign up for Student Government Insurance, room 214 Longmire.

Tanner Elected NASD President

William A. Tanner, security officer for FSU, will be installed as president of the National Association of College and University Traffic and Security Directors at Lawrence, Kans., at the annual conference today.

The organization, formed several years ago, has as members some 125 colleges and universities including most of the larger ones in the country.

Tanner has been serving during the past year as vice-president.

Tanner, a native of New Smyrna Beach, received his B.S. degree in education from FSU in 1950. He then worked for eight years as a special agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

FLORIDA FLAMBEAU

Dr. Blackwell Addresses Junior College Presidents

"A university or college cannot permit itself to become an educational supermarket with something for everybody," Florida State University's president said here yesterday (Friday).

Speaking to a conference of junior college presidents at Stanford University, Dr. Gordon W. Blackwell said "each institution must determine what curricula it can most appropriately and most effectively offer."

As population has grown and as public institutions have multiplied, he said, "the need for statewide planning and coordination in higher education has become obvious. Although some institutions and some presidents have tried to resist this movement... most of us have found this posture to be indefensible."

The Florida State president said that "although a central governing board is needed to insure coordination and direction for all a state's public institutions, we will find, perhaps, that we need in addition a board of trustees for each institution or each category of institutions (junior colleges, four-year colleges, universities).

"A separate institutional board working under the supervision of the central coordinating board would not weaken the authority of the central board," he emphasized. "On the other hand, it would permit a lay group to work closely with each institution and to concentrate its efforts on analyzing and supporting the needs of each college or university."

Army Promote Sergeant Lan

The sergeant major for 88 Army-ROTC detachment, George Lane, has been promoted to master sergeant.

The promotion, effective month, was announced by the commanding general of the Army's Corps, Maj. Gen George A. Cat of Birmingham.

Lane, who also is an assistant instructor teaching freshman cadets, was assigned to the ROTC detachment here last October.

Prior to that he had served a year in Viet Nam where he was decorated for his activities while serving as an infantry adviser to Vietnamese Army.

IBM Electronic Computers Predict Elections, Write Poetry

Predicting elections has been added to making other lightning calculations as a chore for electronic computers and now a student assistant has set FSU's IBM-709 to work writing poetry.

Richard Ragan of Tallahassee feeds the big machine various nouns, verbs, adjectives and other parts of speech, issues the computer some instructions in "Fortran," the computer language, and out comes a verse in about one minute's time.

The verse wouldn't win the praise of the instructor in a creative writing class, and in fact some of the first verses Ragan turned out didn't make any more sense than the rhymes in "Alice in Wonderland" and were not as funny.

Here's one piece of gibberish which resulted: Darkly the peaceful trees crashed in the serene sun While the heart heard The swift moon stopped silently, Ragan did some "debugging" in his program and one of the recent verses issuing from the machine made enough sense to pass muster as "poetry".

Silently the crystal fields floared Against the deserted mountainside As the moon rose

The serene landscape glowed darkly.

He's now working on a formula for mass-producing verses, possibly 500 of them at a time.

Ragan, who has just received his diploma from Leon High School and is entering FSU in the fall, isn't using the busy computer just to play games. Like several fellow students he is experimenting with new types of programming. Before starting his experiments with verse-writing he worked out a program for translating Spanish words into English.

A fellow student assistant, Richard Wells, developed a simulated baseball game.

AS AN EXPERIMENT IN PROGRAMMING

BEWARE OF DIAMOND GUARANTEES

How many times have you as jewelers been asked the question: Do you give a guarantee on your diamonds? If the number of times has been recorded it probably would have run into the thousands. True — some guarantees are protective for the customer because they cover in detail a manufacturer's responsibility on a piece of equipment.

Take for example the electric refrigerator, the dish washer, or your washing machine. This type of electrical equipment is usually covered by a stated number of years in which the dealer or manufacturer will be totally responsible even in replacement if the equipment fails to perform. Bear in mind all of these things we are talking about are large enough to be seen with the human eye. This cannot be done with the diamond.

In the case of the diamond a guarantee is protection providing it covers in detail all, not just some of the qualities that determine its value. And... providing it is given by a firm that is knowledgeable and whose integrity is unquestionable. Here is a sample of a diamond guarantee that isn't worth the paper it's written on. Sold to Mrs. John Doe in consideration of $—— has this day purchased from —— Co. one lady's diamond ring stone weighing 120 ct. of good color and quality and in consideration of this fact —— Co. recommends the article as a good value. This article is guaranteed and we will allow full purchase price on any article within a year.

The American Gem Society Diamond Certificate used by many A.G.S. jewelers for many years serves as an excellent instrument to protect the consumer a detailed description of a diamond's quality. The reason this certificate means something is because it covers in detail the cutting grade, color grade, clarity grade and carat weight of each diamond. In addition to these, the diameter and depth of the stone is given plus a diagram of the diamond on which the inclusion or flaws are drawn exactly where they occur. These diagrams make as a fingerprint of your diamond. It is the best detailed description you could possibly own. This is why we advise: Be sure your diamond guarantee covers these points we have mentioned.

Swimming Pool Opens To Crowd

The Olympic-size swimming pool Florida State University was dedicated to student and other users today.

A ceremony Dr. R. R. Oglesby, secretary of government, said, in completion and acceptance of the pool today, marks the fulfillment of a cherished student dream.

The pool was dedicated by the new student body president, Dr. R. R. Oglesby, and the new student body president, Dr. R. R. Oglesby.

Coyle's untimely death has prevented his being present here today (although I am confident his spirit must be hovering over us now).

However, Graham Carothers, who was Coyle's Secretary of Finance and who shared with us in that early dream is here. I think we all owe our thanks to him as well as to the many other unnamed students, who worked and planned for this occasion.

Carl Kuter, President of the Student Body four years ago and member of the swimming team deserves special mention, for it was his enthusiasm that rapidly moved along the plans for the project. We have sent him an invitation to be present.

"Here today as direct beneficiaries of this early planning are: John Merting, President of the Student Body; Jean Norman, Secretary of the Union, and Patsy Burnham, chairman of the Union Board. Yours is the delightful responsibility of accepting and running the Pool for the enjoyment of the whole student body.

"The pool was also built for the Intercollegiate swimming team. The fact that we have a pool is in no small way a tribute to Coach Blim Stultz, and the phenomenally successful swimming teams which he has been able to produce consistently over the years at Florida State University.

"The challenge to you, Coach Stultz, and to your present and future teammates keep on winning. We call this our olympic-size swimming pool. The name has important psychological and motivational implications for you and your teams!

After Dr. Oglesby spoke, a member of the swimming team, Barry Myers of Miami dived off the 100 of the pool. Among other participants in the opening ceremony were John Merting student body president and Patsy Burnham, chairman of the Union Board.

"If any one person deserves a major amount of credit for its successful completion it is President Blackwell. He supported it even when it wasn't popular or expedient thing to do. Dr. Day, the new Dean of Students, spent numberless hours gathering data before he went on leave about construction and operating costs of pools at other universities. We are still using his data. I know he is pleased to see what surprising results his planning had!

A newspaper columnist last Sunday referred to this pool as "exquisite." The use of the word surprised me, but on reflection I find it is not a bad word. The pool is beautiful, both in its natural setting and in its masterful planning and construction. The Architects and designers are much to be commended.

Dr. Paul Foreman of the Board of Control and Coach Blim Stultz have both followed closely the construction and planning of details. Their specialized skills have helped us avoid many errors.

BEFORE

Bells Proclaim Independence

Personnel Forms Made Available

Mr. Hay, acting secretary of internal affairs, reported today that the supply of Personnel Forms has been received by Student Government.

The Personnel Bureau has distributed these forms for those persons interested in working in Student Government, and in providing information as to persons qualified to hold the various positions available.

They will be filled under the following categories: cabinet positions, secretarial posts, court positions, board of publications, special projects and no preference.

Persons are being distributed the summer for those persons interested in working with Student Government and for all new transfer students.

Forms may be obtained from the Student Office, room 2101 Longmire, 4th floor.

The Personnel Bureau has also placed forms at the various dormitory offices for the students' convenience.

Bells from the Tallahassee area will ring out with those across the land as the "Make Freedom Really Ring" movement again celebrates Independence Day.

Sponsored locally by the Altruism Club of Tallahassee, a woman's civic club, the movement was begun in Connecticut by two men, writer Eric Hatch and artist Eric Sloan. The two began with the premise that the July 4 holiday was not receiving the recognition it deserved.

The formulated a scheme where bells across the U.S. would be rung at the same time, complete with speeches and radio and television broadcasts.

The ceremony in Tallahassee will begin at 12:45 p.m. at the replica of the Liberty Bell in the park behind the state capital.

The bell, along with local church, school, and government bells will be sounded for four minutes beginning at 1 p.m.

The Altruism Club voiced the hope that every person in the area who owned a bell or a flag would make use of these symbols during the holiday.

Dr. Edwin Lawrence Chalmers Jr. Appointed Arts And Science Dean

FSU announced today the appointment of Dr. E. Lawrence Chalmers Jr., a Princeton-educated psychologist, as dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

For two years Dr. Chalmers, who is 36, has been assistant dean of faculties.

He formerly directed FSU's Honors Program, a special program of studies for selected undergraduates of superior scholastic ability.

Chalmers will take over his new duties on Sept. 1, succeeding Dr. J. Paul Reynolds who is leaving to become dean of the faculty of Wilmington College, Wilmington, N.C.

In announcing Chalmers' selection to head FSU's oldest and largest division, President Gordon W. Blackwell said:

"We are extremely fortunate to have within our own ranks a man who is so well qualified for this key position. I know of few men in higher education who have demonstrated such effective ability in academic administration at so early an age."

"He has the imagination, sound judgment, and drive which are required to keep our instruction and research in the arts and sciences in the forefront among the nation's universities."

Born in Wildwood, N.J., Chalmers grew up in Wyomissing, Pa. He received all three of his degrees at Princeton University, where he majored in psychology, an A.B. in 1948, M.A. in 1950 and Ph.D. in 1951.

He taught at Princeton for one year and then from 1952 to 1957 was a research psychologist with the Air Force, serving at Lowry Air Force Base, Denver.

Chalmers joined the FSU faculty in September, 1957, as a member of the Department of Psychology. His major research interests have been in human vision, concept formation and selection and training of military personnel.

Chalmers was the first director of FSU Honors Program.

Latin Institute Begins At FSU

Because of increasing enrollments and of retirement of Latin teachers, there is an increasing demand for Latin teachers, he said. A survey during the past school year showed there were 13,590 Latin enrollments in 134 schools in Florida.

Morning sessions will be devoted to problems of teaching Latin.

FSU Keum Students Honor 'Sarge' At Farewell-Promotion Ceremonies

Until this week the most important day in the life of "Sarge" Merithew had been a solemn one in April, 1945, when he was called out of an Army blacksmith shop and asked to drive the funeral caisson carrying Franklin D. Roosevelt's body to his grave.

Tuesday night, however, an even more memorable event occurred for 59-year-old James E. Merithew, a veteran of 26 years in the Army. The men students of Kellum Hall had an appreciation party for the tough-talking but soft-hearted former Army sergeant, officially thanking him for serving as an "unofficial counselor" while making the rounds of men's dormitories as a nightwatchman.

Merithew has been a nightwatchman at FSU for 10 years but is getting out a promotion Sunday and will be house manager of Smith Hall, another men's dormitory next door to Kellum.

In a certificate signed by students, faculty and staff, including University President Gordon W. Blackwell, Sarge was specifically thanked for waking students up early for exams, mailing letters, opening the lounge for candy and cigarettes, playing Santa Claus at Christmas and a lot of other extra services as nightwatchman.

More particularly, he was thanked for "hearing our complaints, listening to our troubles and counseling us in the midnight hours, for giving us understanding and advice when we needed it, for talking straight to us even though we may not have liked what you knew we must hear."

"We shall miss your boisterous, happy manner which greets us at the end of the day. We shall miss that resounding voice booming, 'I want it quiet in here!' Above all, we shall miss those familiar words with the pointed finger, 'You... go to bed.'"

"Now therefore, we proclaim this night as a time for the men of Kellum Hall to express their appreciation to James Merithew — "Sarge."

The students presented Sarge a giant silver tray inscribed with his name.

Frank Natter, the president of Kellum Hall, said:

"Henry Adams told us that 'A teacher affects eternity; he can never tell where his influence stops.' James 'Sarge' Merithew has shown us that one needn't hold high academic position to constructively influence educational and moral development on a college campus."

"All one really needs is sincere interest, dedication and a pure heart. 'For these qualities, the past and present residents of Kellum Hall present Sarge with this gift, a place in their memories and the knowledge that he has positively affected their lives.'"

After the party Sarge said: "This is the biggest honor ever paid me in my life."

Merithew had anoragism which would be the envy of politicians—he was born to a log cabin on a farm near Gaylord, Mich.

He never got past the fifth grade in school and at 16 left home to work in a variety of jobs on farms, in wood camps and other places.

Jan. 15, 1926, he enlisted in the Army at Ft. Wayne, Detroit. For the next 18 years his job in the field artillery was shoeing horses at the U.S. Military Academy, West Point. No one was more surprised than Merithew when a superior summoned him out of the blacksmith shop at West Point to drive the six horses pulling the funeral caisson on a cool Sunday morning, April 15, 1945. Merithew's job was meeting the train which brought the President's casket from Washington and driving up the hill to the Hyde Park estate where Roosevelt was buried with a military ceremony.

Shortly after this event Merithew was transferred to Camp Hood, Texas. He was discharged the same year but quickly re-enlisted with time in the Quartermaster Corps, two years at Mannheim, Germany, and four and a half at Geissen followed.

Guard platoon duty at the latter post first familiarized Sarge with the nightwatching duties he was later to have.

AMONG THOSE HONORING "SARGE" ... were J. Frank Natter, left, president of Kellum Hall and Mr. Merithew, "Sarge's" wife.

Historic Kitty-Hawk Account Told By Colonel Frank Wood

An eye-witness account of the Wright Brothers' historic Kitty Hawk flight was given yesterday to participants in the Aerospace Education Workshop being held at FSU. The account was given by Col. Frank Wood of the Civil Air Patrol, who at 87 has seen a lifetime of flight history come about. "From Kitty Hawk to Cape Kennedy," Col. Wood, now a resident of Panama City, helped push the Wright Brothers' first airplane aloft.

Recalling the Wright Brothers' first historic flight at Kitty Hawk, N.C., on Dec. 17, 1903, Col. Wood said, "I thought at the time that the Wright brothers were crazy." He and four other young comrades were on hand to push the Kitty Hawk to get its engine (with a one-gallon gas tank) started.

Said the Col.: "They managed to keep it in the air for stretches up to 170 paces long. I was running beneath it for a time," he added, "which will give you some idea of its speed."

"Nevertheless, it flew, and with lighter engines, later versions of planes built by the Wright brothers were accepted for production," he added the man who was called upon to "look over" newer flight engines as they were developed by Orville and Wilbur.

Exhibiting a model of the "Kitty Hawk" given him by Wilbur Wright, Col. Wood called attention to the elevator on the plane, using a principle he said was responsible for many later advances in aircraft construction, but one for which the Wright brothers received little credit.

Col. Wood, who also holds the rank of Major, US Army (Retired), has an interesting flight history of his own, which began, he says, "with a job breaking horses." Admitting a youthful ambition to drive the pony express, he went on to driving "most everything that had an engine in it," and some, like the first man-made balloons, "that didn't have so much as a compass."

FESTIVAL OF FUN

is the theme of this pavilion display at the New York World's Fair.

N. Y. World's Fair Attracts Millions Pavilions Show Future Designs

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of two parts of the attractions and layout of this year's World's Fair.)

Whether your trip to the New York World's Fair is a forgoon conclusion or still in the wish-and-dream stage, you may benefit by knowing the attractions and the layout of the Fair's five major areas, which main avenues go where, and what transportation is available at the Fairgrounds.

Adjacent to the chartered bus terminal is the Transportation Area, with its main thoroughfare, the Avenue of Transportation, arching downward across it. In this 69-acre selection are some high-powered crowd pullers.

Ford's Magic Skyway auto trip and General Motors' Futurama ride offer excursions into time as well as space.

Those who like audience participation shows can test their driving skills in Sucoy Mobil's driving game; participants ride in the pavilion's simulated driver's seats and operated steering wheel, accelerator and brake to show how they would have handled actual driving situations seen in a film of the Mobil Economy Run.

If you would rather leave the driving to someone else, you can witness an auto thrill show staged in a 7500-seat stadium with a banked figure-eight track for daredevil maneuvers.

Directly above the Transportation Area, and north of the Grand Central Parkway, is the Federal and States Area.

Cutting across it is the Avenue of the States.

In the state Pavilions clustered along the Avenue, you can see Alaskan polar bears and a Polynesian pool from Florida... a movie set from California, and a coll mill dollars in gold nuggets from Montana.

On the left, in the big Fair Circle, is the 517-acre United States pavilion, with the "Challenge to Greatness."

A specially designed ride, 3,000 fairgoers at a time, will see the "Challenge to Greatness" spirit of America's past, present and future.

The famous Unisphere, which came to symbolize the Fair, is situated between the Federal and States Area and the Federal Area, where the treasures of nations are on display.

Jordan's Dead Sea Scrolls, Goya and Velasquez, Chinese and a Swiss alpine cabin are a few examples.

National tables are also where you can see falconry, or Korean drum dancing, or come to order at the Hong Kong Pavilion, or be charmed by the Japanese of Japan's Pavilion.

The Horsehoe-shaped Avenue of the United Nations is the place to look for in this section, intersected by the Avenue of the Americas on one side and the Avenue of Africa on the other.

A complete map of the Fair, showing all the street names, and promenade, as well as fountains and landscaped areas, being made available by the Fair at news-stands and Mobil stations.

The largest of the Fair's five major divisions, the Industrial Area, sprawls northward from the National Area. The Food of the World is at its hub, surrounded by the menade and the Court of the Universe.

Another horseshoe-shaped promenade, the Avenue of the Americas, has a Lunar Fountain and a Solar Fountain at the other end.

Springs' Writing Subject Of Article

Wakulla Spring has been the subject of accounts left by scores of visitors during the last 141 years. These writings are the subject of an article by FSU student Barbara Rich in the spring issue of the Florida Historical Quarterly. Rich, now a graduate student, wrote the article as an honors thesis. She was an undergraduate, and her work was done in history under the direction of Dr. William W. Rogers. She got her bachelor's degree in April, 1963. The program students have to do is just like a master's program, but it is rare for an undergraduate to be published.

Rich, edited to 12 printed pages, appears under the title "Wakulla Spring: Its Setting and Literary Visitors."

The first recorded visit of the spring was by John Lee Williams, who left in his 1823 journal a description which still is one of the best:

"The spring is a beautiful oval basin of almost unapproachable depth. It presents to the eye a pale azure translucent surface, under which are seen myriads of fish in little companies, at times sporting in the flood, and again disappearing behind the cliffs of rock which project into the fountain."

Since Williams' visit the spring has been a frequent place for picnics, and has attracted visitors from far and wide. However it has never attracted vast numbers of tourists or taken the aspect of a commercial enterprise and the "calm retirement of the whole scene" mentioned by Williams is still evident.

One of the early day travelers, George S. King of Philadelphia, noticed the bones of a mastodon on the bottom and speculated the heavy animal had been walking along on an unlucky day "when all of a sudden the ground gave way beneath him." The discovery of the bones brought many new visitors to the spring.

WAKULLA SPRINGS

... is the topic of an honors thesis by Barbara Lou Rich recently published in the "Florida Historical Quarterly." Here Miss Rich and her advisor, Dr. William W. Rogers, discuss the article.

Music Scholarship Announced

The establishment of the Owen F. Sellers Music Camp Scholarship Award to be given an outstanding young musician attending this summer's music camp has been announced.

FSU's School of Music. The award, which is to be an annual one, was named in honor of Owen Sellers, assistant dean of the School of Music, for his "many years of continuous, loyal and distinguished service to the Music Camp and the School of Music."

The recipient will be a 11th or 12th grader who has shown outstanding musical ability, is ranked scholastically in the upper 15 percent of the Music Camp; shows promise of a successful professional career in music and plans to enter FSU as a music student after graduation from high school.

In addition to the $100 scholarship to the FSU School of Music, the person selected by the committee for the award will receive an inscribed medal.

Oak Ridge Invites

The Oak Ridge National Laboratory has invited members of the FSU Tandem Accelerator Laboratory to attend the annual Information Meeting of the Physics Division and the Electromagnetic Division.

Progress in research during the past year will be reported to the invited audience and appraised by a committee of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Hog Jowls And Turnip Greens Finds New Scientific Support

A combination long praised by southern gourmets, hog jowl and turnip greens, has found scientific support in an FSU home economics laboratory. Irvin Cobb was one of many who sang the dish's praises when, in an essay published some 40 years ago, he described his feelings on sitting down to a platter with 'about half a bushel of newly picked turnip greens, rearing island-wise above a sizzling sea of hot licker and supporting upon their fronded crests the boiled but impressive countenance of a hickory cured shoe.' Turnip greens have enjoyed an equal reputation in combination with other meat dishes.

Mrs. Agnes Chalmers Cofer has run onto a possible clue in her research at FSU: meats immersed in a bath of turnip green pot liquor have been found to keep a "fresh-cooked" taste after refrigerator storage of up to five days.

Researchers and housewives are both aware that after storage overnight in a refrigerator meats seldom have the taste they started out with upon being taken from the oven. This, Mrs. Cofer said, is because of a breakdown of the invisible fat within the cells of the meat.

Davis Presents Physics Paper

Dr. Robert H. Davis, principal scientist of the Tandem Van de Graaff Accelerator Program at FSU will present a paper at the International Congress of Nuclear Physics in Paris, yesterday to Wednesday.

Dr. Davis will report on properties of nuclear satellite systems in which an alpha particle projectile goes into orbit about a target nucleus.

A mechanism which describes the properties of these nuclear satellites has been proposed by Davis in collaboration with Dr. Claus Mayer-Borck, a visitor at FSU Tandem Van de Graaff Accelerator Laboratory from Heidelberg, Germany.

Following the Paris Conference, Dr. Davis will attend a meeting at the Karlsruhe Research Center in Karlsruhe, Germany on "The Application of Electronic Computer Technology to Nuclear Physics."

A home economics faculty member at Louisiana Polytechnic Institute completing her doctoral studies here, Mrs. Cofer has been in search of a natural vegetable extract which can be used to prevent this oxidative rancidity.

She's tested 20 vegetables and has found turnip greens provide the best protection against off-flavors as a covering for slices of cooked meat. She has been working under the direction of Dr. Betty Watts, professor of food and nutrition in the School of Home Economics, Mrs. Watts and several doctoral students have been conducting a series of studies in a search for protective extracts from edible plants.

Green onion tops, green peppers, potato peelings and celery leaves have also been found to be especially effective.

The research has implications for the T.V. dinner industry as well as the housewife. For a long time researchers have been trying to find a way to preserve fresh taste in ready - prepared frozen products such as roast beef dinners.

Although synthetic antioxidants are available, they come under strict Food and Drug Administration regulations requiring proof of safety. Turnip green liquor is a natural product rich in nutrients and its safety is established. Turnip green liquor and other vegetable extracts may prove valuable also in the protection of the fresh taste of frozen raw vegetables, Mrs. Cofer said.

Housewives might well begin saving the turnip green liquor. "While nutritionists insist on using the smallest amount of water possible in cooking vegetables, it is a common practice to use excessive amounts and then lift the vegetable from the container and discard the liquors," Mrs. Cofer said.

She also stressed the importance of starting vegetables to cook in boiling water to inactive enzymes which are destructive to nutrients such as the rich supply of Vitamin C found in turnip greens.

In one phase of the research, tiny braised meat balls prepared with turnip green juice replacing the liquid in the recipe were taste-tested. A panel of testers found no turnip green taste but rather a very good meaty flavor.

She also took turnip green liquor and dried it onto corn starch which was the ground into a powder to use as a gravy base. It not only retained its activity but improved in storage.

'Spare Rod, Spoil Child' Found Untrue

Hard-spanking American parents could learn much from the Hopi Indians and the Russians about child-rearing, a well known clinical psychologist told the Delinquency Control Institute at FSU.

In the child-rearing code of the Hopi, said Dr. Sheldon Feizer, supervising clinical psychologist for the District of Columbia Youth Center, Lorton, Va., the emphasis is on reward rather than punishment, a parent is not allowed to raise his voice in talking with a child and any punishment, called "instruction," is left to the mother's brother.

"If you were a parent and wanted your influence to be at the maximum you wouldn't punish a child," he said. "The 'instruction' by the uncle might consist of ear-pulling or weeping."

"Children of the Hopi are permissively dealt with and are amazingly well behaved," said Feizer. "Punishment, in fact, is not necessary in civilized society," Russians, who are likely to "think we're very sadistic, tell their children the witch, Baba Yaga, come and punish them if they are bad," said Feizer. "I don't know whether that is good or not, works."

Feizer said, however, that the parents of a child should be on methods of discipline. When parents' methods differ the child is insecure, he said. There was a time in America, Feizer, when positive values stressed and the negative were in child-rearing.

"If it were possible to show these positive approaches and the 'spare the rod and spoil the child' philosophy, it might be

The campus movie "Love Is a Many Splendored Thing" will have double showing tomorrow night at 7:30 p.m. and at 9:30 p.m.

East Lansing, Mich. -(L.P.)-Controversy over the role of universities as "guardians of student morale" has elicited the following comment from Dean of Students John A. Fuzak of Michigan State University.

"Regardless of any questions of morality, any type of community has to have ground rules to operate in order that it can carry on its activities. At Michigan State, it is obvious we have residence halls to house many of our students, and that rules are necessary. If we are to exist in any kind of order,

"However, the philosophy of MSU is that there is a responsibility to the student which extends beyond the classroom. Many times I believe the abandonment of all regulations results simply from a lack of gun-point, of courage to take a stand on what is right and what isn't right."

Dean Fuzak emphasized that he believes some rules do become out-moded and need constant re-examination. "At this University, we are engaged in this. We are examining the appropriateness and effectiveness of rules in areas like drinking and off-campus housing. This re-examination process is a continuous one.

"However, there are some standards which do not change, which cannot be rationalized away. We have no right to abdicate our responsibility by saying that because rules are violated by some people, there should be no attempt to enforce them. Moral standards are a broad area covering far more than sex. For example, the ethical code of honesty is violated in many areas of our society. Does that make it right?"

Commenting on the Harvard situation, Dean Fuzak said: "We might as well be honest. There are plenty of places at this university for couples to enjoy a certain amount of privacy on dates. However, entertaining in bedrooms generally is not sanctioned in the rest of society. I do not believe it is the function of a university to provide students with a situation which they would not find anywhere else in society. Students must know this type of privilege would be abused, as it apparently has been at Harvard."

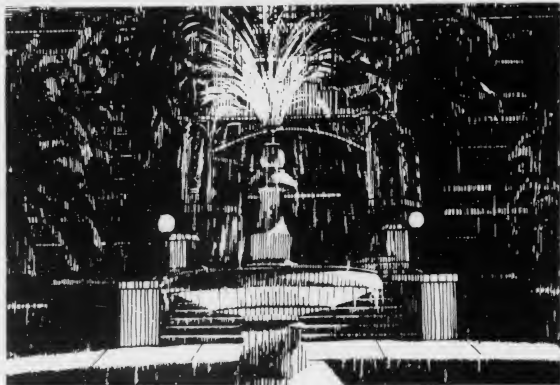

New Haven, Conn. -(L.P.)-President Kingman Brewster, Jr. of Yale University, recently announced a gift of $500,000 to establish a new chair for Roman Catholic Studies and the appointment of a distinguished Catholic scholar as the first incumbent.

Stephan G. Kuttner, now Professor of Canon Law at Catholic University has been appointed to the new T. Lawrence Riggs Professorship of Religion, effective July 1, 1984. The professorship has been named in memory of the late Father Riggs, Yale Class of 1910, who was for 31 years Catholic chaplain here.

The $500,000 gift for the endowment of the Riggs chair comes from a group of Yale alumni... who have requested that their names be kept anonymous. With the establishment of the Riggs chair, Yale becomes the first non-sectarian American university to have an endowed chair in Roman Catholic studies to be held by a senior professor on permanent appointment.

In announcing the appointment to the new chair President Brewster said: "Yale is doubly fortunate. Not only are we able to add the study of Roman Catholic thought and church history to the variety of undergraduate and graduate religious studies, but we have found the man whose eminence and scholarship will set a standard for this chair in the very front rank of our senior professors."

FSU College News Exchange

Elmira, N.Y. -(L.P.)-When a student habitually sits in a class, may affect her learning, and something about her personality, her attitudes toward the course teacher, judging from research carried out by Dr. Edgar Ostrander, associate professor of psychology at Elmira College.

Previous studies show that students do tend to choose either the front seat or area of a classroom after day and that there is a correlation between their choice and their interest and achievement in the course, said Ostrander. His research there may have bearing on seldom considered factors in the learning process.

Dr. Carl McMurray To Study Republican National Convention

The 34 national convention delegates elected by Florida Republicans will be buttressed by political scientists, including one from FSU, in San Francisco's Cow Palace this summer.

In addition to the watchful eyes of representatives of Goldwater, Scranton, Rockefeller, Nixon and other prospective candidates, the 34 Florida delegates will be closely observed by 12 National Convention Faculty Fellows.

Among the 12 will be Dr. Carl D. McMurray of FSU's Institute for Governmental Research, selected in a nationwide competition which recruited observers to make a study of how the Republican Convention ticks.

The convention begins July 13. A similarly selected group of nine additional political scientists will cover the Democratic Convention in Atlantic City, beginning August 24. McMurray, who is a Republican himself, already has interviewed many of the prospective delegates and he's preparing a questionnaire which will be sent to both those candidates who were elected as delegates and those who were defeated in last Florida's primary election.

According to the political scientist, the contest for Republican delegates was essentially one between an upstart slate organized by William Pawley, a Miami financier, with the blessing of the state executive committee, and a Goldwater slate organized by William Cramer, U.S. Representative from Pinellas County.

The victory won by the Pawley slate last week, however, does not mean Goldwater will be without supporters from Florida in San Francisco. Most of the delegates on the Pawley slate have announced for him, too, he adds.

McMurray's research project is a special study of the role of the delegate selection process in the struggle for control of the central machinery in Florida's Republican party. The struggle is symptomatic of intraparty differences that McMurray expects are of increasing political significance as Florida progresses toward a two-party state.

A student of the Republican party in the state, the political scientist said Republicans already have manifested a type of organization in some counties which may lead toward greater centralization of control over candidate recruitment and campaign finance.

More organizational effort in the special elections of 1963 paid off with victories for more Republican candidates than ever before, he said, and "any further Republican successes may compel Democratic leaders to undertake a frontal assault on the 'every man for himself' attitude in their party and to strengthen Democratic county organizations."

Dr. McMurray and the other Convention Fellows, all political scientists from universities and colleges, were selected by and their expenses are being paid by, the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers University and the National Center for Education in Politics.

The group already has met in New York to plan their research program.

'Boy's State' Meets At FSU

A record number of American Legion Boys State "citizens" assembled at FSU this week for their annual practice government program.

Following registration, the high school students immediately launched political caucuses leading from city to county to state government elections in the weeklong session which ends tomorrow.

Highlighting the week's activities will be mock municipal elections Monday morning, followed by county conventions and two-party (Nationalist and Federalist) politics leading up to election of a Boys State Governor yesterday.

Presiding over the 1964 program is Boys State Governor Palmer Williams of Tallahassee, elected by last year's delegates.

R. Elmo Hord of Winter Haven, Boys State Director, said newly elected officers will be inaugurated in the House Chambers at the State Capitol in this morning's ceremonies.

Boys State, sponsored by Legion posts across the country, is a prelude to Boys Nation, held annually in July in the nation's capital.

Two outstanding boys will be selected from the constituents of Boys State to attend the national meeting. Other concurrent Boys State activities will include each boy's attendance in one of four "schools" offered—law, law enforcement, civil service and government careers, or legislative procedure.

Featuring lectures and instruction on the duties and responsibilities of elected and/or appointed officials in each category, the classes will background Florida government for the students.

First Member Presents Check

A check for $1000 presented to the FSU Foundation by Mrs. Frank D. Moor has made her the first to become a life member of the Foundation.

Mrs. Moor, longtime supporter of FSU and a graduate of Florida State College for Women, presented the check to President Gordon W. Blackwell this week.

Mrs. Moor is a trustee of the Foundation.

Life memberships in the Foundation may be obtained at a payment plan of $100 a year over a period of 10 years, according to Mrs. William R. Kidd, assistant director of development, or by paying $1000 at one time.

The money is used to provide student financial aid, develop library resources, and research and other purposes.

Asolo Theater Company Opens Fifth Annual Season in Sarasota

Today marks the start of a fifth brilliant season for a troupe of 50 collegiate and professional players in the 1964 Asolo Theater Company. Rehearsals have been underway at FSU's Conradi Theater for the past few weeks as the Company makes its annual preparations for a summer of rollicking comedy in Sarasota.

The Asolo Theater Comedy Festival will run through Aug. 29, in the Ringling Museum's 18th Century Venetian theater.

Scheduled for 68 collective performances on this season's program are Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," Moliere's "The Imaginary Invalid," Fey's "The Lady's Not for Burning," and Sheridan's "School for Scandal."

Asolo's Director Richard G. Fallon, associate professor of speech at FSU, reports that 1964 Company is the "best to be assembled," in the history of the educational theater festival of comedy productions.

The study of Restoration and contemporary comedy for academic credit has also attracted a number of drama students and directors from other colleges across the country.

Union Board, Coach Stults, Students Battle Over Swim Team Use Of Pool

THE FLORIDA FLAMBEAU

Friday, July 17, 1964

STUDENT VS. TEAM

... seemed to be the opposing sides at the University Union Board Meeting Tuesday. Patsy Burnham, right, chairman of the Board, represented the student body through Student Government. Coach Stults, below, represented the views of the swimming team. No permanent decisions were made by the Board at the meeting. (See page 2 for "Flambeau" editorial.)

Dr. Griffin Leaves To Join Foundation

Dr. John A. Griffin will leave his post as director of university relations at FSU on Sept. 1 to become executive director of the Southern Education Foundation at Atlanta, Ga. Griffin, 49, was with the Foundation for 19 years with the Foundation.

Dr. Griffin had served as vice chancellor of the University System of Georgia. The retirement of Dixon and the appointment of Griffin in his place were announced today by David Freeman of New York, president of the Foundation. Incorporated in 1937, the Foundation operates on the consolidated resources in the Peabody, Slater, James and Randolph funds. The Foundation and its predecessor groups thus have been associated with public education since 1867. Using its own resources and grants from other foundations, the Foundation concerns itself primarily with Negro education and has a special interest in rural education. Grants go to state departments of education and to colleges and universities.

FSU President Gordon W. Blackwell said about Dr. Griffin, who has been director of university relations for five years: "While we regret to see Dr. Griffin leave FSU, we recognize the excellent opportunity offered by his new position."

"In directing the broad responsibilities of the Division of the University Relations for the past five years, he has provided strong leadership in the development of the University's educational radio and television stations, and in the building of our educational films library into the largest in the Southeast."

"In public relations, the strengthening of staff and initiation of new publications and programs under his direction have resulted in increased recognition for the University."

"Our best wishes go with Dr. Griffin in his new work."

Prior to his service at FSU, where he has also been a professor of sociology, Griffin was director of community educational services and associate professor of sociology at Emory University from 1944 to 1959.

Prior to that he was on the faculty of Georgia Tech. He is the co-author of "Public Education in South Today and Tomorrow" (1955), and "Southern Progress and Problems" (1959). He currently is vice-president of the Adult Education Association of the U.S.A.

Nothing was settled at the meeting of the University Union Board Tuesday afternoon in Longmire but members of the Board, Coach Bim Stults of the swimming team, and several students had angry words for over two hours.

The focal (and vocal) point of contention was the usage by the swimming team of the new University Union Pool.

The controversy arose over the times the team would be allowed to use the pool, and the areas of the pool involved.

Coach Stults had earlier requested the hours of 3 to 6 p.m., weekdays for all of trimester 1 and II.

Seven of the Board, composed of eight students and five faculty members, meeting earlier in the summer, unanimously decided to vote against the request because the students would be crowded out during the prime swimming hours.

The Board asked Coach Stults to try Tuesday's meeting, however, to try and arrange a compromise.

Stults opened the meeting by explaining that he believed the times would be the only feasible ones due to team class schedules. Irv Friedman, a student attending the meeting, asked about the possibility of scheduling the team's classes in the afternoons, leaving the mornings free for practice.

Stults said that he believed this was impossible.

Thomas Wright, of the school of music and a member of the Board, stated about the possible use of the Montgomery Gym pool in the afternoons and the Union pool in the mornings.

Stults replied that the moving of equipment and office material back and forth between the two pools was impractical and that the team would be at a disadvantage in trying to get used to the dimensions of both pools.

The Montgomery Gym pool is being used for swimming classes during these times because the swimming

New Freshmen, Parents Come This Weekend

Some 1100 new freshmen and 400 of their parents are expected for the first of any further discussion and the meeting was adjourned.

Friedman later informed the "Flambeau" that a petition had been started to prohibit the use of the pool during the 3-6 p.m. hours by the swimming team.

No date was set for the next meeting, but Miss Burnham announced that the Board would send absent members a ballot by mail so as to get the feelings of the entire Board on the subject and to record a valid vote.

A quorum of eight votes is required for the passage of a Union policy.

Recital Set Tonight

Rebecca Kay Walker will present a clarinet recital at FSU tomorrow at 8:15 p.m. in Opperman Hall. She will be assisted by Laura Marie Bunte, soprano.

Miss Walker will open the program with "Concerto for Clarinet" by Mozart.

Miss Bunte will play Debussy's "Clair de Lune" and "Clair de Soleil."

"Premiere" by Massenet and "Les Bercieux" by Faure.

Miss Walker will close the program with "Sonata for Clarinet and Piano" by Bernstein.

Summer Legislative Council, Subcommittees Meet Weekly

The Summer Legislative Council began meeting weekly after a delayed start due to late summer elections. Jeannie Williamson, Act-Student Body Vice President, presided.

In addition, the four standing subcommittees are also scheduling weekly meetings.

The Summer Council cannot make decisions that would affect the Student Body Constitution and Statutes. The Council and its committees have been making plans for recommendations to the Student Senate next fall.

The Judicial and Rules Committee, under the leadership of Senator Mike Thackston, has been working on a more efficient plan for communications between the students and the legislative branch of Student Government.

It has recommended that a Senate-Student Committee, composed of members of students who are not in the Senate, be established.

The committee is also studying the structure of the Traffic Court and considering some changes which will be recommended to the Senate.

Senator Hugh McElroy is leading the Organizations and Finance Committee which is studying ways of improving the Student Depository.

Other committees and projects include the Elections and Appointments Committee which is trying to reapportion the districts for the representatives in Student Senate. The Labor, Student Services, and Education Committee has been working with the University Union Board and has also been looking into the problems of campus bus transportation and refresher courses for students taking graduate and law exams during their senior year.

Reaves Gives Concert

Artha Reaves, violinist from the University of North Carolina, will give a recital at FSU tomorrow at 8:15 p.m. in Opperman Hall. She will be assisted by Laura Marie Bunte, soprano.

Miss Reaves will open the program with "Concerto for Violin" by Mozart.

Miss Bunte will play Debussy's "Clair de Lune" and "Clair de Soleil."

"Premiere" by Massenet and "Les Bercieux" by Faure.

Miss Reaves will close the program with "Sonata for Violin and Piano" by Bernstein.

Flambeau Editorial

Swimming Controversy: One Solution

With charge and counter-charge filling the air at the University Union Board meeting Tuesday afternoon, it was almost impossible to get one essential point across to those present, namely that action must be taken immediately and that this action must be in the best interests of everyone concerned.

In an attempt to bring back an atmosphere of meditation and compromise, the "Flambeau" suggested then and states again now several definite and, we believe, workable steps.

The problem, simply stated, is that the swimming team wishes to use the new Union pool from the months of September through April from 3 to 6 p.m. weekdays.

The team would take all the area from the east wall near the bath-house to a line at the beginning of the concrete insert on the far side of the diving tower, and one or two of the diving boards.

This raises the serious problem of over-crowding the center area and the remaining diving spaces by the members of the regular student body at what many believe is the prime swimming time.

Coach Bim Stults has made it clear that he believes it almost impossible for the team to practice at any other times.

Many of the students say that the student body, whose money went to pay for the pool, would be crowded out of the use of the pool during the only hours when many students have an opportunity to swim.

Suggestions have been made to eliminate the swimming team entirely, to limit the swimming team space still further, to wait until September to make the decision, to resort to a student referendum or to put the team back into Montgomery Gymnasium pool.

The "Flambeau" does not believe that any of these proposals are feasible.

Dr. Montgomery, the University Union Director, quite naturally is concerned that the student body will not use the pool if over-crowded.

Coach Stults is concerned that his boys will not have time to get into shape and that the Montgomery Gym pool simply is not adequate for the teams' needs.

The time for action is now. The "Flambeau" proposes that the swimming team have the use of the Montgomery Gym pool for the first two months of trimester I and the last month of trimester II.

The Union pool would be left entirely to student use.

At the end of October, the swimming team would be given their desired area in the Union pool. Montgomery Gym pool would then be opened to student use as would the rest of the Union pool.

Thus both the students and the swimming team would be able to swim during the 3 to 6 p.m. hours.

The swimming team would be able to get into shape yet still move into the new pool more than a month before the first scheduled meet.

The student body would have full use of the Union pool during the good months for sunbathing and swimming and the choice of either an indoor or an outdoor pool during the winter months.

Revenues would naturally decrease drastically during the cold winter months so very little pool revenue would be lost.

When the swimming team moved into the pool at the beginning of November, the lifeguards not needed in the outdoor pool could be employed in the Montgomery Gym pool.

A drawback to this plan would be the necessity for the cancellation of the P.E. swimming classes scheduled for the 3 p.m. time slot in Montgomery Gym pool.

We believe that these classes, simply additional basic courses or new advance classes, should be sacrificed in the interests of student and University unity.

If it were found that students were not using the indoor pool during the prescribed hours, the Physical Education Dept. could easily reschedule the swimming classes for the second trimester by announcing them in the "Flambeau" and by using the blackboards common at registration.

Thus the extra P.E. courses would only be sacrificed for one trimester at the most and the pools would be kept in constant use.

We also propose that the President of the University and the Chairman of the University Union Board call a joint meeting to iron out any difficulties in the "Flambeau" proposals and at the same time advance any new ideas for the settlement of the problem.

The time has come for level-headed action. We want the swimming team and the student body to get the most use out of both pools as possible and we also want to keep both pools in constant operation.

Surely if we could work out our problems when we had one pool we can do the same now that the area available for swimming has been more than tripled.

Dean J. Arnold Outlines Uses Of Union Pool

Operation and purposes of the University Union Swimming pool were outlined for the "Flambeau" by Dean J. Arnold, Associate Dean of Students, Jack Arnold.

Students had admission charges, students, faculty, and staff are necessary because no resources are available for the operation of the pool.

The pool has to be self-supporting," he said. "If other sources of revenue were available, or would become available, there would be charge."

It is anticipated that it will cost about $30,000 annually for operation of the pool. These operating costs will cover personnel (lifeguards, attendants, etc.), utilities, repair chemicals, and other costs.

Arnold emphasized that the pool has become a reality because of long-time efforts of student leaders. The pool was constructed; accumulated student fees, additional funds from the University Book store, and revenues from a pool bond issue, Arnold said. Construction is being repaid from percentage of student fees that go into the University's building fund.

Arnold said the Union Pool is "a tremendous resource" for the University.

"From the beginning, student leaders envisioned that the pool would serve three purposes," Arnold said. "It has always been intended that the pool would be used for recreation, varsity competition for physical education classes."

Arnold said University officials and student leaders are hopeful all will share cooperatively in the multi-purpose arrangement.

Arnold said that the pool's geographic location should attract even stronger leadership in the recreational and competitive swimming.

"Coach Bim Stults and members of students' revenue earned from swim academies for Florida State in competitive swimming over the past years," Arnold said. "The pool accomplished this despite the use of adequate swimming and diving facilities."

Stults has produced several state and national teams and All-American swimmers and divers in his tenure at Florida State.

With the new Olympic-size pool, the University is in an excellent position to host occasional state high school, regional (Olympic) and other championship swimming events that would bring national attention to the University.

The Union Pool was opened in 1961 and will remain open until August 19. It will reopen for the fall semester on Aug. 30.

Twelve Florida Teachers At Summer Asian Study Program

A dozen Florida teachers are enrolled in FSU's first annual summer program in Asian Studies.

Dr. George A. Lensen, director of Asian Studies at FSU, said that as a partial answer to the increasing need to bring Asia into sharper focus in today's classrooms, FSU has enrolled the 12 Florida teachers and future teachers in a program designed to give impetus to Far Eastern studies in the state's school system.

Sponsored by the Asia Society of New York, the program provides tuition and room fellowships for teachers who seek to integrate Asian studies in their daily lesson plan to create comprehensive units for courses like world history and geography.

FSU's specific program covers East Asian civilization (China, Japan, and Korea) from antiquity to the present and aims, through class assignments, to create a unified curriculum which can be suggested to school districts.

Teaching the course this summer is Dr. Lee W. Farnsworth, assistant professor of government.

Dr. Farnsworth received his Ph.D. from Claremont Graduate School and has had extensive interdisciplinary training in the humanities, languages and social sciences of Asia.

The Florida classroom teachers participating in the program include Mrs. Gladys Neal of Quincy, Springfield Elementary School; Mrs. Melinda French of Englewood, Lemon Bay School; Curtis E. Jackson of Panama City, Bay High School; Arnold W. Lee of Moore Haven, Booker T. Washington High School; Miss Doris C. Wade of Miami, West Miami Junior High; and James F. Alexander of Homestead, South Dade High School.

Other participants are George E. Carboneau of Jacksonville, who will teach at Tampa's Plant High School; Mrs. Erin McCawley Kummerlowe of Apalachicola High School; and Miss Jocelyn Ward of Tavares, who will teach at Parkway Junior High in Ft. Lauderdale.

Participants from Tallahassee include dance majors, Craig E. Zachold and Paul Lasowski, and history instructor Hosea L. Perry of Florida State University.

Zerbe Art Displayed

Paintings by Karl Zerbe of FSU's Department of Art are among the 14 works of four American artists which have been hung in a collection in Karachi, Pakistan, by the U.S. Information Agency, according to the New York Times.

Other artists represented are Ralston Crawford, Jack Lawrence and Ernest Fluke.

The works, borrowed from several American galleries, are hung in the home of William B. King, top USIA official in Pakistan.

"Since its installation the collection, recently pronounced an 'unqualified success' by Mrs. King, has been inspected, discussed and debated by some 500 Pakistani bigwigs," said the Times.

"Artists, teachers, critics, students, diplomats, officials and lesser fry, they rarely have a chance to see modern art at all, much less the U. S. brand."

"The collection is praised by the Karachi Morning News as 'reflecting the rich heritage of the American people.'"

GADSDEN HOUSE

... will house 20 women and a residence counselor beginning with the fall trimester. There are 282 students, 12 of them graduate students, studying under Foundation scholarships at FSU. The new house, a converted one-story brick residence, is located at 325 Conradi Street.

Foundation Scholarship House Opens

A 12th house of the Southern Scholarship and Research Foundation is being opened this fall at FSU. Dr. Made Stone, president of the Foundation, said 270 undergraduates and 12 graduate students, all Foundation scholars, will be housed in the 12 houses this fall but that 70 women and 25 men who were eligible for scholarships had to be turned away. The new house, which is for girls, has been purchased through the fundraising efforts of the people of Gadsden County.

It will cost, including additions, $26,000. A converted one-story brick residence, it is located at 325 Conradi Street, near the University School. The Gadsden House, as it has been named, will house four girls selected from other Foundation houses to serve as house officers; 16 freshman and junior girls; and a residence counselor.

Furniture for the house has been donated by the W. S. Babcock Furniture Company of Mulberry, Florida. A house organizational meeting held for house officers, and counselors, selection was made of silverware, dishes, and household accessories and these have been purchased in order to have the house ready for school this fall.

The girls will do their own housework, meal planning, grocery purchases, while living rent-free in the scholarship house. They can expect to become adept at household management, finance and cooking, according to Miss Maudine Blair, coordinator of personnel for the Foundation.

Chairman Announces Ballots Sent To All Board Members

Mr. Burnham, chairman of the University Union Board, announced today that ballots have been sent to all board members to record their votes on the Union pool-swimming controversy.

Laundry System Now Voluntary

Student Body President John Mertt announced today that the student laundry system will be entirely voluntary starting with the fall trimester.

The previous program had called for the abolishment of compulsory laundry fees only for upper-class students. The abolishment of the laundry surcharge is due entirely to Dean Students Harry Day, and other interested members of the Administration," said President Mertt. "Without their help, we never would have been able to implement a completely voluntary system."

"The University should be extremely grateful to these individuals who are working so hard for little thanks," he said. "The University should be extremely grateful to these individuals who are working so hard for little thanks."

Board last week.

At that time, several students voiced complaints over the times and the areas of the pool desired by the swimming team.

The team had asked for the hours from 3 to 6 p.m. weekdays and for the area at the east end of the pool for both trimesters I and II.

The students, and many of the Board members, felt that these times would jeopardize the student body's use of the pool due to overcrowding.

Miss Burnham said that the ballots were being sent out so that the full Board would have a chance to decide the issue.

"We are trying to work out some alternate solution to the problem. Both the student body and the swimming team should be able to use the pool," she said.

Student Body President John Mertt expressed full confidence in the Board and its members.

The student and faculty members of the University Union Board are doing their best to see that both sides of the argument receive equal treatment.

"The University should be extremely grateful to these individuals who are working so hard for little thanks," he said.

Students on the Board include Miss Burnham, Secretary Jean Norman, Bill Wood, Ray White, Susan Bakeswell, Tom Garwood, and Margaret DeHoff.

Barthol Recital Set

Wendell Barthol, graduate student in the School of Music, will present a voice recital at FSU Saturday. The recital is at 8:15 p.m. in Opperman Music Hall.

He has performed six major operatic roles, being tenor soloist in six operas.

Rapid Construction Continues; Union, Dorms Near Completion

Tin hats, T-shirts and dungarees are the fashion on the FSU campus this summer and the noise and clutter of construction is more evident than ever before.

A survey of superintendents for 11 building projects now under way showed a total of 622 workers were on the job this week—a number equal to about one-tenth of the summer-time student body.

The building contracts for the 11 projects now under way total $11,039,119, and when architects' fees, contingency costs and furnishings and equipment are considered, another $2.5 million is added to the cost.

The construction will mean 586 more dormitory beds for undergraduate students, along with an additional 418 apartments for students and their families, many new laboratories and classrooms and, for the first time, a central University Union for student activities and recreation.

Construction superintendents reported weekly payrolls totaling $40,544 for the 622 workers. Over a year's period, these would total approximately $2,400,000 flowing into the local economy.

In addition to the construction projects by private contractors, the University has five workmen of its own on two repair projects. Thirteen at Broward Hall have a weekly payroll of $440 and 42 at Reynolds Hall, where most of the room is being replastered, have a payroll of $2227.

Some projects, like the 586-unit dormitory of two eight-story towers being built by H. L. Coble Construction Co. of Greensboro, N.C., are nearing completion and occupancy. This one is scheduled for completion by Aug. 10.

According to the contractor, 123 men now are at work on the building. The weekly payroll is approximately $8,000.

The new University Union, under construction by the same contractor, also is nearing completion and is expected to be ready for the start of the fall trimester in September. Under contract for $1,989,000, the University Union consists of four new buildings adjacent to and connected with the Student Center at Woodward and Call.

The main structure will house "The Florida Flambeau," student government and student activities offices and have a student store and barber shop.

A food service building will have a cafeteria for 700 on the first floor and special dining rooms on the second.

A third building will have a 408-seat auditorium and a fourth 12 bowling alleys and 10 billiard tables.

Presently at work for the contractor and several subcontractors are 150 men with a weekly payroll of $5,000.

Under a separate contract of $59,312 with Winchester Construction

Co. of Tallahassee, the postoffice and bookstore in the old Student Center are being renovated. Ten workers with a payroll of $780 are working on this job.

An Olympic-size swimming pool, built under separate contract, also is a part of the University Union. The pool, across Call Street from the Union buildings, was put into use on July 1.

Scheduled for completion Sept. 16 is a half-million dollar project for increasing seating capacity in Dock S. Campbell Stadium to 39,484 (and with 880 corner seats to 40,364 for the biggest games).

Principal contract is held by Jack Culpepper, Tallahassee contractor, who is adding 3,734 permanent seats to the west stands and 8,974 to the east, a total of 12,708 added to the 19,862 permanent seats now in the stands.

Culpepper and the principal subcontractor, Coastal Steel of St. Petersburg, now have 23 men on the job, with a total payroll of approximately $3,439.

Only the foundation work has begun on a separate contract of $62,000 for adding 2048 permanent bleacher seats at the north end zone and 3-64 at the south end. There are now 1800 seats in portable bleachers. Reeves Steel Co. of Tampa holds the contract.

An extension of the University's heating plant and of steam lines to the Science Center and nearby areas now is nearing completion under a contract for $475,643 held by Culpepper.

The contractor and subcontractors have 61 men on this job. The payroll is approximately $3,899, and T. D. McClure Co. of Jacksonville is extending underground electric lines to the Science Center area under a contract of $100,000.

Study Proves Higher Progress For Air-Conditioned Schools

Junior high school students in an air-conditioned school made somewhat more progress in scholastic achievement than those attending a two-year study, in which FSU participated.

The study, which compared Oak Grove Junior High at Clearwater with two other Pinellas County schools, also showed it is possible to build an air-conditioned school somewhat more cheaply than others, despite the extra cost of air-conditioning equipment.

Results of the study are compiled in a 20-page report, "The Pinellas County Experiment," by Dr. Fred Stuart of the Pinellas County Board of Public Instruction and Dr. H. A. Curtis, head of the Department of Educational Research and Testing at FSU and consultant for the study.

The study was supported by the U.S. Office of Education, the Department of Heating, Refrigerating and Air Conditioning Engineers, and the School Facilities Council.

Oak Grove, a school for 930 students which was completed in February, 1961, cost $699,184 compared with $713, 850 for Pinellas Park School, comparable one built at the same time but without air-conditioning.

Oak Grove's cost also compared favorably with that of non-air-conditioned Tyrone Junior High, built in 1955, considering increased building costs, the report said.

Lower cost of construction at Oak Grove, the report said, was achieved by having a more compact design, without the open areas between various units of the school plant.

There were also some operating economies in the compact, climate-controlled school, which had less windows to break or repair, less confined areas to mow and less storm drains to maintain.

"The operating costs were somewhat higher than those of one in a climate controlled school, but not as high as those of the other," said the report.

The investigators used several tests as an indication of academic progress in the air-conditioned and non-air-conditioned schools during the regular school year.

Similar tests were given to compare summer term performance of Oak Grove pupils with pupils in Northern Hills High School, which like Oak Grove had a summer term. The studies during the two-year period thus resulted in six different comparisons of Oak Grove with the other schools on scholastic achievements.

"Considering the six sets of comparisons reported for the four academic years, Oak Grove was superior in four, tied with another school in two and in none did it do less than the school with which it was compared," the study said.

In Pinellas County, the report said, there are five months—May through September—when temperatures of 90 degrees are common.

"There are prolonged periods of the school year during which inside temperatures are in excess of 80 degrees F and schoolroom temperatures higher than 90 degrees F are all too common."

A study was made of the "comfort level" at various times of the year at Pinellas Park, one of the non-air-conditioned schools. It was said, and "It was established that among boys the comfort level there was a significant and inverse relationship between the comfort level of the school and the rate of tardiness and absence without leave."

der a $233,800 contract. Information on the number of employees and payroll was not available.

The Psychology Research Building, under contract to Winchester for $994,838, is presently scheduled for completion in November. Winchester and major subcontractors have 37 men at work on this building with a payroll of $3,098.

The Physics Research Building, an eight-story structure in the Science Center, is now scheduled for completion in December.

Culpepper, who holds the $1,519,595 contract for the building, along with major subcontractors, has 58 men at work on the project with a payroll of $3631.

The Physics building will connect with the Nuclear Research Building.

Work has just begun on the addition of a fourth floor to the Nuclear Building, Winchester, who holds the $252,466 contract for this job, has 17 men employed with a weekly payroll of $514.

One job, scarcely beyond the foundation stage but scheduled for completion in August, is a 12-story building just west of Kellum Hall which will have 90 student apartments.

Coble holds the $998,000 contract and this company and subcontractors have 36 men on this job. The payroll is $2643.

Somewhat farther along is the addition of 322 apartments in 58 buildings being constructed on a several-acre site at the edge of Alumnus Village, where already has 473 apartment units.

Dyson and Co. of Pensacola holds the contract of $2,154,600 for the 58 buildings and 473 apartments. Dyson and subcontractors have 120 men at work on the site and the weekly payroll is approximately $9300.

The population of 622 helimed construction workers compares with a Third Trimester-B student body of 4965.

Workers will be around also after Trimester I gets under way Sept. 1, but will be less conspicuous among a student population of 11,000 or more.

Thirty-eight persons have completed three weeks of studies in school lunch administration in the School of Home Economics at FSU.

The four short-term courses, each of which offered three hours of graduate credit, were sponsored jointly by the Department of Food and Nutrition, headed by Dr. Helen Gate, and the Florida State Department of Education's School Lunch Section, headed by Mrs. Thelma G. Flanagan.

Dr. Grace Augustine, professor emeritus of the Department of Institutional Management, Iowa State University, taught one of the courses, concerned with the problems of organization, supervision and administration of school lunch programs.

Other courses were taught as follows: Management of school lunch programs, Miss Doris Elder of the Department of Education, Iowa State University.

Dr. Plyler On Tape In Institute

Tape-recorded interviews with today's scientists, including one with a physicist, are an innovation in library methods used by the American Institute of Physics.

Dr. Earle K. Plyler, head of FSU's Physics Dept., is one of 100 U.S. physicists asked to participate in the Institute's Niels Bohr Library project. Six hours of discussion with Dr. Plyler were recorded in a recent interview regarding the development of research in physics in this country, and the individual methods and findings.

The record, along with others of similar content, will be made available to historians at the Niels Bohr Library.

In addition to the recorded interview, reprints of some 178 articles written or co-authored by Dr. Plyler, and photographs of his laboratory equipment and procedures of research will also be filed as resource materials for information on U.S. research advances.

Dr. Plyler, who came to FSU in December of 1962 from the National Bureau of Standards, is an internationally recognized expert in infrared spectrometry, one of the current frontiers in physics.

He has won the Department of Commerce's Gold Medal for work in infrared radiation and an award from the Society of Applied Spectroscopy for achievement in infrared spectroscopy.

Yates To Intern

Kenneth Yates of Bonifay, doctoral student in educational administration, supervision and curriculum at FSU, has been selected to serve as assistant principal and administrative intern at Escambia High School, Pensacola, through FSU's participation in the Administrative Internship for Secondary School Improvement.

FSU's Internship program is under the supervision of Dr. S. J. Knezevich, professor and head of the Department of Administration.

Funk Family Gets Variety Of Degrees

Three members of the Funk family will each get a degree in the summer commencement Aug. 15 at FSU. The mother has a master's degree and the son a bachelor's.

A. Funk, 22, will ride a wheelchair across the state to receive his diploma. He's had muscular atrophy since he was eight and is in a wheelchair since he was eight. This disease, he's launching himself into a career in television by getting his diploma. Young Funk is going to become either a writer, to help produce documentaries, or perhaps to do television research.

After getting his degree in speech-communication, with Spanish as a minor, part of his TV course work, he produced a 90-minute report program which was aired over FSU's educational television station, WFSU-TV, titled "The Dream and the Challenge," the program was about the handicapped and their search for equal education and employment. Ed Herp, director of broadcasting at FSU, called it "an excellent job" and several faculty members asked for a rerun.

The Florida Vocational Rehabilitation Service ordered a film of the series for its own use throughout the state.

Although he has almost no use of his limbs, Funk has a good speaking voice which should serve him well in broadcasting. Like Walter Cronkite, CBS news chief, he has been accepted as an official reader for Reading For the Blind, Inc., which makes book records.

He's qualified to read either English or Spanish. The father, Francis J. Funk, is getting a Ph.D. degree in Spanish, French and higher education. He will return to his post as a Spanish and French teacher at Miami-Dade Junior College.

He's been with the college since it opened in 1960.

Originally of Indianapolis, he got his bachelor's degree from Butler University in 1957, received his master's degree from University of Wisconsin in 1958 and then began a teaching career.

He taught high school courses four years in Indiana and three in Georgia, then left teaching for the time being to work as a translator for Eli Lilly International Pharmaceuticals for five years and to work for another five as a translator and interpreter with Army Intelligence in Washington.

In 1955 he and the family moved to Miami and Funk resumed his teaching. From 1955 to 1960 as a Spanish teacher at North Miami High and since 1960 at the Junior College.

When he resumed his graduate studies at FSU in 1961 his major projects were Dr. Victor R. G. Oelschlager, whom he had known since his graduate studies at Wisconsin. Oelschlager is head of the Department of Modern Languages at FSU. Mrs. Bertha Funk is getting her M.A. degree in Spanish. She has written her thesis in about a month's time while also teaching classes as a graduate assistant and managing the Funk household.

Mrs. Funk, formerly of Havana, Cuba, met her future husband on a visit to Indianapolis in 1940.

Months of correspondence followed.

"When friends asked me whether he was serious I replied, 'We'll know on Valentine's Day.'"

It turned out that he was and they were married the following August. She became an American citizen in 1945.

Their son was well known as a boy soprano soloist when the family lived in Washington. He has had three years of voice lessons, six of piano and three of flute.

He can no longer play the piano or flute but his love of music is shown in a big collection of records.

At North Miami Senior High he was graduated Number 11 in a class of 1,000 in 1960. He was a member of the Beta Honor Society and National Honor Society there.

He studied for two years at Miami-Dade before enrolling at FSU.

Today is his 22nd birthday but the family is so busy with his studies there was hardly time for a celebration.

John Funk used part of the day to bone up for final exams, using a self-study method he developed some time ago.

He tape-records his classroom notes and excerpts from his textbooks and readings, then plays the tapes back until he has a good grasp of the material.

Boyd Receives New Scholarship

Tom H. Boyd is the recipient of the newly established Burlington Industries Foundation Scholarship at FSU. It was announced today.

Boyd is the first FSU recipient of the scholarship, which pays $1,000 to a junior in the School of Business.

Each scholarship award is matched by an unrestricted grant which the university may use in its sole discretion for its financial needs, according to the office of financial aid.

A graduate of North Miami Senior High School, Boyd is an April graduate of Miami-Dade Junior College. He will major in business management at FSU.

Outstanding scholastically with a 3.5 overall average, he was selected as an outstanding freshman and sophomore by the faculty at Miami-Dade Jr. College.

He was also president of both classes, and of Phi Theta Kappa, national junior college honorary.

More From NY World's Fair: Amusement, Travel Highlighted

Editor's Note: This is the second part of a feature on the World's Fair.

If by now, the party is a bit footsore from seeing the many sights of the World's Fair Tour, we might stop now and rent a private "rest alcove" from the Simmons Beautyrest Corporation for a half-hour nap.

A quick glance at your World's Fair map in the Northeast Mobil Travel Guide shows that the fifth section of the Fair—the Lake Amusement Area—is located far to the east, separated from the rest of the Fairgrounds by the Long Island Expressway. This six-lane highway is spanned by the Meadow Lake Bridge and several "footpath" bridges.

If you saw the Meadow Lake Amphitheatre at the 1939-40 World's Fair, you'll hardly recognize it this year. A roof has been added, its seating capacity has been increased to 11,000, and it's had a facelift job!

Here the whole family will thrill to "Wonderworld," the $2 million stage, water and air musical extravaganza with a cast of 250.

Across the way is the New York World's Fair Music Hall, where the 170-foot stage boasts 19 turntables. The 90-minute musical review highlights a century of American musical comedy.

Elsewhere in the Lake Amusement Area you can "shoot the rapids" in the mighty rivers of the Pacific Northwest... see a Circus parade and watch the show under the big

Art Engravings, Prints Displayed

Engravings and prints by Arthur Deshaies of the FSU Art faculty are on exhibition at the Washington Federal Savings and Loan Association at Miami Beach.

The exhibition is scheduled to continue through Friday.

Some of his best-known works are "A Cycle of a Small Sea" (lucite engravings); and "Cycle of a Large Sea" (prints made from plaster blocks).

Deshaies in addition to the conventional burn and knife has used a variety of tools—among them tools of his own invention and power tools. He often works in lucite and plaster.

top... board an exact replica of Christopher Columbus's flagship, the Santa Maria... view more than 30 life-size tableaux in the International Museum... ride the AMF Monorail 40 feet above the ground... and be entertained by world-famous puppets from Paris.

It's impossible to cover the Fairground's 646 acres on foot in one day. Buses, special trains and unique taxis are on hand to help get you around. Greyhound, which provides guide and information services within the Fair complex, has a fleet of glass-topped, picture-window buses to carry Fair visitors on a 90-minute tour of all the major exhibits, utilizing eight miles of special roadway.

A rapid transit service between 35 Fair "stations" employs air-conditioned buses which run on regular schedules. Other facilities include 60-passenger, three-coach tractor trains running on rubber tires—and the "Escortor," a gasoline-powered taxi which seats up to four passengers in the front with no obstructions.

Sound like a "trrribly big" project, this New York World's Fair? In fact, construction costs are estimated at $500 million. With so much to see and so much to do—and with most visitors' time limited

Writing Maturity In Children Suggested By Kellogg Hunt

A new index of writing maturity in school children has been suggested by a FSU English professor, Dr. Kellogg W. Hunt.

The index, which features a grammatical innovation called the "T-unit," is one which Dr. Hunt and six associates have used to analyze the literary style of students between the fourth, eighth, and twelfth grades.

Replacing the "sentence" for purposes of measuring the language maturity of a student's writing sample, the T-unit represents the briefest possible thought that can be logically isolated between a capital letter and a period.

This arbitrary division of children's manuscripts into T-units for research purposes is necessary, says Dr. Hunt, to avoid the confusion which results when sentence structures and lengths are obscured by faulty punctuation and the overuse of conjunctions.

As a measure of maturity, the T-unit proves a more reliable and accurate tool than sentence length, clause length or number of subordinate clauses, Dr. Hunt thinks. The latter tools have been those most frequently used in studies seeking to predict grade-levels from samples of a student's compositions. According to the samples of writing researched by Dr. Hunt, older students do not necessarily write longer sentences than younger students as it has been believed.

Instead, they write longer T-units, and use fewer short and single-clause T-units than do the younger classes.

Moreover, the longer T-units used more frequently by the older students are made longer through the use of subordinate clause and non-clause structures which "transform" several miniature sentences into one thought unit, according to Dr. Hunt's findings.

These transformations are a more accurate mark of writing maturity than is sentence length, Dr. Hunt found. "The reason sentence length is not accurate, is that beginning writers use 'and' excessively between main clauses, and sometimes forget to put in periods," he observes.

Some of the fourth graders analyzed wrote longer "sentences" than any twelfth grader in his study, he points out.

Dr. Hunt's research findings are published in a volume entitled "Differences in Grammatical Structures Written at Three Grade Levels."

The bulk of this report is an analysis of the noun and verb and modifier structures used by average fourth, eighth and twelfth graders. In the course of the research project, 54,000 words of writing were analyzed. Using the 1401 computer, contingency co-efficients were calculated for sentence length, clause length, the subordination ratio and T-unit length.

The project was financed by the U.S. Office of Education.

BEWARE OF DIAMOND GUARANTEES

How many times have we as jewelers been asked this question: Do you give a guarantee on the number of times has been recorded it probably would have run into the thousands. True... some guarantees are protective for us customer because they come in detail a manufacturer's responsibility on a piece of equipment.

Take for example the electric refrigerator, the dish washer, or your washing machine. This type of electrical equipment is usually covered by a stated number of years in which the dealer or manufacturer will be totally responsible even to replacement if the equipment fails to perform. Here is one of all these things we are talking about are large enough to be seen with the human eye. This cannot be done with the diamond.

In the case of the diamond a guarantee is protective providing it covers in detail, all, not just some of the qualities that determine its value. And... providing it is given by a firm that is knowledgeable and whose integrity is unquestionable. Here is a sample of a diamond guarantee that isn't written on paper it's written on. Sold to Mrs. John Doe in consideration of $— has this diamond purchased from —. One lady's diamond ring stone weighing 1.20 ct. of good color and quality and in consideration of this fact — Co. recommends the article as a good value. This article is guaranteed and we will allow full purchase price on any article within —.

The American Gem Society Diamond Certificate used by many A.G.S. jewelers for many years serves as an excellent instrument to give the consumer a detailed description of a diamond's quality. The reason this certificate means something is because it covers in detail its cutting grade, color grade, clarity grade and carat weight of each diamond. In addition to these, the diameter and depth of the diamond are given plus a diagram of the diamond on which the inclusion or flaws are drawn exactly where they occur. These diagrams serve as a fingerprint of your diamond.

It is the best detailed description you could possibly own. This is why we advise — Be sure your diamond guarantee covers these points we have mentioned.

YPSL Replies To Charges By BOC Member Charles Forman

The Florida State University Chapter of the Young People's Socialist League (Young Section of the Socialist Party, USA) strongly condemns the anti-democratic and Un-American actions of Board of Control member Charles Forman of Fort Lauderdale.

We feel his statement implying that YPSL is a "Commie" oriented organization is libelous.

We also feel that University life and the political atmosphere engendered by such life is solely the concern of the faculty and students of the University.

We also protest the use of the term "serious" by FSU's President Gordon Blackwell in reference to the creation of an ultra-liberal atmosphere at FSU. We cannot understand in what way an ultra-liberal atmosphere can be damaging to "Great" university (as the FSU administration insists on calling itself).

We again protest Mr. Forman's statement that FSU has a strong calousness to the deep-seated convictions of the people of Florida. As a place of "enlightenment" and intellectual curiosity, FSU is expected to have goals and ideals which transcend the intellectual climate of this state as a whole. We cannot see how Mr. Forman can arrogate to himself the position of spokesman for the people of Florida.

We would also like to correct a few incorrect statements attributed to Dr. Gordon Blackwell in his speech to the Board of Control.

1. Our brochure was not banned from distribution on the campus. Contrary to the best established principles of Academic Freedom, the FSU-YPSL was informed by Student Government that our advocacy of civil disobedience was against FSU's policy. But the brochure was not banned and is still available.

2. No faculty advisor of FSU-YPSL has resigned from his post. A conservatively oriented faculty advisor, was replaced with a socialist last October, and notice was given to the Dean of Students of the change. The present faculty advisor, a socialist, resigned from the University because he felt the administration was acting in a way contrary to the best interests of FSU.

He felt the administration was not fostering the free of academic freedom and was not encouraging an atmosphere of intellectual freedom. The Florida State Chapter of YPSL cannot but agree.

The recent actions at the last meeting of the Board of Control clearly demonstrate that Florida officials do not yet have a clear notion of freedom, nor do they intend to protect the rights of all American citizens.

Commencement To Be Saturday

Commencement ceremonies will be at 8 p.m. Saturday, for approximately 900 candidates for degrees at FSU.

Dr. Frank G. Dickey, director of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools and a former president of the University of Kentucky, will be commencement speaker.

The commencement will be in Campbell Stadium unless it rains. Tully Gymnasium will be used if it does.

The class of some 900, largest by far in a summer commencement at FSU, includes students who completed work for their degrees in the first half of the third trimester and are no longer here.

President Gordon W. Blackwell will confer the degrees and introduce the commencement speaker, a 46-year-old native of Oklahoma who has served on numerous educational commissions.

He is a former president of the Southern Association of Land-Grant Colleges and State Universities and of the Southern Conference.

Dr. Dickey was a member of the University of Kentucky faculty for several years, assuming the post of dean of the College of Education in 1949 and of president of the University in 1956.

Boda To Direct Concert Tonight

The Youth Symphony will present a concert tonight at 8:15 p.m. in Opperman Music Hall.

Featured on the program will be "Overture to Oberon" by Carl Maria von Weber, "Quiet Music" by FSU's John Boda, "Overture to Rienzi" by Richard Wagner, and "Symphony No. 5 (New World)" by Anton Dvorak. The Youth Symphony was begun in 1961 to develop and stimulate the talents of young musicians in the Southeast.

Members of the orchestra are nominated by teachers and conductors. The concert will be directed by Dr. Richard Boda of the FSU School of Music.

Board Member Criticizes FSU

Charles R. Forman of the Board of Control charged that FSU is sponsoring an "Ultra-liberal" climate Thursday at a meeting of the Board of Control.

Forman called for a campus atmosphere in which Americanism encouraged rather than discouraged.

Forman's charges sprang from a brochure distributed by the Young People's Socialist League during registration for the third trimester, from the letter he received from President Gordon W. Blackwell.

Forman said that in the letter he stated a strong calousness to the deep-seated convictions of the people in this state and of members of the Board of Control.

Forman accused the brochure of being "Communist pattern."

Forman said he has the right that children not be exposed to the right to steer them away from American thinking and religious beliefs and away from patriotism that has made this country great," said Forman.

Dr. Blackwell, in defense of the University and his action regarding the letter, denied that a handful of people set the climate of a campus or that the things discussed by Dr. Forman were more applicable to FSU than any other university in the country.

He said that in comparison with other universities, FSU has probably been more concerned and endeavored to exercise more restraints.

He emphasized that he is "not calous to the viewpoints of the people of this state or this Board as to any values of American life."

He went on to say that immediate steps were taken to correct the situation concerning the YPSL publication as soon as its contents were discovered.

Dr. Blackwell denied that he had sought to develop an ultra-liberal atmosphere on the FSU campus. "We must understand the freedom on which democracy is founded and the traditions of higher education,"

Firearms Subject Of Doctoral Thesis

Twenty years of collecting old guns, two trips to Europe and hundreds of hours of searching through libraries, museums and art galleries have gone into the writing of a carefully documented history of Spanish firearms by FSU doctoral student James Lavin.

The History of Spanish Firearms, a 300-page, richly-illustrated book by Lavin, has been accepted for publication by the London publisher, Herbert Jenkins, Ltd., and in a few months will take its place beside similar volumes on English and German firearms.

Lavin says that even though Spaniards used firearms extensively in many wars on the continent and in the colonization of much of the western hemisphere, and Spanish gunsmiths were the most expert in Europe in the 18th century, information about Spanish firearms is fragmentary and inaccurate.

Beginning in 1957, when he was still an undergraduate, Lavin set about his documentation of Spanish guns.

After getting his bachelor's degree from FSU in 1960, he spent a year in Spain on a Fulbright scholarship and he visited Spain again last summer.

He also has examined whatever was available in England, Denmark, Germany and Italy on Spanish firearms. Lavin has finished his research in a doctoral dissertation for a Ph.D. in Spanish language and literature. (He took a minor in Italian, the first doctoral student at FSU to do so.) It is his doctoral survey which, with 400 pages of photographic illustrations and 20 pen drawings, is to be published in London.

Thirty-five year-old Lavin, who expects to utilize his knowledge of guns in a museum, began gun-collecting when he was about 16 in Poplar Bluff, Mo.

Through the years, including eight in the Air Force, he has built up a collection of about 75 old guns. His attention was directed toward Spanish guns when he picked up in a Mexican bookshop an old catalog of the royal armory at Madrid, published in 1849.

Old Spanish firearms are rare anywhere, even in Spain, Lavin says. At the time of the Spanish Civil War in 1936-39, a law of the Republic made collection of firearms an offense punishable by death and many people with old collections disposed of them.

For that reason most of the old firearms still extant are in a few public museums.

Lavin nevertheless has been able to examine many firearms and photograph them. He has supplemented this personal inspection with a vast quantity of information about the guns and about the gunsmiths who made them.

He hasn't ignored the art museums and while gallery-goers were appreciating paintings as works of art Lavin was examining them for firearms.

At the Prado in Madrid he saw a painting attributed to Velasquez with a gun which Lavin knew was not manufactured until half a century after Velasquez's death in 1660. He informed the gallery and later noticed the painting had been removed from the Velasquez room.

He's already written half a dozen articles for journals as his study progressed. He also wrote a chapter in a monumental two-volume Spanish book celebrating the fourth centennial of the building of the Escorial.

His chapter in the book, published last year, was on the firearms of Philip II.

In brief, Lavin's survey of Spanish firearms showed the Spanish got their first taste of a gun from Moorish guns; they were driving the Moors out of Spain.

An account in 1844 tells how "many stones of iron were hurled by thunderbolts" from the Moorish stronghold of Algeiras, spreading terror among Castilian soldiers attacking the town.

The "thunderer," or trueano, soon passed from Moor to Spaniard and in the years preceding the simultaneous ousting of the Moors from Spain and the discovery of America in 1492 a variety of firearms was developed.

Some apparently were of a hand-carried type but was some time before guns became equals of the crossbow, sword and other older weapons.

There was, in fact, a prejudice against guns, particularly in the so-called Golden Age.

Don Quixote was made to complain, for instance, of a device by means of which an infamous and cowardly arm may take the life of a valiant knight without his knowing how or from where the blow fell. Unlike the fictional knight, Charles V, who ruled from 1519 to 1556, was a realist who was quick to see the value of guns in a campaign. He also was Spain's first gun hobbyist and Charles' son, Philip II, followed in his father's footsteps as a gun-collector.

It was Philip who utilized the services as royal gunsmiths of Sigismund and Peter Marquardt, who moved from Germany to Spain about 1570.

Schwartz Visits Writing Session

Dr. Guenter Schwarz, professor of physics at FSU, is attending a physics textbook writing session at Stanford University at the invitation of the director of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Dr. Schwarz has been active in the Physical Science Study Committee's program from its inception in 1958. FSU aims to improve the teaching of physical science in high school and college.

In connection with this work, Dr. Schwarz has also been asked to serve as a member of the Physics Examining Committee of the College Entrance Examination Board, together with President Blackall and Dr. Garth Blake, as a representative of FSU at the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education.

FOR NEARLY 20 YEARS

James Lavin has been collecting old firearms. In the last year he has been collecting and studying old Spanish firearms and in the last of his Ph.D. research at FSU has compiled the first authoritative factual survey of Spanish firearms. The survey will be published as a page book in London within a few months.

Sponsored by Phi Mu Alpha, music honorary fraternity, the concert will be at 2:30 p.m. in Longmire.

It is free and open to the public. The 20-member Collegium Musicum Orchestra will be conducted by Dr. Lewis Fankaskie of the music faculty.

Summer Chorus Will Present Musical Concert Monday Night

The 45-voice Summer Chorus will give a concert at FSU at 8:15 p.m. Monday, in Opperman Music Hall.

Consisting of two cantatas and a sacred number, the program is under the direction of Walter James of the music faculty.

The chorus is made up of undergraduate and graduate students from the School of Music and other departments of the university.

"Requiem Mass," one of L. Cherubini's most often performed numbers, will open the program. The chorus will sing the first four sections of the Mass, including the Introit, Graduale, Dies Irae, and Offertorium.

"The Lament for Beowulf," a short cantata, will be the second number on the program.

Composed by Howard Hanson, who has been for many years head of the Eastman School of Music, it was performed in Tallahassee in 1949 in a concert directed by the composer.

Also programmed is the cantata, "Newtown," by the contemporary English composer Gordon Jacob.

It provides a setting of the text by Christopher Laswell in which the poet expresses his reaction to the changes that are being made as "country" becomes "suburbia."

Soloist for "Newtown" will be Richard Griffith, baritone, a member of the Postdam University faculty who is studying toward the doctoral degree in music at FSU.

Research Associates Named

The appointment of Dr. Carl J. Oppenheimer Jr., and Dr. Phillip J. Hallick as research associates with FSU's Oceanographic Institute was announced today by Director Albert W. Collier.

In addition to their oceanographic posts, Collier said the new appointments will each hold faculty positions in the Department of Biological Sciences.

The addition of these two fine scientists marks a major step in strengthening the teaching and research potential of the Institute," said its director.

Dr. Oppenheimer, who comes to FSU in August from the University of Miami, will be professor of biological sciences; and Dr. Hallick, from the University of Kansas, assistant professor.

The two will join Institute scientists in further studies of ultradistoms, phyto-plankton and other deep-sea organisms.

Dr. Oppenheimer has been associate professor at the University of Miami's Institute of Marine Science since 1961.

Prior professional experience includes positions as senior research scientist and lecturer at an American Petroleum Corporation Research Center, research scientist at the University of Texas for four years, and as an assistant zoologist with the University of California's Scripps Institute of Oceanography.

A native Californian, Dr. Oppenheimer has been widely published, and has chaired the International Symposium on Marine Microbiology.

Dr. Hallick, a research assistant at the University of Kansas since 1961, has won two Ford Foundation fellowships for laboratory work at Woods Hole Institution and another for travel and consultation in marine laboratories in England and Germany.

Dr. Hallick's professional memberships include the American Microscopical Society, the Botanical Society of America, the British, American and International Phytoplankton Societies, and the Royal Microscopical Society, of which he is a fellow.

Dr. Blackwell Takes New Post As Head Of Furman University

In a recent announcement by the Furman Board of Trustees, it was released that Dr. Gordon W. Blackwell had been appointed president of Furman University to replace the retiring Dr. John L. Plyer.

Blackwell, president of FSU since 1960, will take over his new position on Feb. 1, 1965.

Blackwell recently pointed out that there was no direct political pressure of any kind on him to leave the presidency of FSU; but he found the opportunity to return to his alma mater appealing.

As well as a pull from Furman there is a push from FSU, the serious problems and frustrations of the State University System.

With the problems dealt with by Florida's system of higher education, it is almost inevitable that the rapidly growing system would have these problems and this ferment. However, there is hope that they will be resolved and Florida will move ahead in higher education.

Last January, Blackwell made some recommendations to the Legislative Council Sub-Committee on Higher Education about how the system can be strengthened. Copies of these recommendations were sent to members of the Board of Education and the Board of Control.

Blackwell's campaign for greater support for higher education had been particularly apparent during his four years at FSU. Enrollment has increased from 9,000 to expected 11,800 this fall. The faculty has increased from 517 to 644, 25 per cent; faculty salaries 47 per cent; legislative appropriations 46 per cent; and the total University operating fund 72 per cent.

Before his four-year stay at FSU, Blackwell, a native of Spartanburg, S.C., graduated summa cum laude from Furman. He received his master of arts degree from the University of North Carolina and his Ph.D. from Harvard University. He then taught sociology at Furman. After two years of wartime service with the Department of Civilian Defense, he was professor and director of the Institute for Research in Social Sciences at the University of North Carolina. During this same period, he was editor of the journal "Social Forces" and was co-author of five books and numerous articles. He was later Kenan professor of Sociology at UNC, and later chancellor of the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina. His next move was to president of FSU, where he has served as a member of the Commission on Administrative Affairs of the American Council on Education and on the Executive Committee of the State University Association.

One of Blackwell's greatest regrets in leaving FSU is the prospect of separation from a really great group of students: He has a great respect for their abilities and aspirations, and he has their confidence and admiration.

Director Named For FSU Circus

Living High, the FSU circus, will perform this year under the direction of Coach Jack Haskin, the original developer of circus at Florida State.

Students Dr. Harry Day announced that he will be glad to assist with both new students interested in circus and veteran performers in his office at 4 p.m. this afternoon (Monday).

Day expressed a hope that his department will "bring the circus into proper perspective this year, to give it a broader base educational-wise." Day indicated that the circus was to become self-supporting to prevent it from being cut out of the university program.

"The change is an attempt to stabilize the circus program so it can continue," concluded Day.

Attorney General Schedules Organizational Meetings

There will be an organizational meeting for all student organizations in Activities Night at the new Thursday, and Tuesday, Sept. 15 at 8 pm in the main auditorium of Longmire. All presidents and officers of all campus organizations will be required to attend one of the two meetings.

Before any organizations may participate in Activities Night at the new University Union Sept. 19, they must be brought up-to-date.

All organizations on campus are delinquent and the files must be brought up-to-date in the Attorney General's office for the coming year. The organizations must comply with regulations in the Student Body Constitution.

According to Chapter 101.3, Article 1 of the Student Body Statutes: Failure of an organization to supply to the Attorney General upon ten days' notice three copies of its current Constitution, including a statement of the organization's purposes, if these are not stated in its Constitution, shall result in action to be taken from the floor of the Senate. In addition there should be on file in the Attorney General's office a list of current officers and the names of the sponsors.

The Attorney General under power granted by Student Body has the right to study and to request certain information from all student organizations. Failure to comply with this can result in a recommendation to the Student Senate that this organization can no longer be recognized as an approved student organization.

This would result in loss of privilege of using university facilities for any function.

If there are any questions, contact Ed Scott, the Attorney General, in office 210 Longmire.

Freshmen Must File For Office

Commissioner of Elections John Campbell announced today that all prospective full candidates must file a declaration of candidacy with the office, 210 Longmire, before 5 p.m. Sept. 15.

Board Stresses Recreation Use

Regular student recreational use of the new University Union swimming pool will be the major emphasis of the union program until Oct. 15.

Dean of Students Harry Day announced that a compromise agreement has been made by the Union Board which takes into consideration both the major needs of the swimming team, and the use by regular students as indicated by the summer program.

The basic summer schedule for student recreation will continue: week days, 12 a.m. - 9 p.m.; Sat., 9 a.m. - 9 p.m.; and Sun., 1 - 9 p.m. Students pay $.25 a swim, or $5. for a trimester season ticket. Season ticket for student families are $7.50.

Modifications in the basic schedule will limit use of the diving tower to the swimming team only from 3-6 p.m., and the 8 swimming lanes from 5-6 p.m. However regular students will have the continued use of the three lower diving boards opposite the diving tower, and the central swim area.

Use of Montgomery swimming pool will be limited to the swimming team from 7-10 p.m. on Monday, Wednesday, and from 8-11 p.m. on Tuesday, and Thurs., arranged in fit around scheduled swimming classes.

Vocal Family Stays Together

"We just sort of got wound up--and haven't run down." That is how Dr. Walter James associate professor of music at FSU, accounts for the musical enthusiasm in his family.

The story of the Walter James family is told in a pictorial article, "Music Is A Family Affair" in the September issue of "Together" magazine.

Both vocal and instrumental music are so much a part of their life that the 26-acre tract of woodland and water six miles from Tallahassee, where they live, is called "Singing Acres."

"Though activities take the family members in all directions," the article reports, "their life centers around the home." Expressing the feeling of his wife Rachel, three daughters, and three boys, Dr. James told "Together," Methodism's monthly magazine for families: "We love our home -- even with the transportation complexities that come with it." Living in the country, we can "vocalize" on the front lawn without disturbing anyone but ourselves.

Other members of the family are Judith Rae, 20, a music major at FSU; Janice Lee, 17; Jonen Ann, 14; Walter Stevens James, Jr., 10; William, 6; and Jeffrey, 3-1/2. All but the very youngest share the musical interest.

Not only is music a family affair for the James', but Professor James and Rachel discovered romance in music back in their student days in Michigan.

Now he is director of music at Trinity Methodist Church while Mrs. James is the organist. She also teaches piano privately and plays in FSU's symphony orchestra.

THE International Security Agency is a totally unique organization... and offers creative research opportunities in the art and science of sophisticated communications

There is absolutely no other organization like it -- no other organization doing the same important work, or offering the same wealth of opportunities for imaginative thinkers in the liberal Arts, as well as the Physical and Engineering Sciences.

The National Security Agency is a major research arm of the Department of Defense, but its influence and responsibilities are far broader. It works closely with many industrial and research institutions, it has special access to scientific information at universities and other Government laboratories, and it engages close consulting arrangements with scientists of commanding stature. NSA staff members enjoy all the benefits of Federal employment without the requirements imposed by the Civil Service system.

What does NSA do that warrants this unique stature?

NSA approaches the widest of sophisticated communications from these original viewpoints.

1. Creating secure communications systems and equipments unknown anywhere else, and devising special refinements for computers &amp; ed systems that will increase our handling capabilities. This means that Communications Engineers, Computer Design Specialists, Mathematicians, Programmers, and Systems Analysts, all contribute to the design of antennas, transmitters, receivers, and terminal equipment -- to experiments using new semiconductors, magnetic film, superconductive devices, etc., resulting in new logic circuits and memory units, better high gain arrays for UHF radio systems, higher-capacity data handling terminal equipment, more effective speech band-width compression, and scores of similar advances.

2. By the very nature of "secret" communications, assuring the continuing invulnerability of U.S. communications through cryptologic procedures and techniques. Because cryptology and its cryptographic counterpart are not taught elsewhere, mathematicians, scientists, and all others with appropriate intellectual curiosity will be taught this challenging new discipline right at NSA. Work in this field may involve specially-designed computers, television, computers to computer data links, and cipher programming. (Even music, philosophy, or the classics may be useful prerequisites for cryptology.)

3. Translating written data, and presenting the crux of the material in meaningful form. This is the home of the linguistics expert and the languages graduate enabling the talented graduate to make the most of his or her particular gift, and quickly expand familiarity with other tongues.

In all that NSA does, there is seldom any existing precedent. Only NSA pioneers in "secret" communications on this broad a scale, so only NSA offers the college graduate the best chance to make immediate use of his disciplined thinking -- without years of post-graduate experience. All these features -- together with its well-instrumented laboratories, libraries, and professional staff of specialists in amazingly varied fields -- provide a stimulating academic atmosphere for individual accomplishment.

On-Campus Interviews

for Mathematicians and Engineers will be held later.
Consult your Placement Office for dates.

NSA is located in expanding facilities at Fort George G. Meade, Maryland--halfway between Washington and Baltimore. It is handy to transportation facilities, the University of Maryland and Johns Hopkins, suburban or rural living in town living, too, now that the new circumferential highways are completed -- and the Chesapeake Bay resort region.

LIBERAL ARTS SENIORS: Your PQI Application must be mailed before October 14th

This is most important: To apply for an NSA position, all students EXCEPT Math majors, Engineers, and Physicists must take the PROFESSIONAL QUALIFICATION TEST scheduled for Saturday, October 24th. Stop in at your Placement Office and ask for the NSA Professional Qualification Test brochure. Fill out and mail in the application card enclosed inside.

Even if you are not sure of your career interests yet, get the facts on NSA opportunities now.

Peterson Says Gridmen Tired; Pass, Ground Attack Balanced

By Bob Corne
SPORTS EDITOR

"At this stage in practice we're tired. We don't have the quickness that we've had the last two years," said Head Football Coach Bill Peterson today.

Peterson attributed this lack of quickness to tiredness and went on to say that he was pleased with the overall development of the team. With better running backs than the Tribe has ever had, FSU's opponents still be faced with a more balanced attack this year than in previous years.

Peterson also said that the passing game's progress was "really good." He said that both Steve Tensi and Ed Fritchett were throwing very well and that two of their receivers, Don Floyd and Fred Bultminkoff were looking very fine.

Defensively, Peterson said, the Seminoles have a good line, though they too "need their quickness back." The defensive secondary has Peterson a little worried.

The secondary lost standouts Charlie Calhoun and Dave Snyder to graduation.

Peterson is depending on Maury Bihert, Jim Massey and Winfred Bailey to carry the defensive load until the less experienced men come into their own.

The loss of Calhoun also left a gap in the Seminoles punting game. However, Peterson reported, Fritchett and John Hosack have "really been running the ball lately."

The overall football picture for the Tribe looks much better at this point than pre-season previews had indicated.

While most previewers gave the Seminoles the nod for having its best chance at a winning season, this was by virtue of three men: Steve Tensi, Ed Fritchett and Fred Bultminkoff.

The Tribe, building around 27 returning lettermen, now has a running attack to balance the two fine quarterbacks and flanker, Joe Petro. Lee Narumore and Phil Spomer should be the backs to watch.

Tribe opponents should be in for a few surprises this year as Coach Peterson has closed all practices, a strong indication that there will be a new look to the Tribe offense. The biggest Seminole threat, though, will still be its two fine and experienced quarterbacks, Tensi—a drop back type passer, and Fritchett—a roll out passer.

FOOTBALL FANS

... will see more of this kind of action-packed football as the Seminoles take on this year's rugged schedule in Miami, Sept. 19.

Announcement

Head Football Coach Bill Peterson announced today that any boys genuinely interested in playing football and those they can play college ball should see him at his office in the Field House at Campbell Stadium.

Summer Tribes Get Wins

Tribe athletes spent a successful summer with three teams going undefeated in dual competition, the tennis team taking the state singles and doubles championship, and the baseball team compiling a 23-13 record. Coach Stults led his swimmers to their fifth straight undefeated season as the taken won the Southern Intercollegiate Swimming Championship. The swimmers record was 7-0, bringing their overall record to 123-22-2 under Stults.

The track and field team went through their fifth undefeated season in dual meets with a record of 5-0. This gave the trackmen the state AAU title.

FSU golfers extended their winning streak to 19 by winning 12 dual matches this year. The winning team started last year. Coach Hugh Hams first year.

Led by All-American catcher Suarez, the Tribe baseballers went through a 23-13 season, thus making Fred Hatfield's debut as a coach successful. Suarez was the only Seminole in eight years to receive an All-American.

Paul Scarpa's initial season as FSU tennis coach was a success. Lex Wood took the State Singles Championship and the State Doubles Championship, teaming with Cato.

Administration Releases New Faculty Appointments

Several faculty and staff appointments have been made during the summer and are now in effect.

Dr. Harry P. Day, FSU's new dean of students, has served as director of the Salzburg Seminar in American Studies in Austria for two years.

"I am extremely interested that the department is alert to the changes that we must make as the university grows. We must adjust to keep pace as the university program becomes more academic."

Day is replacing Dr. R.R. Oglesby who will resume his teaching duties in Government.

Dr. W. Laurence Chalmers Jr., a Princeton-educated psychologist, succeeded Dr. J. Paul Neynolds who is leaving to become dean of the college of Wilmington College, Wilmington, N. C., as dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Chalmers joined the FSU faculty in September, 1957, as a member of the Psychology Dept. Chalmers was the first director of FSU's Honor Program, a special program for selected undergraduates of superior scholastic ability. He has been assistant dean of faculties for two years.

Chalmers received all three of his degrees at Princeton University, where he majored in psychology. He taught at Princeton for one year and then was a research psychologist with the Air Force at Lowry Air Force Base, Denver, from 1952 to 1957.

Dr. Stephen S. Winters has been appointed associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and director of the Division of Basic Studies. The Basic Studies Division provides an opportunity for instruction and student counseling during freshman and sophomore years. This is responsible for a broad knowledge as the basis for specialization or professional training as an undergraduate or graduate student.

Winters, an FSU college teacher for 15 years, took over his duties Sept. 1 from Dr. Conrad E. Lanz, Assistant professor of English, who resigned at FSU beginning in September, 1963, separates the department of Philosophy and Religion into two departments within the College of Arts and Sciences.

Spivy will also serve as University Chaplain. Rev. William D. Brown has been serving as FSU's acting chaplain in Tallahassee and a candidate for the doctoral degree in marriage and family living at FSU. Spivy is a former assistant professor at the University of Virginia. He was a chaplain at Williams College, Williamstown, Mass. Prior to that he was an assistant instructor at the Yeshiva University School, Spivy was a Woodrow Wilson Fellow in 1954.

Retiring Faculty Members Total Nearly 175 Years Of Service

William Hudson Rogers, Professor of English, heads a list of eight retiring faculty members whose combined service to FSU totals nearly 175 years.

Dr. Rogers joined the faculty of FSCW in 1922 and is well known by the many students who have flocked to his Shakespeare classes. In 1957, he was selected as FSU's First Distinguished Professor. Omicron Delta Kappa honored him with membership in 1958, saying he was a "gentleman and a scholar."

Henry F. Becker, Head of the Geography Dept. at FSU, retires after 36 years of service. Since joining the faculty of FSCW in 1928 he has been connected with state government plans to improve problems brought about by rapid urbanization. In 1947, he became chairman of the Governor's Resource Use Education Committee. He has been responsible for many books and films in relation to his field.

Dr. Margaret V. Campbell, Professor of Modern Languages at FSU, retires after 29 years of service. Miss Campbell was the first television instructor at FSU. A member of Phi Beta Kappa and Phi Kappa Phi, she also served as president of the Southeastern Conference on Latin American Studies and has been active in the South Atlantic Modern Language Association.

She now plans to work on her translation of manuscripts brought home from a trip to Latin America and especially Chile.

After 16 years of teaching at FSU, Dr. Lois L. Schmoor of the music faculty will leave to assume a position as associate professor of music education at the New York State University College at Potsdam.

Miss Schmoor came to FSU in 1948 and during her first years directed the music program at the University School from kindergarten through the sixth grade. She also supervised the music interns in those grades and planned and conducted demonstrations for the elementary education majors.

Much of her work at FSU has involved coordinating the classroom teacher music courses. Her research interest has been the study of the ranges of children's voices. Dr. Mary L. Bostick, Assistant Professor of Education, retired this year after 15 years of service. She attended the University of Chicago and is widely known for her teaching ability as well as for her gardening ability, winning first place ribbons for many years at Thomasville, Ga. for her roses.

After 12 years at FSU, Dr. Marjorie C. Miller, Assistant Professor of Education, is retiring. She has been active in professional organizations and is a member of the board of directors for the Tallahassee Junior Museum.

Miss Kate Reynolds, Technical Processes of Stroz Library, retires after 12 years at FSU. She first came to Tallahassee in the employ of a professional organization (then Gov. Holland). Later, when Sen. Holland went to Washington, D.C., she came to FSU and worked for a book binder and binder.

Dr. Malvina Trussell, Professor of Science Education, retires after 15 years at FSU. She has taught for 43 years in various schools and universities.

Transportation System Changes Contemplated

"Two buses now will transport students to Alumni Village," announced Dean John Arnold, Asst. Dean of Students, today.

There is an increased demand for transportation to the Village because of the new rules concerning graduate students. They are not permitted to drive or park cars on campus between 7:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Arrangements made by Lt. James M. Lewis, Campus Security, Charles Carter, Capital Transit Inc., and Student Government have resulted in an extra bus being added to the regular service from the campus to Alumni Village.

The new bus will pass through campus and circle the Village. The service began Monday at a cost of 20¢ per ride or 10 tickets for $1. Buses will run hourly from 6:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.

The Jinny bus which has served the Village as the past will be taken off during a 30-day trial period. "The trial period is to work out routes and schedules," according to Dean Arnold. If this method proves successful, Student Government hopes to get campus buses from the city by the beginning of the second trimester.

Details for the campus buses have not been completed so far. The new bus and the regular bus which serves Alumni Village will pick up people at various stops along the way following a schedule released by Campus Security.

Buses leave from Alumni Village for FSU - A.M.: 6:50, 7:50, 8:50, 9:50, 10:50, 11:50. P.M.: 12:50, 1:50, 2:50, 3:50, 4:50, 5:50.

Registrar Reports 1,061 Enrollment

Arthur Murray W. Kenna reported that 11,010 students have enrolled at FSU for trimester I. With the completion it is expected to rise to 12,000, after an expected 1,000 enrollment.

The total is 19 per cent from last year's fall trimester total of 9,600. Final enrollment is expected to rise 7.5 per cent, according to Registrar.

Mr. Kenna stated that without the celebration of one of the "greatest years of students ever," it would have been possible to register many students in such a short time. They seemed to face no difficulties of registration and good humor and patience, Kenna said.

Wednesday, the first day of registration, surpassed the previous first day record with 1,061 students. Thursday had an additional 991 - with 2,739 on Friday, and 3,430 on Saturday morning.

The registration will continue in the Swanee Room through Friday, 9 a.m. It will cost the students extra fee of $5 to register late.

Pictures Taken

Students who did not have identification pictures made during registration last week should make time to get them taken this morning, Registrar Murray W. Kenna said today.

Small cameras will be set up in the Swanee Room, today through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Students may have their pictures made at any convenient time during these hours, he added.

Only 10 cards will be required at a first football game, Oct. 3.

Staffers Meet

The "Smoke Signals" will have an organizational meeting tonight at 7:30 p.m. in 410 Longmire. All interested persons may attend.

Traditions

This being the first week of classes at FSU, it would be well to dwell on a few thoughts about the school, tradition, and that hard-to-define quality, school spirit. Florida State's tradition as a scholastic institution goes back to 1857 when this school was Florida Seminary School and was attended by Cadets. These boys are most remembered now for their defense of Tallahassee in the Civil War at the battle of Natural Bridge. A tradition of honor.

Early in this century the Seminary School became an outstanding college for girls as Florida State College for Women. As FSCW this school graduated many distinguished alumni, among them Miss Helen Davis who served as chief of the Dietitian Section of the Army. A tradition of service.

In 1947 this school again made a shift and became co-educational as Florida State University. In its short history as a major university FSU has increased its stature as a home for scholars through an expanding program of graduate study. Dean Harry P. Day is one of the outstanding graduates of this program. A tradition of Scholarship.

FSU has maintained the tradition of a liberal education with its continuing support of the arts. The drama and music departments are two of the more outstanding in the nation. Ethel Donaldson, a recent graduate and talented vocalist, last year was one of 10 finalists in the Metropolitan Opera's new talent search. A tradition of Creativity.

While relatively new in the inter-collegiate athletic circles FSU has produced several outstanding teams in its short competitive history.

The baseball squad has three times been to the Collegiate World Series; the swimming team in consistently top in the South, and the football team is a ranking southern independent. Dick Houser went from All-American for FSU to short stop for the Cleveland Indians. A tradition of Athletic excellence.

Each student at this institution is part of that tradition, building on the achievements of the past to add new achievements in the future.

Each student should be proud of what this university has produced, and should be ready to support the school in everything that it attempts --- in the arts, scholastics, and athletics.

FSU has a great tradition on which to build the GREAT UNIVERSITY.

Five contemporary plays ranging from classic to contemporary are on the FSU payroll for the 1948-49 season. The University Theater's opener will be "A Man For All Seasons" by British playwright Robert Bolt. Oct. 21-25, A success in both London and

Harold Massey Gets Deanship

Dr. G. Harold Massey, assistant director of admissions with the FSU's office has accepted a position as dean of admissions and records at Tennessee Polytechnic Institute.

Massey leaves Tallahassee this month to begin duties this fall quarter in the state-supported institution of Tennessee. TPI has an enrollment of some 5000 students. Massey came to FSU in 1940 as director of counseling after serving on the staff of Mississippi Southern College for three years. At Mississippi Southern he was director of student counseling, assistant dean of the basic college and associate professor of education.

From 1946 to 1950 Massey was director of the Baptist Student Union at the University of Miami. He also served as dean of students at Maryland College, Plainville, Tex., and as Dean of students and professor of psychology at Belmont College in Nashville, Tenn.

Mrs. Massey, who is now a certification analyst with the State Department of Education, has accepted a position with Tennessee Polytechnic Institute as an instructor of English.

Faculty, Staff Insurance Sold

Faculty and staff members may secure group insurance for income and life protection from the Professional Insurance Company until Sept. 30.

The company offers loss of income for sickness and accident; group life insurance; regular plans for life insurance for employees and family; accident insurance; and dread disease insurance in addition to hospital and surgical plans. All benefits are paid directly to the policyholder in full regardless of other insurance. This will be the last open enrollment for coverage with life and income protection for an indefinite period, according to Arthur S. Adams, director of University Personnel.

The following schedule lists the dates and places Gabor & Co. agents will be located on campus:

Today noon-3pm Lib. Lecture Hall
9am-3pm Main, Bldg. Conf. Room.

Tomorrow 9am-3pm Longmire Conference Rm.

Thursday 9am-3pm Longmire Conference Rm.

Practice Begins

Practice for Gunkans's Swinging Dance Set will be this afternoon and Thursday from 4:14 to 5:30 pm and Saturday from 9 to 10:30 am at Tully Gym.

Any women who are interested in participating may attend. Previous dance experience is not important but immediate attendance is necessary as the first road show is in two weeks and the home show will be presented in four weeks.

Women may also be interested in joining the gymnastic team, practicing daily at 3 pm under the direction of Betty Haas and Susan Long in Tully Gym.

Five Plays Scheduled For Season

New York, the play explores the essential features of man's self-respect and commitment to principles. Season tickets are now on sale at the Central Ticket Office in Westcott from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday. Season ticket books are priced at $2.50 for students.

A Russian play, "The Cherry Orchard," one of Anton Chekhov's major works, will be performed Dec. 2-6. Chekhov began trends in playwriting which have only recently become dominant forces in world theater. During the early part of this century "The Cherry Orchard" was called a tragedy, but most modern theater people recognize it as one of our greatest comedies, according to Dr. Arthur H. Doriga, director of theater.

"Antigone," a classic study of the tragic mode of the problems created by an individual whose conviction is that the existing law is wrong, will be performed Feb. 17-21. The classic Greek tragedy of individual versus state is by Sophocles.

The FSU theater continues a tradition of presenting new plays by distinguished playwrights with this season's premiere slated for production March 24-28. The title of the play, selected to be performed will be announced at a later date.

Winding up the season's showings will be "Thieves' Carnival," a satirical play which blends the impossible with the probable. The play is by Jean Anouilh, one of France's greatest contemporary writers, and will be presented May 24-30.

Impeachment Of Judge Kelly Subject Of Government Study

"The Impeachment of Judge Richard Kelly," a study of the impeachment, trial and acquittal of the Sixth Judicial District judge in 1943, has been published by the Institute of Governmental Research at FSU as the second in the Florida Government Series.

The 116-page account "brings together the bits and pieces of testimony from 3,000 pages of official transcript taken during hearing before a house select committee and during the trial of Judge Kelly by the senate," the author, Dr. Carl D. McMurray, said.

McMurray, after summarizing the proceedings, the second impeachment trial in Florida history, mentioned various alternatives to impeachment of judges such as judges, attorneys and legislators connected with the process. Chief Justice L. Harris, sitting on the Supreme Court, who presided at the trial, suggested a decision which would be given to "remove, suspend, limit or deprive any judicial officer of Florida for designated misconduct of office."

Sixty Faculty Members Increase FSU's Force

Sixty additions to the faculty will enable FSU to put new depth into a teaching force which will have its heaviest student load in history as the fall trimester gets under way. The provision for new faculty members will enable the University to staff for the first time such new agencies as the Department of Urban and Regional Planning. It will also enable the University to make several important additions to its regular science, social science and humanities faculties.

Altogether, university officials say, the faculty strength will be brought to 646, in addition to faculty members filling the newly budgeted position, many others will be on hand in September to fill vacancies caused by retirement, resignation or leave of absence.

Dr. Robert S. Mulliken, who is leaving the University of Chicago after 36 years, will join the staff of the Institute of Molecular Biophysics as distinguished research professor of chemical physics. The chemist, called by his colleagues a towering figure in the field of molecular electronic theories, won a Kirtwood Gold Medal at Yale in 1957 and in 1960 won the American Chemical Society Lewis Gold Medal and Richards Gold Medal, in the war years he worked on the Plutonium (atomic bomb) project at Chicago.

FSU expects to build a doctoral program in demography (population study) with the aid of Dr. Charles B. Nam, who has been with the Bureau of Census in Washington since 1957 and presently is chief of the Population Division. A native of New York, he holds a Ph.D. from the University of North Carolina. He will join the staff as professor of sociology.

Another sociologist who will join the faculty, Dr. Robert E. Herriott, will work in the newly created Institute of Human Learning as a research associate. The Institute was set up for a scientific study of the process of human learning, including vocational training, literacy training and other specialized fields. Herriott has been at Harvard since 1959 as an assistant professor and research associate in the Harvard Graduate School of Education. He received his Ed. D. degree from Harvard in 1941.

The newly created Urban and Regional Planning Department will be headed by Joseph L. Internaggio, who since 1959 has been director of planning for the Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies. A native of New York City, he holds a bachelor's degree from the University of Kentucky and a master of city and regional planning degree from Cornell. From 1932 to 1956 he was chief planner for Arlington county, Va., and from 1956 to 1959 was project director of the national committee on urban research of the Highways Research Board, National Academy of Science.

As the new chairman of FSU's Mathematics Dept., the University will obtain the services of Dr. Orville Goodwin Harrold, who has been a member of the University of Tennessee faculty since 1947, and now is head of the Mathematics Dept. He is a native of Chicago and earned all three of his degrees at Stanford, including the Ph.D. in 1936. Harrold won the Oak Ridge Nuclear Research Prize for 1949 and delivered the invited Guggenheim address of the American Mathematical Society in 1956.

Newcomers will head two other departments in the fall. William R. Bruckheimer will be professor and chairman of the Geography Dept., coming here from the Geography and Geology Dept. of which he was head, at Western Michigan University. He is a native of Gary, Ind., and holds a Ph.D. from the University of Michigan. He was an instructor at FSU in 1949-51.

The Philosophy Dept. will have as its chairman Dr. Donald Clark Hodges, a native of Fort Worth, Texas, he received his Ph.D. from Columbia and from 1952 to 1963 was a member of the faculty of the University of Missouri. After serving as a visiting professor at the University of Nebraska he joined the faculty of the University of South Florida and comes to Tallahassee from Tampa.

Dr. John E. Moes, author of the book, "Local Subsidies for Industry," published by the University of North Carolina Press in 1962, will join the faculty of the Economics Dept. Born of Dutch parents in Indonesia, Moes recently has been in Africa as a economic adviser to the United Nations Technical Assistance Board. He holds a Ph.D. from the University of California and has taught at the University of Minnesota and University of Virginia. He is a specialist in economic development.

Richard Burgin, who spent part of the last school year in Tallahassee as distinguished professor in the School of Music, will join faculty full time this fall as professor of music. For 40 years a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he was its associate conductor for many years. He made his debut as a child violinist in Warsaw in 1903.

Robert M. Griffin, who has been a consultant with Blair Associates, will direct FSU's new Urban Research Center at Cape Kennedy. FSU's Institute for Social Research has a $200,000 grant from the Ford Foundation for five years of urban studies in the cape area. Griffin is a native of California and holds a master's degree from the University of North Carolina. From 1957 to 1960 he was director of planning for High Point, N.C.

Three new faculty members are joining the School of Business Administration to teach principally in the research and development management program at Cape Kennedy. Dr. George T. Kennedy, who has been associated with North American Aviation Inc. Ohio, heading a management audit group, and Dr. John Reilhan, a visiting professor, who has been on the faculty of Inter-American University of Puerto Rico, will teach in the management program at the cape during the first trimester. Jack E. Steen, who has been completing his work toward a doctorate at the University of Alabama, will teach campus in the fall and at the cape during the second trimester.

Several newly appointed administrators, all but one named from among present faculty members, will be on hand with the start of school. Heading up the academic program will be Dr. Karl Dittmer, vice-president for academic affairs, who is returning to the institution he served from 1949 to 1958 as head of the Chemistry Dept. Since 1958 Dittmer has been program administrator of the Petroleum Research Fund and director of the Division of Research Grants and Fellowships, American Chemical Society, Washington.

Dr. E. Laurence Chalmers, who has administered the office of academic affairs for the past year as assistant dean of the faculties, is the new dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. Dr. Stephen S. Winters, a geologist, will be responsible for the instructional program of freshmen and sophomores as associate dean and director of the Division of Basic Studies.

Dr. Harry P. Day, following a two-year leave during which he was staff director for the Seminar in American Studies at Salzburg, is the new dean of students.

Accident Kills FSU Instructor

Wolfgang Gerhard Sonntag, 30-year-old instructor in German at FSU, was killed in a car accident on a hairpin turn on a mountain road near Zimapan, Mexico, Aug. 12.

The accident reportedly occurred when a gas-tank truck coming from the opposite direction crashed into Sonntag's Volkswagen, which was then struck by a bus from the rear. Zimapan is about 100 miles from Mexico City.

Sonntag, a native of Hamburg, Germany, who came to FSU in 1963, under a Fulbright grant, had gone to Mexico for a brief vacation before resuming teaching duties in the fall trimester.

Two Physicists Nationally Cited

Two FSU physicists, M. A. Melvin and Hans Wintern, were recognized by national and international organizations during the summer.

Melvin was cited by the Gravity Research Foundation for his essay on "Magnetogravitational Structures," which won honorable mention in the Foundation's 1964 announcement of awards for outstanding essays on gravitation.

The physics professor has authored numerous papers on the analysis of structures and changes of matter, symmetry theory, field theory and cosmology. He was working this summer in the Director's and Physics Divisions of the Oak Ridge National Laboratory.

Wintern, recently returned from the International Congress of Nuclear Physics held in Paris, France, reported his recent research findings to the Congress. Also by invitation, he gave invited talks to the Nuclear Research Center in Karlsruhe and the Universities of Munich, Hamburg, Erlangen and Freiburg.

Scouting Report

Miami Lacks Lettermen

FSU will open its schedule in Miami against a mystery team. The University of Miami is under a new coach and has practically a new team.

New Coach Charlie Tate will take a team built around only 16 returning lettermen, as compared to the Seminoles' 27, and try to produce a winning season.

Among these 16 lettermen only three were starters for last year's Hurricane team.

The Hurricane's lost eight starters, including All-Americans George Mira, and Dan Conners. Besides quarterback Mira, the Hurricane backfield also lost leading pass receiver Nick Spinelli, and end Hoyt Sparks.

To fill these gaps Tate must look for talent in his field of 30 sophomores and junior college transfers. Tate does see one bright spot on the horizon--enthusiasm. This young squad, said Sports Publicity Director George Galer, is the most enthusiastic team in a decade at Miami. They promise to be one of the hardest hitting squads seen in many years at Miami.

With the loss of Mira, one of football's outstanding collegiate passers, the Hurricane's offense will take on a new look.

Tate hopes to build a balanced running and passing attack--an attack to keep the opposition guessing.

To build this kind of attack Tate will call on new faces. Faces unfamiliar to Hurricane opponents. For FSU fans in one case the name's the same, but the face is different. The name is Biletnikoff, Bob Biletnikoff--brother of the Tribe's flanker Fred Biletnikoff.

Miami's Biletnikoff is one of three quarterbacks that Tate hopes will lead the Hurricane offense. The other two are Rick Swan and Fred Bertani. If one of these three can click with running backs Pete Banaszack and Robert Dwyer, Miami could surprise pre-season predictors and Hurricane opponents.

Pete Praises Team Spirit; Front Seven Shave Heads

by Dave Ross
FLAMBEAU SPORTS WRITER

"During our first two weeks of practice we have had fewer injuries than at Florida State University," said Head Football Coach Bill Peterson.

Peterson explained this was the first team he had recruited and they knew his system so well that practices were light as compared to previous years.

The team spirit was evident during the first week of practice as the seven first string defensive linemen shaved their heads and deemed themselves the "Magnificent Seven."

Peterson said he was generally pleased with Saturday's scrimmage, in which he pitted offensive unit against the defensive unit.

Steve Tensi set up both of the offensive unit's touchdowns with passes to flankerback Fred Biletnikoff. Fullback Lee Narramore and halfback Joe Petko carried the ball over as the offensive unit won 13-0.

Peterson has praise for his first defensive unit and singled out Jack Schinholzer, Avery Sumner and Bill McDowell for their individual performances.

In summing up the scrimmage Peterson said, "Our passing is fairly consistent, however our running game is sporadic and we are making too many mental mistakes."

The Tribe's practice sessions have been closed to the public and will remain so until the Miami opener in the Orange Bowl.

Peterson explained that he was developing some new defensive strategy which would be unveiled at the Miami game.

When asked about the Miami game Peterson said, "After last year's game Miami will be fired up for us. We expect the Miami team to be better than most people think and we are not going to let our guard down."

This week the Seminoles will view fundamentals and work some more on conditioning.

Tennis Meets

Tennis Coach announced today that there will be a meeting of all students interested in playing tennis this year today at 3:30 p.m. in 214 Tully Gym.

This meeting is for all former varsity members and any other students interested in playing tennis. Varsity letters, said Wood, will be awarded at this meeting.

CAMPBELL STADIUM

... will have a new look this year with the addition of 15,000 new seats. The additional seats are indicated in this drawing by the darker shade of gray. The new seats will be ready for FSU's home opener against New Mexico State Oct. 3.

Old Campbell Adds Seats For New Look

The Seminoles will play football before the largest crowds in FSU home history this year.

This will be made possible by the addition of 15,000 new seats in Campbell Stadium. The new additions, made this summer, include 16,144 seats on the west side, 16,426 on the east side, and 6,914 in the end zones.

1,000 new box seats have also been added.

Before this addition Campbell Stadium, which was built in 1961, had a seating capacity of 28,486.

The "new" Campbell Stadium will be ready for the Tribe's home opener against New Mexico State, Oct. 3.

Director of Sports Publicity Bill Bunker said that this addition of 15,000 will make Campbell Stadium larger than four Southeastern Conference Schools.

Mississippi State has a capacity of 35,000, Ole Miss can seat 34,500. University of Kentucky seats 37,500. Vanderbilt has a capacity of 34,000. The Seminoles will face two of these schools at Campbell Stadium.

They are the University of Kentucky and Southern Mississippi.

For the first time in the series FSU and the University of Florida will play at Campbell Stadium, Nov. 21.

Trooper Bill says...

Weaving in and out of traffic is a dangerous practice, especially during rush hours on two and three-lane highways. Stay in your lane. If you pass, be sure the road is clear before you shift lanes. In rush hours, you get to your destination just as fast by staying in one lane, and keeping up with traffic.

Mrs. Katherine B. Hoffman (left) and Dr. Grover L. Rogers (center) discuss campaign strategy with President Gordon W. Blackwell. The drive begins later in September.

Greek Rush Brings Large Response

"Rush gives college women an opportunity to meet many people on campus and develop new friendships," commented Ginger Harrison, Panhellenic rush chairman. There are 1,110 women out for formal fall rush which began Friday night with formal teas. All women out for rush attended 15 minutes parties at each sorority house on Friday night and Saturday afternoon.

Friday morning, women will pick up their invitations to parties for Saturday. There will be eight parties which will last from 9 a.m. to 12:45 p.m. and from 7 p.m. to 10:45 p.m. Sunday morning women will pick up invitations to Sunday's parties which begin at 2 p.m. and continue through dinner until 8:45 p.m. Monday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

women will pick up invitations to Preferential parties. These parties will be from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., with a dinner party.

Tuesday from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. women will sign Preferential cards. Thursday, bids may be picked up between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m.

Pledging will take place Thursday afternoon at 5 p.m. "We hone one out of every three women out for rush will pledge," stated Miss Harrison.

Receiving invitations, signing preferentials, and picking up bids will take place in the Student Lounge of Longmire. A charge of $1.25 will be made for each dinner.

"The response for fraternity rush this trimester exceeded the number of men registered last year by about 40 men," stated Henry Blizzard, graduate assistant to Dr. Hugh Adams, Fraternity Counselor.

There are about 500 men out for IFC rush which began Sept. 3 with registration. Open house was held at all fraternity houses Sept. 4 and 5. Parties by invitation began last night. Second rush parties will be tonight from 6:30 to 9 p.m. The last party will be tomorrow night from 6:30 to 9 p.m.

Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. men may fill out preference cards in the Suwanee Room.

Saturday bids may be picked up in Room 16, Longmire from 9 a.m. to 12 noon. A formal bid will be necessary for a man to pledge. Pledging will be Saturday at 2 p.m. at the respective houses.

Those men who did not sign up for formal rush may sign up in Room 16, Longmire, on Monday.

Rogers, Hoffman Are New Fund Chairmen

Dr. Grover L. Rogers, Dean of the School of Engineering Science, and Mrs. Katherine B. Hoffman, Chemistry Dept., have been appointed co-chairmen of the 1964 United Fund Drive on campus.

The drive will be conducted the latter part of Sept. Dr. John Champion, Vice President for administrations, heads the community drive.

President Gordon W. Blackwell has appointed a steering committee to work with Rogers. Members include Florence Bethea, Homer

Black, Eugene Boyce, Robert Brewer, Hortense Glenn, Mrs. Hoffman, Joseph Hooten, Phillip G. Hunt, Robert Lawton, Thomas Lewis, Cliff Paisley, Ralph Richard, Owen Sellers, Robert Spivey, Richard Trichter and Ira Valentine.

Dr. Royal Ray will head the progress reports committee for campus drive.

Dr. John Champion said that Rogers is highly qualified to conduct a drive which he predicted will be quite successful. Last year FSU pledged 100 per cent of its quota of $17,000. This year's goal is $19,000.

United Fund agencies include boy scouts, girl scouts, Salvation Army, Leon County Mental Health Association, Milk Fund, Associated Charities, Red Cross, USO, Candler of Hope School, YMCA and Junior Museum. One gift can benefit all these agencies. However, a donation can be designated to a specific one. When asked how much to give, many people reply, "A fair share is a day's pay."

Rogers explained that graduate students, faculty, and staff are especially encouraged to give. It is realized that undergraduates give to the campus fund which will help their own organizations. However, any gifts from them will be appreciated.

Flambeau Celebrates Fiftieth Year As College Newspaper

"The Florida Flambeau" celebrates its fiftieth anniversary as a college newspaper this year.

The word "Flambeau," meaning a flaming torch, represents the three flaming torches present in the seal of FSU.

The first circulating manager, Mrs. L. A. Yates, won the contest to select the name of the paper by turning her finger down a page in a dictionary until she came to the word "flambeau".

The paper began as a small weekly tabloid in 1914. The first editor, Ruby Leach, had been hired to write campus news for the "Tallahassee Democrat". After discovering that the campus had enough news to make a campus newspaper worthwhile, the "Florida Flambeau" began publication.

On Oct. 19, 1928, the paper was changed to an eight column standard sized newspaper. It has since returned to the tabloid size.

In 1962, the paper became the first daily college newspaper in the state of Florida in order to keep the students better informed of daily events.

The paper is published Monday through Friday and is distributed throughout campus at Westcott, the Soda Shop, the University Bookstore, the Business Bldg., the History Bldg., and the Library.

The paper has received all-American ratings from the Associate Collegiate Press of the National Scholastic Press Association in 1931, 1932, 1933, 1937, 1938, 1956, 1957, and 1959.

Kidd To Speak At Dames Club

Mrs. Aileen Kidd will be the guest speaker at the first FSU Dames Club program tonight in the Library-Lecture Hall at 8 p.m.

The FSU Dames Club is a social organization which provides programs of cultural and social interest for the wives of university students and for married students.

Through its programs, the club offers opportunities for wives to become better acquainted with one another and encourages them and their husbands to participate in university functions and activities. This organization is a local chapter of the National Association of University Dames.

Active membership in the Dames Club entitles a wife to "graduate along with her husband." Dames receive Phi (Putting Hubby Through) degrees from the university, signed by the President and Dean of Students.

Dames meetings are held on the second Wednesday of each month, annual dues are $1.75. Refreshments are served after each meeting.

Council Elects

Dr. Richard W. Husband, professor of psychology, has been elected to the Council of Representatives of the American Psychological Assn. Husband assumed office at the annual meeting of the APA Sunday, in Los Angeles. The Council is the governing body of the national professional association with responsibility for decisions regarding psychology.

The psychologist was also attending the meeting in the role of meeting chairman of Division Two -- The Teaching of Psychology -- of which he is a past-president.

A member of the FSU faculty since 1954, Husband also has been active in the Florida Psychological Assn. serving as president from 1957-58. He is a specialist in the area of business and industrial psychology.

Laundry Made Own Decision

The University Administration has approved a Student Government initiative for the reorganization of the FSU laundry.

Under the new system the laundry service will be completely voluntary.

Under the old system, all women students were required to pay $17 laundry fee each trimester. Men were not required to use the service. Under the new plan students may pay a six dollar fee for flat work only, the regular fee for the regular service, or refrain from using the laundry entirely.

Every student has an opportunity to try the laundry for himself, and then to make his own decision.

The bill is a provisional nature. The new system will be tried for one year. If it is found to be a success, a new bill will be introduced into the Student Senate to make the plan permanent.

Court Asks Meet

Hines Boya, Chief Justice of Honor Court, requests that all defense attorneys, investigators, and members of the honor bureau contact him, or Attorney General Ed Scott immediately, in the Student Government offices.

Flambeau Editorials

FLAMBEAU editorials do not necessarily reflect the opinion of the student body as a whole or the administration of Florida State University. Editorials represent only the opinion of FLAMBEAU editors. Each editorial is identified with the initials of its author.

Honor Code

The adoption of the FSU Academic Honor System in the spring election of 1964 culminated two years of study and planning of many FSU students, including former Student Body President Johnny Smith and former Men's Vice President Gene Brown.

The new Honor System has received the approval of the Faculty Senate, a status the old Honor System never achieved.

As stated in Section I of the new Honor System, every student has the dual responsibility of upholding the highest standards of academic honesty in his (or her) own work; and also the responsibility of refusing to tolerate academic dishonesty on the part of any other person. These two ideas form the core of the new Honor System.

Although the Honor System went into effect during the summer trimester, this trimester will be the real test of its effectiveness, for it is in this and the following term that the real force of the trimester system itself is felt by students. And in many cases of academic dishonesty in the past it has been a problem, imagined or real, of straining to remain on the good side of the trimester retention table while enjoying (and often gaining invaluable personal experience from) the full benefit of college life outside the classroom, which has led many of these students to seriously regard cheating as a "way out."

We are not going to argue the merits or demerits of the new Honor System at this time; to us it seems to have both.

To us the important point right now is that every student become familiar with the new Honor System and how it will work, because as students of FSU we have all, upon enrolling last week, accepted the Honor System as it now stands. We have all agreed to conduct ourselves according to its provisions, whether or not we personally feel they are right.

No system is perfect except on paper. No system is acceptable to all. Every system has bugs. Yet in order to start work on a system that will begin to be equally acceptable to all you must know the faults of the one that is not.

Policy Weakness Shown

The closing of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange this summer is another good example of the change our competitive free market system is undergoing. The New Orleans' Exchange was the largest and oldest market place of cotton in the country.

It went under because the cotton price support and subsidy program of the Federal Government so modifies the price of cotton and cotton products that an organized market is not very practical. After all, if the price of cotton is fixed, what is the need for an open market?

A brief look at the cotton subsidy program might give some idea of the confusion that abounds.

The program began with the price support of raw cotton. Unfortunately this program allowed the price of U.S. cotton to rise above competitive world levels. This was clearly an injustice to the exporter. However, the government was too deeply committed to just "pull out" of the cotton business, so it began a subsidy for the exporter so he could sell U.S. cotton abroad competitively and the government would pick up the difference.

All of this has put the U.S. cotton mills at a real disadvantage. Foreign mills are buying the subsidized U.S. cotton, weaving it into cloth, and selling it in the U.S. at a lower price than domestic cloth.

True to form, the government has proposed yet another subsidy. It now looks as though U.S. mills will be subsidized so that they can compete with the foreign mills. With all this subsidizing and fixing of prices, it should be no surprise that the free market is the one to suffer.

Of course, the American citizen and consumer of cotton products is the real beneficiary of these programs. He not only gets the opportunity to pay the subsidies but he is also allowed to buy the cotton products at the artificially high price his own subsidies have created.

Now all this temporizing may be just fine for dealers and growers of cotton, but it think that perhaps someday it will be discovered that the American citizen just doesn't cotton to this kind of political mind around.

FSU College News

Yellow Springs, O.-(L.P.) - A new Antioch College policy adopted recently provides that outside investigators "are referred to students only upon request of the person being investigated."

The statement says the college will provide data on students and former students to "a legitimate agency or organization," but adds: "We must at the same time make every effort to protect individuals against ill founded, unfair or irrelevant inferences on the part of the investigating organization."

The statement says deans of students will give out official college data, and "often may refer inquiries to other faculty members." Included in the official data are extracurricular activities which students have listed on census forms filled out the last quarter of each year. "There are only the activities which are identified in relation to a particular student's participation."

Except for census data, the college does not keep group membership records, and officials will not give out other information on membership in "political, religious or social action groups," the statement continues. The dean of students offers records the names of current officers of independent groups, destroying the records at year's end.

Under the policy, this information is not released to investigators, but is open to community members and campus publications.

The statement, drafted by the deans of students, says persons named as references by the subject on an investigation "must use their best judgment" in what they say. It adds: "Persons serving as references are urged, however, to refrain from conclusions or opinions about a student's political, social or religious attitudes unless these factors are really relevant to performance on the position in question."

Disagrees With "Signals" Story

To the Editor:

(A rejoinder to Mr. Thomas Riggins in "Smoke Signals").

Throughout the United States in the past two years, we have witnessed increasing pressure on the part of the American Negro to achieve his "Civil Rights."

Among methods used are Freedom Rides, Wade-ins, Stand-ins, mass marches, and other forms of civil disobedience. Their goals are obvious: the full realization of the rights they deserve as equal citizens of this nation.

But as to their methods: will civil disobedience bring the Negro closer to full realization of his professional goals sooner than if other methods were used?

In breaking these so-called "unjust" or "immoral" laws, the participants drive "stems from a moral imperative" ("Civil Disobedience," Thomas Riggins, "Smoke Signals," 4-24).

Persons involved set themselves up as judges whether laws, passed for the good of society as a whole, should be upheld or broken. They may have divine inspiration, a deep personal drive; but the party sets himself up as supreme judge. Let us carry this train of thought into other fields: a burglar may personally declare burglary laws immoral because they prevent him from "earning" his living.

Personal invalidation of laws would pose many problems for society (the nudist, a person who believes in polygamy, or a reckless driver with a vehicle) unless strictly enforced—enforced.

Adaptation of this doctrine could lead to anarchy. Individuals must be allowed to make the validity of laws passed for the good of society. For only when a due amount of control is exercised can all citizens gain fullest use and benefits of the possible liberties.

Negroes seek equal protection of the laws. Yet they would defy the system whose protection they desire.

Let us remember: "Whoever breaks away from the law is a runaway; whoever defies the law is an outlaw; whoever resists or attacks a law enforcement officer is an enemy of society—he abandons all right to protection by the law. He is still, however, subject to the punishment which the law imposes for the protection of society." (Robert N. Walker, U.S. District Judge, Re: U.S. News and World Report, August 24, 1964, p. 74).

Brueckheimer Takes Position As FSU Geography Chairman

Dr. William R. Brueckheimer, a geographer who taught at F.S.U. in 1945-51, has returned as professor and chairman of the Geography Department.

Dr. Brueckheimer, who has been head of the Department of Geology and Geography at Western Michigan University, Kalamazoo, already has begun work on a Florida research project, the use of sales tax statistics in a study of the Florida recreation industry.

He made a similar study in Michigan, where as his doctoral dissertation at the University of Michigan, Brueckheimer studied the recreation industry of the Upper Peninsula.

In addition to recreation his research and teaching interests are conservation, population-resource problems, economic and political geography.

Dr. Brueckheimer studied at Wabash College, and following Army duty in World War II, received a master's degree in social science from the University of Chicago in 1949.

His two-year assignment at F.S.U. followed, then further study at the University of Michigan, where he received a master's degree in geography in 1952 and a Ph. D. in geography in 1954.

RED DAWSON AND DICK HERMANN

... are two of the Seminole's chief contenders for post season All-American honors, Dawson is an offensive end and Hermann is an outstanding linebacker.

Four Grid Stars Tapped For Possible Post-Year Honors

For the first time in its 16 year history as a football power, FSU can boast not one but four All-American candidates.

Flankerback Fred Biletzko is the strongest contender, followed by Red Dawson, Dick Hermann, and Avery Sumner.

Biletzko was a pre-season choice for the Alternite All-American team of "Playboy Magazine."

Dawson, Hermann, and Sumner were highly rated in the College Football Record Book, and by the scouting reports of FSU's opponents. Last season Biletzko, 6-1 and 186 pounds, achieved national recognition when the Seminoles upset the Miami Hurricanes 24-0.

The two letterman took scoring passes of 23 and 17 yards from Steve Tensi, and one from George Mira that went 99 yards. The 99 yard interception was the longest in FSU history.

In his two seasons as a flanker, Biletzko has caught 30 passes for 476 yards and five touchdowns. He has several dozen moves, sprinner speed and good hands.

Dawson, another two year veteran, since coming to FSU has boosted his weight and his reputation as a flanker. The 220-pound end has an assured future in football with a contract waiting for him at the end of this season with the Los Angeles Rams.

Intramural Corner

The intramural corner will publish the schedules and results of many intramural and club activities as space will allow daily. Watch your Flambeau and know when and where to actively participate.

MEAN: Intramural Team Managers will hold their first organizational meeting today at 4 p.m. in 212 Tully Gym.

WOMEN: All dorm and sorority Intramural Chairmen or alternates are required to attend a meeting tomorrow at 4:15 p.m. in room 303 Montgomery Gym.

CLUBS: The Soccer Club will hold a practice session tomorrow at 4 p.m. adjacent to the football practice fields. Another practice is scheduled for Saturday at 10:30 a.m. All students are invited to participate.

After serving his sophomore year as a defensive end, Dawson last year switched to offense where he caught 19 passes for 231 yards.

He gave the Seminoles a first quarter lead against Georgia Tech last year by catching a Tensi pass in the end zone.

Dick Hermann is the man most-often coaches fear. The 205 pound senior line backer is considered by FSU coaches to be the toughest Seminole line backer in the schools history.

Sumner also figured highly on pre-season All-American check lists.

Athletics Take New Look By Addition Of Facilities: Mancha

By MELODIE BETTS

Sports Feature Writer

"Athletics at FSU have a new perspective as the addition of new buildings and facilities have put us in prominence with the larger institutions in the South," stated Vaughn Mancha, Athletic Director of FSU, today.

The addition to Campbell Stadium, the union pool, the improved baseball diamond, and the new University Golf Course will bring a higher prestige to FSU sports said Mancha.

The dreams and aspirations for the future as a lighted baseball park, a hard surfaced trackfield, and an enlargement to Tully Gym, he continued, will prove to be even greater assets to FSU.

In addition to the enlarged seating capacity at Campbell Stadium, there is also the newly constructed field house. Located there are the new staff offices, training and projection room, and equipment storage room, and the new beautiful dressing rooms for the varsity and visiting teams.

"We are the only ones in the South with an Olympic size pool," boasted Mancha. "It is one of the finest structures with its heated waters and facilities for underwater photography."

The athletic department is in the process now of putting in bleachers and canyons will breakers so spectators can enjoy the swim meets and water shows. For the first time next spring, FSU will host the State High School Swim Tournament. There is hope to eventually entice the Olympic Trials to Tallahassee

F. L. Rivard Gives Warning To Off-Campusers

Dr. Blackwell Says Hogan New Director

Appointment of Patrick W. Hogan as acting director of university relations was announced today by Dr. Gordon W. Blackwell. Hogan will continue in his present position as director of public relations and as acting director of the Division of University Relations with his responsibility for offices handling public relations, publications, publicity, broadcasting services, special services, University photography and conferences and events.

Patrick Hogan

Hogan succeeds as head of the Division of University Relations Dr. John A. Blackwell, who resigned Aug. 31. Hogan came to FSU in 1952 to teach and as an undergraduate work received a B.S. degree in journalism in 1955. He became assistant sports publicist at FSU in 1952 and director of sports publicity in 1954. Hogan continued in this post, except for a year as an information officer with the Third Armed Air Division in Frankfurt, Germany, from 1956 to 1958. Hogan was appointed director of relations in Aug. 1, 1961, and has held this post since then. He was selected this year for outstanding V and M men in an annual biographical edition of the Junior Chamber of Commerce which features the outstanding Young Men of America.

Gilchrist Fire Found By Coed

A fire in Gilchrist recently with little damage, after being discovered by a Gilchrist student, which began in the wastebasket of a coed's room. The fire burned for more than four hours before the burning cigarette was removed and left little evidence, for a charred cone from a cigarette in a present laundry bin, a pair of shoes, and one singed sock lying on a rack with other clothes.

Recently, the fire began by slow motion and was just smoldering. It moved to the laundry bin, clothing rack, and a coed's room was not necessary as a fire was confined to one room,

F. L. Rivard, director of Off-Campus Housing, issued a warning today directed toward all students who live in university approved off-campus housing.

Students are reminded by the Off-Campus Housing Office that firm commitments should be made as promptly as possible after satisfactory facilities have been located. Adequate time should also be taken to arrive at a clear mutual understanding of all rental detail and requirements such as rates, due dates, occupancy date, guest privileges, holiday periods, special services or charges, termination arrangements and conduct requirements.

Careful attention should be given by the student to arrangements for heating, ventilation, cleaning, repairs and general utility bills.

Anyone who signs a rental contract should be certain he understands fully and agrees to all its terms before signing it. A minor should obtain his parents or guardian's written consent to the contract. Conditions under which contracts may be terminated and refunds may be made should be clearly understood by both parties.

Movies Presented

Through the efforts of James Carter, manager of the movie phase of the University Union plan, the campus movie will be presented every Friday and Saturday night at 7:30, and after evening football games in Westcott Auditorium.

Tickets go on sale for 25c to students and university personnel only on Friday at Westcott Ticket Office. After this week they may be purchased at the University Union.

Service Forms Made Available

An innovation this year in the office of the Secretary of Intercollegiate and Public Affairs is the personal sheets for students. They are designed to benefit the student body by offering them the opportunity to be of service to FSU and the various committees of student government.

Bob Rockick, Secretary of Intercollegiate and Public Affairs feels this is a vital step in fostering better public relations among the students. The personnel sheets should be of particular interest to freshmen and transfer students because they enable new students to utilize their special talents.

The personnel program was initiated under last year's administration in anticipation of this year's growth.

The information on these sheets will be used to guide cabinet officials, members of the courts, and the Senate in selecting committees.

Appointments are to be made beginning next week, announced Rockick. "Success of this program depends entirely on the interest and participation of the student body," Rockick emphasized.

For personnel sheets, please see Bob Rockick in the Student Cabinet office, 210 Longmire.

Florida Law requires "Due Notice" of intent to terminate a rental when there is no written agreement stating such a date.

For example, when there is no written contract, notice of intent to terminate should be given seven days before the next date on rental paid by the week, 15 days before the next due date on rental paid by the month, 45 days before the next due date on rentals paid by the quarter.

By implication the tenant is responsible for rent for the succeeding period if he fails to give proper notice as required by the State statute.

But by the same token, rental operators cannot charge rates, services, or require premises vacated, except for reasons of misconduct other than by giving "Due Notice."

Deposits against cancellation and damages are sometimes required. These payments are normally separate and apart from rent payments and usually refundable at the end of occupancy, less any outstanding charges, if rent is properly terminated.

The deposit should normally not exceed one month's rent and the terms and conditions governing the deposit should be clearly understood.

Rivard added that the university expects its students and University who last property with the University to honor its agreement with its property, into which they enter and to observe State laws governing rentals.

Lawn Party Set Tomorrow Night

A garden party reception and FSU freshmen and transfer students will be held from 8 to 9:30 p.m. tomorrow at the residence of Mrs. Blackwell's home on West Longmire St.

Buses will begin arriving at 7:45 p.m. and will take students to and from the reception at regular intervals throughout the evening. Members of Alpha Phi Omega, serving as hosts, and of Sophomore Council will be on the buses to assist other guests.

Guests, besides new students, will include deans and their wives, officers of the FSU Student Government, residence counselors, and sorority and fraternity chaperones.

Among those receiving guests at the door will be Dr. Harn P. Day, dean of students, and Mrs. Day; John Martin, president of the Student Government; and Wally Burnham, president of the new University Union Board.

In the garden, decorated by dozens of Japanese lanterns, new students will have an opportunity to meet President and Mrs. Blackwell and the other guests.

University Gallery To Show Modern Spaniards Paintings

An exhibition of Modern Spanish painting by seven contemporary artists will open at the University Gallery at FSU Wednesday.

The public is invited to the opening from 7:30 p.m. to 9 p.m. After Wednesday night's opening, the gallery will be open to the public between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, according to John L. Ureter, new assistant curator of the art gallery.

Organized by Sala Gaspar in Barcelona, the exhibition is being circulated in the United States under auspices of The American Federation of Arts. The Florida State Exhibition will remain up through Oct. 6.

The seven artists represented in the 46 paintings in the exhibition demonstrate the diversity of what is known as the Barcelona School.

Club Officers Meet

There will be an organizational club meeting at 8 p.m. today in the main auditorium of Longmire. All presidents and officers should attend the meeting.

Fall Candidates File

All prospective fall candidates must file a declaration of candidacy with Commissioner of Elections, John Campbell in 210 Longmire before Tuesday.

Work of two of the artists, Tapies and Juan Tharrats, both leading figures in Spanish art has made the school known as "abstract." Villacous and Claret are also abstract painters. Their paintings have been described as "pure geometry."

But Barcelona art also includes figurative works such as those of painter Antoni Clave and the thin waded. Carefully drawn paintings of Monserrat Gudiol, youngest member of the group. Today also works in figurative terms.

Titles in the exhibition include "Mannequins," "Watermelon," "Fishes" by Claret; "Girl With a Broom," "The Flances," and "Prayers" by Gudiol; "Impasse 3-4," "Old Wood," and "Sign and Matter 3-4" by Tapies; "Leo N," "Caducities II," and "The Rising Sea" by Tharrats; "Mill," "The Fountain," and "Hurborn" by Villacous; "series by Villacous;" and "Painting" series by Claret.

J. Anna, director of the Barcelona Museum of Arts, says of these seven painters that "each one of them has a perfectly defined personality constantly developing, and it is this individualism and passion in their work and individual investigation that give us the best and most positive feature of our artists, as a permanent token of faith in the personal effort."

Tally Ho Needs Help

Staff members for the 1965 Tally Ho are needed. Applications are available in Room 403 Longmire weekdays after noon from 1 to 3 p.m.

Previous yearbook experience is not needed as a training workshop has been scheduled.

A staff meeting will be at 4 p.m. Tuesday in Longmire Auditorium.

Bats Cause Serious Epidemic

The bat population of the Bolivian village of San Joaquin is at least 25 times the human population, which was doormatted by a serious epidemic of Bolivian hemorrhagic fever beginning in 1962.

A FSU biologist, recently returned from the village, has been trying to determine whether or not the bats are involved in transmission of the disease.

In the course of his two months' work in the village in the grassy tropical lowlands 50 miles south of the Brazilian border, Dr. Tyson and six assistants captured 5,000 bats, banded 3300 of them and recaptured 600 of the banded bats one or more times.

He took blood samples from 1000 bats and collected specimens of their external parasites. The blood samples are being analyzed in the Canal Zone by the Middle American Research Unit, while Tyson works on the bat population portion of the study at FSU.

Tyson hopes to have information that will be of importance in determining the probable rate of spread of Bolivian hemorrhagic fever, which in the town of bats proved to be a reservoir of the arthropod borne (arbo) virus which causes the disease.

When Tyson set out from FSU in January his intention was a different project under a grant from the Smithsonian Institution and Sigma Xi—a study of the attitudes and distribution of bats in Western Panama.

He and another FSU biologist, Frank Chapman packed their bat research gear in a jeep in Panama City and started for the mountains 300 miles away in Jan. 9, the day right after the quake in Panama City after the "flag raising" incident. They had to stop to take a picture a ten foot high termite mound near San Joaquin, the brother of the president of Panama stopped and warned them of the riots. Given no place except to the docks, they hijacked a staff and headed out to the shipping lane five miles if the Agudulce shore.

The Dutch captain of an American ship took them aboard.

Back in the Canal Zone they learned that the Middle American Research Unit in Balboa (the unit is one of the National Institutes of Health Units) was looking for someone to make the Bolivian bat study, Chapman returned to the states but Tyson traveled to La Paz, Bolivia, and then to San Joaquin.

When Tyson arrived at the village its population of some 3000 in 1962 had been reduced to 1600 people. Several hundred had died of Bolivian Hemorrhagic Fever and hundreds more fled the village.

Working closely with a medical team, Tyson went into all of the mud brick houses of the villagers. In 100 houses he found a range of from 10 to 2700 bats living in the trusses, roofs of palm, grass, hatch or ceramic tile.

Villagers were unconcerned about them. He found 31 species of bats and caught two kinds of vampire bats, a kind of bat that lives on blood alone.

Fine black mesh nets called Japanese mist nets were set up, two at each of the houses in the afternoon. Bats were collected from sundown about 10 p.m. each night.

Nets were also set in the streets and collections made from 24 village streets, and were then set up from time to time in the forest and brush areas near the town.

Bats were taken from the nets with gloved hand, caged and brought to the laboratory, where blood samples were taken from some. Catching a bat is like catching a wildcat with wings and "the bites just as hard," Tyson said.

A new disease which causes high fever and hemorrhaging of the mucous membranes, this particular hemorrhagic fever first occurred in epidemic form in 1960 in the settlement of Orabayaya in northern Bolivia. It was thought to be a form of typhus but when patients failed to respond to treatment, the Bolivian government requested aid from the United States Public Health Service.

The Middle American Research Unit was given responsibility for cooperative study of the epidemic and Dr. Ronald B. Mackintosh, a hematologist, was sent to Bolivia. Since Orabayaya had been at the temporary hospital in the northern town of Magdalena which the region was infested with bats "by the thousands."

After the abandonment of Orabayaya the disease died out, but in 1962 it broke out in epidemic form in San Joaquin, 40 miles away to the west. A team of specialists from MARU succeeded in July, 1962, in isolating a new virus related to the hemorrhagic fever of Argentina.

Since the symptoms in humans suggested it may be one of the arbovirus (fleas, ticks, mites or mosquitoes) borne viruses, investigation has been directed toward finding possible carrier.

Because of the abundance of species in the village, Dr. Mackintosh, virologist-ecologist, was instrumental in initiating the study to determine the role of bats in the epidemic.

Tyson, who is completing the data for his doctoral dissertation under the direction of Dr. Ralph W. Verney of the FSU Department of Biology Sciences, is a veteran of a number of scientific expeditions. He traveled into Canada and Alaska and he plans another trip to Panama soon to complete another study he began two years ago.

In 1960 he made a study of differences between Atlantic and Pacific species of raccoons in order to classify the varieties living between the Appalachians and Andes rivers.

In 1961, he and another doctoral student, Horace Loftin, went to Panama, where Tyson studied the mammals in the area while Loftin studied the fresh water fish life. Loftin also taught biology and English, and served services personnel as part of the Bootstrap program.

Tyson received his bachelor's degree from Duke University and his master's degree here. He worked for one year with the Florida State Board of Health and eight for the Florida Game and Fresh Water Commission.

Many Honors, Awards Won By Air Force ROTC Graduates

A number of awards and honors were chalked up this past year by FSU's Air Force ROTC which graduated and commissioned 56 Second Lieutenants in the United States Air Force.

This number was exceeded by only four of the nation's 186 colleges and universities which participate in the AFROTC program, according to Colonel Preston B. Hardy, professor of air science at FSU.

"Considerable encouragement at commissioning of new officers will continue at a high level is offered by statistics which show a record high of 99 juniors enrolled in the AFROTC Advanced Course for the fall," Col. Hardy said.

Beginning this trimester, AFROTC joins the University's Honors Program and will offer honors work in Air Science to advanced cadets with outstanding records of academic achievement.

"For the first time in more than 10 years, the basic ROTC courses at FSU are on a voluntary basis," Hardy reported.

Special recognition went to a number of individual cadets during the past academic year. Eight senior cadets were designated as distinguished Military Graduates, selected by the United States Air Force. Richard W. Kilgus, son of Dr. Hermann Kilgus, Jr., Foster; Gene A. Kent; George C. Shoemaker, Jr.; Jack L. Winkler; Simeon C. Sparks; and Edwin E. Powell, Jr.

Other graduates who received recognition include Lieutenants Daniel W. Lintwiler, Jr. and John A. Carnaphe, Lt. Lintwiler, son of Dr. W. Lintwiler, Jr., was selected as the outstanding AFROTC States during the year. His entry on active duty in the Air Force has been delayed until he completes work on a master's degree in mathematics at FSU.

Lt. Carnaphe was selected one of the 50 top engineering and scientific graduates from throughout the country. He has entered the Air Force and will be assigned to further graduate study in electrical engineering. A number of FSU cadets won unusual recognition for fine performance in Summer Training Units which conduct special programs of military training for AFROTC cadets at selected active Air Force bases.

In competition with a large number of cadets from 35 institutions throughout the South, Cadet J. D. Pichard, one of the FSU circus aerobics, won the AFROTC Commandant's award as the Outstanding Cadet at Robins Air Force Base, Ga. Cadets Jerry G. Know and Cecil Ross Winter were honored as outstanding athletes in their Summer Training Units at Robins Air Force Base (first session) and Shaw Air Force Base respectively. Cadet James D. G. Perry was runner-up in the Robins AFB (second session). Additionally, 30 rising senior cadets distinguished themselves in summer training and were recommended for award of regular commissions.

Recognition of a different type was accorded to the detachment in general and to the Cadet Information Services staff in particular which for the second consecutive year won the A.F. Phillips Achievement Award in the major university category. That award is presented annually by the A. F. Phillips Company of Orlando to the student group submitting the best presentation of university graduate activities.

All honors did not go to the cadets. The feminine auxiliary, the FSU ROTC, received many prizes for its contribution to a number of entertainment, social, and service activities. The FSU ROTC, an area command at Robins Air Force Base, Ga., and later FSU was selected as Southeastern Area's Junior Flight Headquarters for the forthcoming academic year.

Female Labor Pool Untapped

Do faculty and administrator workers constitute a labor source for needy employers in the Tallahassee area?

To answer this question a list of graduate students enrolled in Dr. Harvey Tschirp's Human Factors in Administration seminar, recently sent questionnaires to the spouses of enrolled FSU faculty members and administrators.

The survey results would indicate that the female labor pool does, in fact exist and that it offers a variety of skills, depth in education and experience, and both full-time and part-time work aspirants.

Of the 143 replies to the questionnaires 150 wives indicated their willingness to work (40 for these 30 hours a week or more).

Some 228 occupational interests were mentioned by respondents with teaching, secretarial employment, and general office work most frequently listed, less common skills uncovered in the sample included woodcutting, data processing, textile chemistry, Japanese literature, volume work, printing, general agriculture, and massage.

That faculty and administrative wives would bring experience and versatility to prospective employers is indicated by the 50 respondents who indicated previous employment in at least two different occupations and the 17 who indicated three or more occupations.

Other interesting facts revealed by the study of interest to employers were: (1) Out of the 346 responses to an age-group question, the largest number (43.3%) is between 31 and 40 years of age and one out of three of these (33.3%) expressed a desire for part-time or full-time work if such is available; (2) Life backgrounds of the respondents are considerably higher than the average population.

All finished high school and 85% are college graduates. Of the latter group, 10% have master degrees and 10% have earned 40 or more credit hours. A questionnaire data (2) indicated that 10% of the respondents had been punched into IBM cards to provide a ready classification of job seekers by type of work desired, full-time working hours, recent employment status, age-group, education level, major field of study, and special employability skills.

Sight - Saving Campaign Set

The annual September "Sight-Saving Month" campaign of the Florida Society for the Prevention of Blindness has planned a full-scale drive in both public education and fundraising. It was announced today by General George D. Pence of the Florida Society, sight saving campaign chairman.

A total of $30,000 has been set for the Florida Fundraising appeal. Students throughout the state have been urged to aid in the drive to prevent blindness, through contributions and eye safety.

Theme for the month in Florida is "Your Eyes are Windows on the World."

Conference Director Appointed

The appointment of Charles O. Jones as director of conferences at FSU was announced today.

As director of conferences, Jones will help plan and conduct conferences, short courses, workshops and other such events held on campus.

Jones, 43, is a native of Birmingham. He served successively as assistant director of the University of Alabama Center at Birmingham, from 1949 to 1956; director of the University of Alabama Center at Dothan, 1956-63; and director of the University of Alabama Center at Montgomery, in 1963.

In World War II he was a field artillery officer, serving in the Army from 1942 to 1946. In 1948-49 he was an instructor in history at Culver-Stockton College.

Jones received his A. B. degree from Birmingham-Southern College in 1941 and his M.A. from George Peabody College for Teachers in 1942. He has studied subsequently at Vanderbilt University and FSU, where he completed his course work for a doctorate.

He has participated extensively in civic, religious, welfare and other organizational activities at Birmingham, Dothan and Ozark, Ala. In addition to planning conferences, Jones will be responsible for special events, which will include assigning space for special events and issuing the weekly calendar of events.

THE NEW UNION POOL

... will be used by the Seminole tankmen this year for practices and meets, taking the swimming team out of the women's gym. This pool will give the Tribe one of the finest competition tanks in the South.

Union Pool Claimed Finest By Smith

"You can't find anything finer than what we have here in this New Union Pool," said Assistant Swimming Coach Dale Smith today. Smith said that although the pool's outdoors the weather should't bother practice sessions because of the pool's heating system. He went on to say that the fact that the tank is outside actually helps the team spirit.

At this time the team only uses the pool for an hour a day so that students may have as much time as possible to use the pool. The swimmers will use the pool full time October 1.

In December the pool will see competitive action as the tankmen will have an intra-squad meet.

Smith said that the new tank is built so that it can accommodate practically any kind of swim meet. It is 25 yards wide, the normal Inter-Collegiate racing distance, and 50 meters long, the usual AAU distance. The pool also features a one and three meter diving board, as contrasted to the Montgomery pool which had the one meter board only. There is also a diving tower for platform diving.

As training aids the tank is equipped with under water observation windows in the jutting rectangle near the tower.

An underwater communication system is also being planned so that coaches may give instructions to the swimmers while in the water.

"WRA is looking forward to an increase in participation with the new facilities now offered and the new equipment to be used," she said. Volleyball and basketball will be played on the newly re-constructed tennis courts. Softball will be played on the new field, and swimming in the new union pool in the third sports season.

Bowlers will enjoy the game in the Crenshaw Bowling Alleys during the second season.

"The only requirement for participating in your intramural program is to be a fun-loving co-ed who enjoys a good time," said Hardison. All sports seasons are preceded by practice sessions. All winners in team and individual sports received trophies at the end of the season.

Sailers Race Sunday

Elimination races for the FSU Sailing Team will take place Sunday 12:00 noon, at the Reservation. All interested skippers and crews are invited. For information call Herb Elphick, 716 Keilum.

Frosh Footballers Have Size And OK Speed Says Proctor

"Too early to tell," said freshman football coach, Bill Proctor in looking over the 39 member freshman squad. "We have good size and are a little faster than we really expected," he said.

The team has been working out since August 24 and in spite of the heat "...the morale and the spirit of the team has been good and all the boys appear in great shape," stated Proctor.

"We have had no really serious injuries to this date to hamper the team's progress," he said.

In appraising the team Proctor said that they have a good passing attack and a great kicking game. These may be the keys to a great year for the frosh.

While most of the men on the team are Florida recruits, Proctor has moved into Coach Bill Peterson's home territory and brought in players from Ohio.

The freshman schedule calls for games with the University of Miami, Florida and Southern Mississippi in the regular season.

Proctor said that he was trying to schedule one game to help break up the schedule, but so far has been unsuccessful.

The frosh will also play one game against the FSU red shirted team on Sept. 13.

Scout Report

Miami Minus Gus And Mira

BY JOHN MADREY
Flambeau Sports Writer

There will be a pair of very significant lines missing Sept. 19 when the Miami Hurricanes take the Orange Bowl turf against the FSU Seminoles.

The Hurricanes will be minus two leaders, head coach Andy Gustafson and All-American quarterback George Mira.

Charley Tate, who served his coaching apprenticeship at Miami High, takes over for athletic director Gus and he will no doubt trod a rocky path in his first campaign. Back are 17 lettermen off a dismal 3-7 squad but gone is Mira, who is the equivalent of a whole barnful of monogram winners.

Groomed as a replacement is sophomore pitcher, Bob Ellettkoff, the brother of FSU's Fred, the light-yellow flankerback. If Ellettkoff can't shoulder the load, junior college transfer Rick Swan will probably handle the controls.

While quarterback may be a sore spot, the Hurricanes boast a classy backfield punch in the persons of Junior blitzers Russell Smith and Pete Banaszak.

The only detriment, however, may be that both are susceptible to injury. Banaszak has repeatedly had trouble with his ankle while Smith is always hobbling.

Ends Fred Brown and Ed Weisacosky are capable targets but after them the cupboard is bare.

The interior line is green with seniors Harry Fersch (227) and Bruce Brinkos (210) the anchor men, juniors Ed Kraszewski, Frank Beck and Norm Blanchard figure to occupy the other tackle, guard and center spots respectively.

Tate not only faces a mountain of headaches as far as his own personnel is concerned but the reputation could also furnish a dismal less nights.

Supposedly, the schedule grows weaker as the year progresses with Indians, Detroit, Tulane, Boston College and Vanderbilt rated as better company for Tate's rebuilding warriors.

Maybe so, but Indiana lost only regulars and returns Big Ten running leader Tom Nowatske, Detroit sports a 230-pound line, Tulane returns 26 lettermen, and Boston College will counter with 10 of its year's starting linemen.

Tate was dealt a deadly combination right after he took the reins last spring when six of his gridiron boys were banished for disciplinary reasons.

And that not being enough, freshman Jerry Danner were also in classroom difficulties. Both went down with the 6-6 Danner rule.

possible All-American material. The flashy Ellettkoff could be a deciding factor in Tate's inability to get the 'Canes on the winning track. The left-handed display of class with the football in his arm but the feasibility of running Tate's novice "Flip" offense remains to be seen.

SP Sponsors Election Workshop

By CAROLYN CHRISTENSEN
Flambeau Staff Writer

For the first time in FSU's political history, a Student Party workshop in politics will organize and inform prospective workers in student government before election. Chairman of the Student Party, Al Milton, announced that the workshop will be for all candidates and campaign managers at 8 p.m. tomorrow night in the Longmire Lounge.

Student Party is furnishing the workshop as a service in order to familiarize candidates for student government offices, and all those involved in campaign procedure, with the practical side of FSU campus politics.

John Merting, president of the student body, and also a member of the Student Party, will be on hand to help candidates.

"The workshop is a good idea because it will inform the new students who are interested in student politics and Student Government as to how they really function," said Merting.

"Many interested students come to FSU, but they have no idea how to enter into a campaign, and really little understanding of how Student Government operates."

"The workshop will furnish them with practical information as to campaign posters, printing, rules for the campaign, and what jobs and responsibilities the positions in government actually entail," continued Merting.

Jack Cannon, also a member of the Student Party, will attend the workshop along with various cabinet officers, class officer, and members of Student Senate.

"Flambeau" editor Rick Collins will also be on hand. Representatives from Dye Printing Co., Pike's Studio, and Westcott Printing Co. will be present to advise prospective office seekers with their printing and photographic needs during the campaign.

Helpful information on the printing and distribution of campaign literature, efficient canvassing, and past campaign ideas and practices will be included in the short program that has been planned.

John Merting suggested that the program "will inform our candidates as to the principles, programs, and practices of the Student Party itself."

The University is extremely proud of the heritage of its Student Government," stated Merting in an address earlier this fall, "and it has many times been rated first in the South and Midwest.

"However, Merting continued, "it is not possible to live in the past and stand on the achievements of those who have preceded us. It is the responsibility of each one of us to find our particular place in Student Government, whether it be holding office, serving on committees, or expressing opinions through the ballot box."

Merting described Student Government as "a laboratory in citizenship which deals with the most important and precious of all commodities, human life and personalities."

A short reception will follow the workshop, and the meeting. Candidates will be given an opportunity during this reception to meet other Student Party candidates and Student Government leaders who discuss their campaign and future plans.

Refreshments will be served. Chairman Milton explained that by making it possible for a group such as the workshop session to meet together not only do the inexperienced gain helpful practical knowledge of student politics, but they also can add fresh and vigorous ideas to the Student Party and to campus politics as a whole.

The workshop will be an informal beginning of the Student Party's 13th year of active political participation in FSU Student Government. During this period the organization has furnished 11 presidents for FSU's student body.

Men's Vice-President Jack Cannon, who presides over Men's Senate and serves as the leader and advisor of the men in Student Senate, stated that he is anxious to get acquainted with the new students who are interested in working with the Student Party and Student Government.

"It will be an exchange between the old as experience, and the new as enthusiasm," said Cannon.

Drama Theatre Tryouts Begin

"Participation in the University Theatre is open to all University students who are seriously interested in drama and are willing to work," said Dr. Arthur Dorlag today.

The season's first try-outs will be in Conradt theatre, History Bldg. at 7 tonight and tomorrow night. At this meeting general information about University Theatre, its activities and plans, will be given, the permanent staff will be introduced, and try-outs for the casting of "Man For All Seasons" will be held. Although scripts had not arrived last Thursday, they are expected to be available this afternoon to students in room 115 History. There are 14 major speaking parts and several supporting roles. Only three are women.

Times Changed

Due to a delay in the moving date in the Union Activities, Senior and Greek activities scheduled for this week will be taken in Room 403, Longmire.

Picture appointments beginning next week will be taken in the University Union Activities Building, room 334, as originally scheduled.

Anyone who has not signed up to have their pictures taken may come by the "Tally Ho" office in 403 Longmire and sign up for picture appointments.

The 1965 "Tally Ho" may be ordered at this time in the Publications Business Manager's Office, room 415 Longmire.

PETE FOUNTAIN'S BAND will be the featured musical entertainment for Homecoming, Sept. 19.

Queen Filing Deadline Nears; Pete Fountain Plays At Ball

The deadline for filing nominations for 1964 Homecoming Queen is now at 5 p.m.

Students will vote on Sept. 19, and narrow the list of Queen candidates to a Homecoming Court five. On Oct. 2, they will select Homecoming Queen from this list.

Pete Fountain's and three other big bands have been engaged for the dances which will climax the two days of Homecoming, Oct. 9-10. Plans for the dances and for the other events during the '64 Homecoming celebrations were discussed

Film Committee Needs Recruits

The newly formed University Union Film Committee is in the process of recruiting members for the coming school year.

Among the already popular campus movie series, the committee will also be responsible for new series which will be initiated at intervals in the new Moore Theatre within the University Union Complex.

It will be a weekly series devoted to the three in classic cinema; other will be a series of outstanding children's films. Those interested in serving on this committee are urged to contact Karl Ehr, FSU extension 3346, or the Union Program Director, room 315, University Union, extension 2231, 2237.

Wednesday night at the initial fall meeting of the Homecoming Committee.

Dr. William W. Rogers of the History Dept. is serving as general chairman, Judy O'Connell and Herb Bruce are the student chairmen of the Committee.

Pete Fountain and the Chaotics will occupy two stages in Tully Gym and will play alternately for the Friday night dance, from 9:30 p.m. until 1 a.m. (with late permission for women students). The dance will be semi-formal and tickets will be $3 per couple. Dancing will get underway immediately following the Pow Wow.

Fountain, a jazz clarinetist from The French Quarter Inn on Bourbon Street, is known as "Mr. New Orleans."

The Saturday night dance, last event of Homecoming, will be in the University Union from 8 p.m. to midnight.

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS

Danny Danklefs

Kilenyi Lends Prestige To FSU

(Danny Danklefs is a junior FSU student from Venice, Fla. His far-reaching interest in music and the other arts stems in part from a longstanding association with the Ringling Bros. Museum in Sarasota and participation in the other-arts events in that area. The breadth and depth of his musical comprehension has been much commended upon by his fraternity brothers. We offer his opinions on the arts at FSU for your enjoyment.)

FSU should be proud to have one of America's greatest keyboard artists on the faculty of our School of Music. Dr. Edward Kilenyi is well known by classical music lovers in both the U.S. and in Europe.

The beginning of this, his 14th year on our faculty, is also a continuance of the peerless standards upheld by FSU's School of Music.

Kilenyi began his studies at the age of 11 under Ernst von Dohnanyi, the Hungarian composer-pianist and a few years later Kilenyi began to concentrate with this noted musician.

The young Kilenyi's success was the talk of the musical world.

During several seasons of brilliant concert tours, he played with Europe's most prominent conductors. He is renowned for his recordings of Chopin, Liszt, and Debussy, made for Remington and Columbia recording companies.

Sir Thomas Beecham, upon hearing him play in 1935, expressed his enthusiasm by saying, "That's the way of the future, the new piano!" In 1936, at the French-Hungarian concert commemorating the 50th anniversary of Liszt's death, Faderewski heard him play and remarked that the young Kilenyi reminded him of his own youth.

When he made his debut in his native U.S., the American public immediately accepted Kilenyi as one of our outstanding pianists. He met Dohnanyi, his old teacher, in New York, and joined the FSU faculty four years later than Dohnanyi in 1933.

Since then, he has specialized in the Beethoven sonatas, and has attracted many music students who have the ambition to study under a famous pianist.

His play and appearance is noble and distinguished, the way you might imagine a great concert pianist would look. He uses perfect, soft-spoken English and has a friendly, mild manner.

His personality and vast knowledge make him an interesting conversationalist. However, some of his students are afraid of him because he is a perfectionist and sternly demands the best from his pupils. Kilenyi says that the FSU School of Music is nationally, "just as good as any in important fields" and is "the undisputed" leader of the South.

When asked about student participation in musical functions, Kilenyi stated, "there are generally enough students at the concerts but there is 'always good participation' when concerts have been well publicized.

Kilenyi believes that American youth is "rather oblivious" to music because of social prejudice "they are afraid to enjoy good music."

His presence on our faculty has enhanced the prestige of FSU and has helped build the reputation of the School of Music now enjoys.

Auto Deaths Surpass Combined War Fatalities

(This report on the U.S. traffic safety record for 1963 was recently received by the "Flambeau". It was prepared by the Public Information Department of The Travelers Insurance Companies, Hartford, Conn.)

Of all the grim records of violence and death down through mankind's long history, perhaps the strangest and most tragic is the story of the automobile and its annual army of victims.

Since the first horseless carriage chugged noisily down cobblestone streets, more than 60,000,000 Americans—killed, crippled and maimed—have inscribed their names on what has been aptly referred to as "the dishonor roll." By whatever name, the yearly casualty count continues its shameful, senseless growth.

Last year was no exception. In fact 1963 claimed the dubious distinction of being the worst single year in the history of highway safety. During its twelve months, automobile accidents were responsible for more deaths than the U.S. armed forces suffered in the entire Korean War.

According to an authoritative report by The Travelers Insurance Companies, the nation's traffic death toll surged to an all-time high as a total of 42,700 men, women and children died on our streets and highways. The annual country-wide survey based on information provided by state motor vehicle departments revealed that the 1963 carnage topped the figure of nearly 40,000 persons killed in 1941—a record high which stood for twenty years—and even surpassed the number of 40,500 deaths established in 1962.

Incredibly, more persons have died on the highways than on our nation's battlefields; more have been injured in auto accidents than in all the world's wars combined.

This roll call of highway fatalities is no secret document hidden from the public gaze. In newspapers and bulletins, legal and police reports, in courtrooms and judges' chambers, the names on the dishonor roll and their innocent victims are made known to all. And not the names alone, but the catalogue of their deeds; driving while drunk, speeding, violating the rules of the road, failure to dim lights driving on the wrong side of the road, etc.

These are a few of their offenses. In an endless roll call the names are read, and the judgments given. Then, all too often, the dishonored heedlessly proceed to emblazon their names again on the shameful record.

What is the solution to this national disgrace? Obviously, no one has found it to date. Statistics, pledges and slogans have seemingly had little effect on the American public. None of these have brought about lasting improvement in any segment of the basic problem, none of them have sparked that deep, serious personal commitment to greater care behind the wheel which is necessary if we are to reduce the spreading epidemic of traffic slaughter.

When will we succeed in bringing the scourge of needless casualties under some degree of control? Frankly, no one really knows the complete answer. . .

Perhaps no significant improvement can be expected until the great majority of us learn to look upon the problem as a personal challenge rather than one which is primarily up to the other fellow.

Campus Drivers Unite!

I understand that the registration fee is expected to decrease next year. The difference is to be paid for with the income from the new parking lot. If you haven't noticed, the Security and Law Enforcement officials have declared parking spaces fair game for requisitioning all your space change.

FLAMBEAU FORUM

Dubious About Other Methods

To the Editor:

I wonder what "other methods" our Chensult is referring to, in his recent letter to the "Flambeau," which will bring the "flame" closer to full realization of his "progressive goals." "Haven't many 'other methods' already been tried without much success?"

Concerning parties who may be involved, setting themselves up as judges of whether laws should be upheld or broken, the analogy that "a burglar may personally declare burglary laws immoral because they prevent him from 'earning' his living" is not valid.

A burglar voluntarily chooses to be a burglar, but a person has no choice as to which race he will be born into. It should be no surprise that many people are disgusted with many present-day laws, particularly those which are contrary to rights guaranteed to every citizen by the Constitution.

I cannot understand how a person would defend segregation laws as "laws passed for the good of society." Neither could those who resist or attack a law enforcement officer when police brutality is involved be considered to "abandon" all right to protection by the law.

Richard Panto

limit on the meters is one hour, sixty minutes. Well, that's fine because classes are only fifty-five minutes long. The only real problem is getting to class and back to the meter.

Ever tried it? It's like trying to walk from Kellum Hall to Westcott in five minutes with two broken legs on your feet.

Now with this sixty minutes leeway, it is within the realm of chance to just barely sneak under the wire by thirty or four minutes except for a small problem. They check the meters about five minutes before class is on. With odds like that even a professional gambler wouldn't try it.

It's only reasonable to give in to the fact that it will cost you sixty cents a day to park on campus. If however you don't donate the first time for an hour of parking privileges it will only be a nominal fifty cents.

To be fair about it, if that's within the realm of feasibility, why not check the meters between classes if the hour meters are going to be used? If not, why not give students why not hand out five or ten parking tickets at registration and let the driver pay them at his own discretion?

Another possibility is to charge a flat fee for parking penalties per trimester. At any rate, there ought to be IBM cards or something to alleviate the virtuous guardians of the pen and ticket pad the terrible hand exercise.

Another resolution left is to park in the parking districts and take a subway or helicopter to class. At the present rates they are going to be able to install two subways.

It would be a lot more enjoyable to pay sixty cents for a helicopter or subway ride than financing somebody through four years of school on a parking ticket scholarship.

Drivers of the campus until I would would like to voice your opinion on the subject drop a note in my mailbox addressed to Security and Law Enforcement office, room two Westcott. They will be most happy to hear from you, but don't expect to get an answer.

Flambeau Jobs

Positions are available for an FSU student—freshman, sophomore, junior, senior or graduate—who wants to work on the "Flambeau" staff. Here is an opportunity to meet the people who make the news. Here is the chance to learn firsthand how a daily newspaper is produced.

Previous experience is useful but by no means necessary. All we want is a person with a lively interest in an unpretentious campus life and what's going on around them, and true willingness to learn.

Wherever your ambitions lie, whether in journalism, writing, editing, columns, becoming editor, or other, has something new which is presently included in the "Flambeau." We will attempt to help fulfill those ambitions.

For those not interested in reporting, yet interested in being around a newspaper, we have secretarial positions.

Soph Green Leads Tribe; Team Plays Through Rain

Nether snow, sleet, hail, nor rain will keep the Seminoles from scrimmaging, as Coach Bill Peterson put his warriors through a full-scale game Saturday.

The game was complete with officials, kickoffs, and penalties, everything but a crowd. Even if some fans had dared to challenge the rain they would have been kept out by Peterson's policy of closed practices. It was the victory against the red-shirts and frosh as Coach Pete tested his team and the rule book. Peterson shuttled his defensive and offensive teams in and out, testing the controversial substitution rule.

Larry Green looked like a mudder as he led the varsity to a 20-0 victory. He scored on runs of 27 and 47 yards. The sophomore half-back also caught a pass and made several other good runs.

The other score for the Tribe came on a 27 yard run by junior full-back Phil Spooner.

Steve Tenst and Ed Pritchett shared the quarterbacking duties. Tenst played the second and third quarters and Pritchett the first and fourth. Tenst had a perfect afternoon passing, hitting five for five. Pritchett connected on six out of eight.

In appraising the practice Peterson said, "It's hard to tell just how good you are and how quick you are in this kind of situation."

The Seminoles have just one more week before they meet the Miami Hurricanes in the Orange Bowl, next Saturday night.

RED DAWSON AND FRED BILETNIKOFF

...are the 1966 Seminole football co-captains. Dawson is a senior from Valdosta, Georgia. The big (6-3 and 220 pounds) end has lettered twice, as a defensive end in his sophomore year and last year as an offensive end. Dawson anchored his position as offensive end last year by catching 19 passes for 231 yards. Teaming with Biletnikoff, he should give FSU one of the best passing offenses in the South. Biletnikoff, a 6-1 186 pound senior from Erie, Pa., is also a two year veteran. He was the Seminole's chief offensive threat through the last year. He caught 24 passes for 358 yards and four touchdowns. Biletnikoff's career record: 30 completions for 476 yards and five touchdowns.

'Susannah' Chosen For Met Production

"Susannah," the opera by Carlisle Floyd of FSU's School of Music, has been selected by the newly formed Metropolitan National Opera Company as one of four operas to be presented in its initial season.

Co-sponsored by the Metropolitan Opera and the Kennedy Cultural Foundation, the Company's first year of operation is scheduled to begin in September, 1965.

Comprised entirely of young American singers, the organization will have a 34-week season, its tour will cover most of the United States, with bookings including the recently-completed New York State Theater in New York City's Lincoln Center.

Directors and designers for the four productions will be distinguished names from the musical and theatrical worlds. Assigned to stage the Floyd opera is Alan Schneider, director of the Broadway award-winning play, "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" Creating the sets will be veteran Broadway designer David Hays.

Carlisle Floyd's first full-length opera, "Susannah," was first produced on campus in 1955. Taken to

New York in 1956, it won the New York Music Critics Circle Award for the best opera of the year.

Student Government Retreat Announced

The Student Government Retreat will occur Oct. 16 and 17. Details of the retreat were discussed in an interview with John Merting.

President of the FSU Student Government, Bob Rackleff, Secretary of Intercollegiate and Public Affairs, and Sharon Cunningham, Director of the Student Government Retreat. All interested (or curious) students especially freshmen and transfer students are encouraged to participate.

There will be smaller discussions, in addition to the panel discussions, so that each student will have a chance to voice his criticisms or suggestions.

In addition to FSU students and government leaders, there will be representatives from nearly all Florida Junior Colleges and Universities as well as from Junior Colleges in Alabama and Georgia.

The retreat is an informal (and they stressed the word informal) gathering of students for discussion of the problems facing student governments, on both the local and regional levels. In this capacity, the retreat, which is the only known one of its kind, serves a dual purpose.

It improves the FSU Student Government and it improves the student governments of other colleges and universities.

The keynote speaker, Jim Vickrey, was the Student Body President at Auburn University and is now a graduate student in political science.

Attendance is usually only three to four hundred with 40 to 50 of those coming from other colleges and universities.

Registration for the retreat will be about a week before the event itself. The fee (about $2.50) will cover lodging and meals. Although students may stay overnight on the reservation, they may, as many do, return to the campus overnight and return to the reservation early Sat.

Dora Blows Out Classes, Stops 'Flambeau' Presses

BY CATHY KNUTSON
Flambeau Staff Writer

Hurricane Dora could well be dubbed the "Grade Schedule Upsetter"—for that's exactly the effect she gave to FSU's this past Thursday.

All classes after 1 p.m. and 2:40 p.m. were cancelled. The university also closed down offices at 3 p.m.

The traditional President's Reception for freshmen and transfer students, arranged for Friday evening was postponed.

Weather conditions prevented the "Florida Flambeau" from going to press Friday. This was the first edition ever cancelled.

Around the building and puffing around by Dora, FSU students excitedly prepared for the big 'cane. Plate glass windows were taped to prevent shattering; local drug stores were stamped for food, candles, and other survival precautions.

Women's dorms were closed at 8 p.m. but inside, the residents stood in long lines by the phone booth, waiting to call home to anxious parents.

But Tallahassee proved unacceptably to the wicked winds of this wild lady. Dora is currently whipping her way up the Carolina coast in a northeasterly movement. The storm seems to be losing some of her savage force after battering Florida and Georgia with her mighty winds.

The Association for Childhood Education will conduct an organizational meeting weekdays from 8:10 to 11:45 a.m. and 1:15 to 4 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge of the Education Bldg.

The meeting is open to all interested students.

Individual To Be Emphasized In This Year's SG: Merting

By STEVE C. PRENTICE

The FSU student government programs will emphasize the role of the student as an individual during the 1964-65 school year, according to John Merting, student body president.

"We want the students here to feel that they are looked upon as more than just 12,000 warm bodies," Merting said in a recent interview.

"Student governments in the past have promoted some great programs, but have not individually effected the students. I can think of five programs we have this year that will do this," he continued.

"An expansion of coverage in the Student Insurance Program and the Student Government Host Bureau are two of these," Merting said.

The Student Insurance Program is handled by student government and covers most phases of accident insurance at a rate of $15 per year. The Host Bureau affords prospective students and professors and interested citizens a complete campus tour and information source upon request.

In addition, students on campus this year will be able to participate in an evaluation of the faculty.

"We are working with the psychology department on the method of evaluation of FSU's professors in order to make it as valid as possible," Merting said.

Students will be asked to "grade" their professors on a one to 10 point scale, from poor to excellent, on questions of how fair tests are and whether they stimulate interest in further investigation of a subject. The evaluation will include seven or more such questions.

"The realization, by the student government, of the need to keep faculty improvements in step with easily seen physical improvements on a growing campus prompted the idea for the student evaluation," Merting added.

Results of the study will be turned over to the administration so they may compare their own findings with those expressed by the student body, according to Merting.

Professors may also want to refer to the results for possible self-improvement, he concluded.

Biletnikoff, Dawson Chosen; "Great Honor" Say Captains

The countdown has begun. In just a matter of days the Garnet and Gold gets down to the business at hand—football, and namely Miami's Hurricanes, 1964's question mark team.

The last of the preliminaries were swept aside last week with the announcement of FSU Co-Captains at the annual Seminole Booster Banquet.

'Cane Tickets At Tully For Students; Thigpen

Claude Thigpen, Head of the Athletic Ticket Office, said that students may pick up tickets to the Miami game in the Tully Gym ticket office this week.

The tickets, regularly priced at $5.00, are available to students for $1.00 and the presentation of their LD card.

All student tickets for out of town games will be sold only at the Tully Ticket office. Sales will start the Monday preceding a game. Students must present LD cards at the gate as well as tickets.

Thigpen also said that ticket sales for FSU are up nearly 100% over last year. He said that sales will probably exceed the 100% increase as the season progresses.

Homecoming tickets are selling well, he said, and tickets for the Florida game are almost filled. FSU students may attend home games by presenting their LD card at the gate as they enter Campbell Stadium.

Campbell Stadium will be able to handle larger crowds this year since its seating capacity has been increased by 15,000 to 40,000.

Over 700 boosters, students, and fans packed the ballroom in the new University Union complex and eagerly devoured the luncheon fare and words of hope on the '64 Seminoles.

Elected by teammates to lead the squad were two All-American candidates, and Red Dawson and flanker back Fred Biletnikoff.

Biletnikoff is a six foot one senior who came to FSU from Erie, Pennsylvania. Fans will remember his show-stealing performance in the Seminoles opener last year. He drove Miami defenders batty, scoring all 24 points and returning one pass interception 99 yards for a tally.

Biletnikoff feels that being elected a captain is a "Great Honor." He said "that he likes to have fun like everyone else, but he is going to do all he can to fulfill the responsibilities and set a good example for the rest of the team."

Dawson called his election to Seminole Co-Captain, "The biggest honor of my life." The Auburn-haired senior from Valdosta said that FSU could have 30 captains this season with the depth and experience of the team.

Dawson was tapped as a draft choice by the professional Los Angeles Rams in his junior year.

THE MARCHING CHIEFS

... will take the field again this year to carry on their tradition of never losing a half-time show. The Chiefs are under the direction of Robert Braumagel, assisted by Cliff Madsen and Charley Carter.

'Chiefs' Will Go To Miami

The FSU Marching Chiefs are preparing for the annual FSU-Miami clash Sept. 19 in the Miami Orange Bowl.

Last year's trip brought a police escort for the Chiefs' exodus from the land of the Miami Hurricanes, and publicity from Miami papers for two weeks after the half-time performance.

Robert T. Braumagel, director of the Marching Chiefs, along with assistant director, Dr. Clifford Madsen, has been putting together new half-time shows.

Charles Carter, assistant director and special arranger for the FSU band, has also been busily composing for the season's shows.

Weeks of conditioning and rehearsal go into each Chief's half-time show, making the FSU band one of the top marching bands in the South.

By coming a week earlier this year than last, the FSU-Miami game has required an extra amount of effort to be ready for the first half-time performance.

The Marching Chiefs leave for Miami Sept. 18. After a short rehearsal Saturday morning on Miami Beach, the Chiefs will be ready to start their famous "Go Cadence," signaling the beginning of another attack by the Seminoles.

Board Plans Union Affair For Saturday Opening Date

Final plans for Student Activities Night, which will be Saturday were discussed at a meeting of the Student Union Program Chairmen yesterday.

Members of the University Union Board will be at the Union booth through the night. These members along with the program chairmen will act as the official hosts and actresses.

Many organizations and student activities will have booths on display from 8 p.m. to 11 p.m.

The booths will be arranged in a semi-circle along the sides of the main ballroom.

The Checkmates will provide music for dancing from 9 p.m. to 11 p.m. Edith Donaldson, soprano, and Jim Haygood, tenor will present selections from popular classical works in the ballroom over the Davis Bldg. The blue coupons for free bowling and coffee given out during registration are good on this night only. Starting at 8 p.m., Alpha Phi Omega will operate a football scoreboard giving all the up to the minute details on the FSU-Miami game. The game will not be broadcast in the ballroom, however. At the other end of the ballroom, WFSU-FM will broadcast a hootenanny.

Registration school dress will be required. Aside from Activities Night, long range plans for the new union were made by the chairmen.

An art exhibit will officially open the new center, the committee of chairmen announced. The enclosed hall connecting the Union with the Davis Bldg. is being equipped as a permanent facility for showing a variety of art works.

Diploma

Students expecting to graduate December 19, 1964, should pay their diploma fee of $5 before the deadline Friday. The diploma fee may be paid in the University Bookstore.

Meet Cancelled

Wayne Minnick has announced that there will be no Faculty Senate meeting this month.

MAX COURTNEY

Flambeau Feature Writer

The University film club will sponsor ten foreign films during trimesters one and two. Admission to these films is restricted to holders of season tickets only.

Tickets may be purchased by any college student or adult by sending a check for three dollars, made to the FSU Film Club, to Mrs. Doris Oglesby, 2917 Ivanhoe Road, Tallahassee.

A limited number of season tickets will also be available at the Westcott Ticket Office through Oct. 4 and at the entrance to Westcott auditorium on the night of the first performance. Some single admissions will be sold after all season patrons have been seated and if the number of season patrons does not exceed 500.

There are five films scheduled for this trimester. The first, "Ashes and Diamonds" is a Polish film recounting the political assassination of a veteran war leader by a young resistance fighter.

This sensitive film points out the moral dilemmas facing young people behind the iron curtain. The 99 minute film will be shown on Sept. 29.

"The Love Game," starring Genevieve Cluny and Jean-Pierre Cassel, is a story about two very young people in Paris—a pretty, rather serious girl and a spoiled featherweight of a swimmer.

In the film the two make love constantly and when they stop to catch a breath, they battle like the children they really are.

Their main concern is the future. The girl wishes the young man to marry her and he sees no reason to modify his already convenient arrangement. "The Love Game" is scheduled for Oct. 6.

On Oct. 20 "Jules and Jim" will be shown in Westcott. The 104 minute film starts from the most scabrous situation there can be—two men and a woman living their whole lifetime together. But thanks to the innocence of the three main characters, their moral integrity, their tenderness and above all their decency, they succeed in showing the purest love possible.

A Japanese film, "The Burmese Harp" will be shown on Nov. 17. Lasting 116 minutes this is a powerful, haunting tale about the war guilt of a soldier in Burma and his hope to return there to bury his countrymen in explanation for all the sins of war.

The final fare is a dramatic Swedish thriller. A strange film concerning a young student systematically tormented by a sadistic teacher and his involvement in a bizarre love triangle with an easy-moraled but mysteriously frightened shogirl. The film lasts 90 minutes and is scheduled for Dec. 1.

All performances are scheduled for Tuesday evenings at 8 in Westcott, which has recently added a completely new system of projection equipment.

BILITA MYERS

"It is important above all else to let students know what's going on in Student Government," stressed John Merting, president of the student body, at the first meeting of the cabinet yesterday.

Merting explained that in recent years students have not been well enough informed of the functions of programs handled by the student government.

During the reports of Cabinet members, it was suggested that government officials wear shirt and tie during office hours as the impression students' and visitors

Praxie mentioned a 15 minute television program to be presented Sunday afternoons which will deal with problems on the university campus.

Cannon Urges Men To Attend

Men's Vice President Jack Cannon asked the governors of the Men's dorms to attend all Men's Senate meetings at Monday's session of Men's Senate.

Grace Johnson and Gene Stearns reported on the Change Machines Committee concerning the Mer Mac contract, and said further discussion of this problem will take place later in the week.

Stearns reported on the progress of the motor scooter shelter which is to go between Salley and Kealum dormitories and behind Smith. Cannon asked all members to wear shirt and tie to both Men's Senate and Student Senate meetings.

Meetings will be called only when necessary, and thus attendance should be 100% each time. As soon as the new Senators have been elected, a list of names and addresses of all members will be made available.

Men's Senate Resolution #1, introduced by Jack Cannon and pertaining to the printing of and adequate supply of campus bus schedules, was passed by unanimous voice vote.

Senate Meets

Student Senate meets today at 8:15 in Longmire Auditorium. Class Senators and Precinct senators who are not residing in the same precinct are required to attend. Men have been requested to wear dress attire.

Home Ec. Drive Begins

The Home Economics membership will begin today. Anyone interested in joining may sign up at tables in the Home Ec. Bldg.

The Hydra

The parking situation at FSU demonstrates, in some perverse respects, a kinship to the behavior of a famous mythological Greek monster, the Hydra. For every vehicle newly registered at FSU, two parking places disappear.

The current ten year plan for the expansion of FSU includes provisions for the elimination of parking on campus altogether. In fact, the roads themselves, except for Woodward St., will eventually be replaced with wide walk ways.

To solve the parking problem ten years hence, FSU is depending upon a number of perimeter parking lots. These, it is hoped, will be built by private investors and presumably will run on a commercial basis. But so far private enterprise apparently does not consider the situation acute enough to warrant capital investment.

We feel that if something is not done in the interim to relieve the frustration of student drivers there will be such a log jam of traffic around FSU that workers attempting to build parking lots will not even be able to get to work themselves.

This year, unless expressly permitted by the Traffic Committee, no graduate or undergraduate may drive or park on weekdays on what has traditionally been considered the heart of the campus. The nearest parking space open (if a driver can find a vacancy) to students with classes in History, Science, Westcott, Psychology, Music, or Language Buildings is the Call-Copeland St. lot, which is to say there is no convenient spot to park at all.

Considered as a whole, the rest of the campus is no better off. There are approximately 7,000 parking spaces located "on" the FSU campus. Some 3,500 of these spaces, or about 50 per cent are located at Doak Campbell Stadium. This is all well and good for students having classes in the bleachers; what about the rest of us?

The point has been made that with about 4,800 vehicles registered so far and a total of 7,000 parking spaces, there is parking space available. Carrying this view to its logical conclusion, there are parking spaces available in downtown Tallahassee, in Quincy, and in Monticello also.

But, simply designating 7,000 parking spaces as "available" does not to us magically transform them into feasibly convenient space; there is still a void.

The Traffic Committee has often made recommendations. After due allowance for bureaucratic mulling and shuffling, they have in time come before the Board of Control. Presumably they are still thinly crying for attention from their third floor filing cabinets, unable to be heard by the BOC due the frustrated noises made by FSU students who can't find parking places nearer their classes.

We realize there are no snap solutions to the FSU parking problem. It will take Herculean efforts to slay this Hydra now. But to most graduate and undergraduate drivers at FSU it is self-evident that some immediate steps ought to be taken. More than a few have suggested converting Landis Green into a parking lot. Why not?

Court Must Rule On Pork Chopping

There has been a seemingly recent hue and cry over legislative re-apportionment. Actually, this is something that has been with us for a long time. It has received an unusual amount of attention lately due to the recent Supreme Court decision on the matter.

The basic problem is, that, in all but two states, the state legislatures are not completely representative of the people on a population basis. In these states the rural legislators dominate and control the legislative bodies even though they represent a minority of the people. In Florida 16% of the population controls the legislature. This controlling group of rural legislators are sometimes derisively called "pork choppers." For quite a while there has been a push to reapportion the state legislatures on an equal population basis. Florida went through the re-apportionment in the last session.

They re-drew some of the districts but that is about as far as they went. Few Florida legislators have the foresight to tackle this problem in a meaningful manner. They are paralyzed in a power struggle, if not involved in one, with the political, in Georgia, to keep windy legislative sessions from running out of time, one of members climbed up and held hands of the clock.

In defense of this system a parallel is often drawn between state and federal legislatures. On closed re-annation however, this analogy does not hold. The Federal Government is composed of states giving up some of their sovereignty to form a union. The U.S. Senate is the compromise for that of sovereignty.

On the state level, however, such sovereignty has never existed. The counties and municipalities were created by the state; municipalities are never created by the state. There is no need for a compromise body in the state legislature.

Because of grass roots pressure the U.S. Congress has been forced to handle the problem. In fact it did nothing until the recent Supreme Court decision. This did the wrong thing. Two types of legislation were introduced specifically to stay the ruling.

One was the Tuck bill, introduced in the House. The bill was buried when it got to Senate. This measure would have denied the Supreme Court jurisdiction in the field of apportionment for the next six years. The other would have allowed the state legislatures to keep the status quo. Due to pressure from hometown legislators the bill was buried in the House. The bill was buried when it got to Senate.

Senator Dirksen (Rep., Ill.) introduced a rider on the floor to the Tuck bill. This amendment would have denied the Supreme Court jurisdiction for two years. After a hot battle last week, this amendment was defeated. It now looks as though the will of the Senate will keep the Tuck bill in limbo. Perhaps now, the Congress has been prevented from seeing the problems presented by this rural influence.

These problems of inequitable representation can be seen in many ways. The main effect has been on the financial health of rural cities. Tax money goes to urban projects rather than transportation improvement, arterial access, and so on. The rural cities are left with rather steep city taxes and have encouraged city dependency upon the Federal Government for financial aid. Why do you suppose the Urban Renewal Act was deemed necessary? Now, it has been suggested that the Supreme Court should not have the power to make this apportionment ruling. Perhaps not. But I am sure if the Supreme Court is going to uphold the right of citizens to fair representation in government who is? The state legislatures are paralyzed to act.

NO President has done anything effective to change an admittedly poor situation.

Up to this time Congress has avoided the issue like a poison. Clearly the Supreme Court is the only recourse left. Let us hope then, that in the future the hue and cry over prompt congressional legislation designed to sweep this vital issue under the rug; but that it prompts resolution to state that the people are more fully represented in their government.

Principles Cost Votes?

Recently I was approached by one of the organizing members of a group believed to be called the Young Citizens for Johnson. After being up in I was informed that A&M asked if I would assist in one of the committees. I had agreed to do so, I was told something that really astounded me, but first a little discussion.

While discussing the committee, a friend of mine, who is a FSU student, came to mind. We met this summer in D. C. where I had learned that he was a LBJ supporter and that he had made contact with the Young Citizens for Johnson group in D. C. He had also attended numerous seminars given for government employed students.

The seminars were given by many eminent administrative leaders such as R. F. K., S. Shriver, et al. In addition to this, he spoke of attending the Demo. Convention. Because of this, there seemed a definite possibility that he would like to work with the FSU democratic group. End of discussion.

Because he belongs to a group of 10 percent of the U.S. citizens who happen to have a darker skin pigment, I jokingly asked if the group would like to be integrated. There was no response. I was already had an organization going. No, he affirmed the member, I mean a FSU student.

Without a moment's hesitation, I was very promptly told that the Young Citizens for Johnson agreed not to integrate because "it would cost votes." This seems to disregard entirely what Johnson said about three frontlines resulting for every backline.

More fundamentally though, the important thing is that it is a hypocritical stand for Johnson/Lyndon and not Paul supporters to take. If votes and not principles are most important, then the votes can go to hell!

I hope that an official spokesman for the Johnson group will take advantage of the medium of the Flambeau and make the group's policy public. If what I have written here proves to be true then perhaps the group should call themselves the Young White Citizens for Johnson.

You Know He's Extreme Right

To the Editor:

Not since "If nominated I will not run if elected I will not serve" has there been a slogan or quotation that has really caught and fired the imagination of the American voting public. However there is currently one that stands in the same class.

IN YOUR HEART YOU KNOW HE'S RIGHT.

That special place reserved for pure, sweet, innocent love and patriotic religious revelation is now the secret knowing place of political intuition. Ah, how nice it is to cast aside centuries of political defining and redefining.

In your heart you know he's right. In your heart you know he's right even if he plays with concepts and ideas like a Madison Avenue trainee. He must no longer stand before you with down in that complicated blood pump of yours you know he's right.

Are you laughing, Alexis de Tossouville and you, Kelly, J. S. Mills; yes, the world laughs, but don't despair! Shortsteared, in fact take heart, for deep in that "hollow muscular organ which by rhythmic contractions and relaxations keep the blood in circulation throughout the body," you know he's right. Extreme right!

To the Editor:

Yesterday I would have died if I had taken a step further instead of a step backward. The cause was a "college" boy who was backing up with great speed on a one-way campus road seconds after I had waited for him to pass.

The road also was a busy one with pedestrians constantly crossing it, requiring extra care and slower than normal speed.

He could have been drunk, I thought, or had bad eye sight, but would not even after he nearly killed a human being? Oh, no. The driver and the two others in the car were not ruffled in the slightest.

They did not even look my way, obviously as long as they lived, it did not matter whether somebody else died because of their carelessness. It is especially sad to experience such an incident on the grounds of a higher institution of learning.

Long Family Sets Up Fund In Memory Of Son Steve

Setting track records is a tradition in the Mike Long family, but for his son Steve the record books are now closed.

Steve was riding with a friend August 9, 1964 when their car missed a sharp turn in the road and swerved into a tree, killing him instantly.

But Steve's track records will continue in the form of the "Steve Long Memorial Fund," a scholarship loan for athletes. The fund was begun by the family in memory of Steve.

At present it is primarily for track students. The future goal of the fund is to make it available to all athletes.

Before his death, Steve had maintained an outstanding track record. In 1959, he set the high jump record at FSU of 6'5 3/4". The record has since been broken. Also, to his credit were his outstanding performances in the Florida and Georgia AAU meets last year. He and his brother Terry finished one and two in the high hurdles at the Florida AAU meet. Steve ran anchor man on the 440 relay team which placed second in the Florida AAU meet. He also finished second in the high hurdles at both the Florida and Georgia AAU meets.

Competing also in the Olympic Development meets this summer, he finished first in various events. Steve won't be setting any more records, but through the memorial fund, perhaps other athletes may be given the opportunity.

Contributions to the fund may be sent to the athletic business office in care of "The Steve Long Memorial Fund."

... gets ready this week for the opening game of the 1964 season with Miami, Saturday night. The year should see more hard hitting action similar to the above.

Peterson Predicts Fired Up Hurricanes In Miami Opening Tilt Saturday Night

"We definitely feel that Miami will be one of the most fired-up teams that we will play this year. 'Remember last year' will be ringing in their ears when they come on the field Saturday night," said Head Football Coach Bill Peterson today.

Peterson was referring to last year's game in which the Seminoles humiliated Miami 24-0 before a crowd of 57,000 in the Orange Bowl.

With the loss of All-American George Mira and the addition of new Head Coach Charlie Tate, Peterson said he did not know quite what to expect from the Hurricanes this year.

"We assume they will keep the ball on the ground using the fine running ability of halfback Russ Smith and fullback Pete Banasack, both of whom will be hard to stop," Peterson also mentioned a family rivalry which will pit the Blenkinsitt brothers against one another. Fred Blenkinsitt will play flanker back for the Seminoles while his younger brother Bob will alternate at quarterback for the Hurricanes, with Rick Swah. When asked how the Seminoles were shaping up Peterson said, "We are strongest in our passing attack however, our running game has improved and will offset our dependence on passing."

Peterson said he would start Fred Blenkinsitt at right halfback and sophomore Lee Narramore at fullback. When asked who he would start at the quarterback position Peterson said, "I can't answer that question because I don't know who will make up my mind as to who will leave the hotel."

This week in closed practice Seminoles will ease up.

Williamson Yields V.P. To Killian

Pam Mozur Chosen As Women's V.P.

Joyce Kilian became Vice-President of the Student Body, succeeding Jeannie Williamson, and Pam Mozur succeeded her as Women's Vice-President yesterday afternoon during the first meetings of the Student Senate and the Women's Senate.

Killian was elected President Pro Tem of the Student Senate during their first meeting of the year in Longmire Auditorium. In accordance with the Student Body Constitution, she also filled the vacancy in the office of Student Body Vice-President.

The Vice-Presidency was vacated last spring when John Merting succeeded John Jones as Student Body President.

Senator Jeannie Williamson, who served as acting Vice-President of the Student Body during the summer, called to order yesterday's Senate meeting and outlined the activities of the Summer Legislative Council. Killian's first official act as President of the Senate was the appointment of two temporary committees. Senator Julian Proctor will head the Judicial and Rules Committee, and Senator Jeanie Williamson will be chairman of the Student-Senate Relations Committee.

Senator Pam Mozur was elected President Pro Tem of Women's Senate in a brief meeting which followed the Student Senate meeting. Mozur will also serve as Women's Vice-President.

Killian, a senior majoring in government, has been active in campus politics since her freshman year. She was a freshman precinct senator, editor of the Student Government section of the Pow Wow, and was the first freshman to receive the Outstanding Senator Award.

She served as a member of Student Senate during her sophomore and junior years.

Announcement

In response to the anonymous informant who was recently quoted in a "Flambeau" article, the Young Citizens for Johnson of Florida State University states that its membership policy is and has been open to any FSU student regardless of race, color, creed, or previous political party affiliation, who endorses the Johnson-Humphrey ticket and the principles of the Democratic Party platform.

We reject unequivocally those who would try to inflame attitudes of bigotry and hate among the students and faculty of this university.

We feel strongly that ill-founded insinuations are an affront to the people of this university and are just the type of actions which responsible young Americans will reject in this political campaign.

The Young Citizens for Johnson seeks all FSU students who endorse the principles of moderation and responsibility which have made this country strong.

JOYCE KILLIAN

... new Student Body Vice President, assumed leadership of Student Senate replacing Acting Vice President Jeannie Williamson at yesterday's Senate meeting.

Student Government Readies For Busy Year Says Merting

Student Government, the largest extra-curricular organization at FSU is gearing operations for an active year, according to student body president, John Merting.

Described as a "miniature replica of the national and state government," Student Government at FSU has 600 students involved. It has legislative, executive, and judicial branches.

Under the direction of Merting, the governing group handles the great majority of student activities outside the classroom.

Its scope includes a court system which rules on all infractions of university law involving and concerning students, and executive branch which handles administrative and budgetary matters, and a student senate which makes campus laws and has final jurisdiction over distribution of the budget.

The 1964-65 budget for activities is $465,000. Student activity fees and university activity fees provide the money.

Student Government has the principle responsibility for distributing the funds to such programs as Artist Series, Intercollegiate Athletics, Lecture Series, Student Circus and various clubs and organizations. Also included are student publications such as the school newspaper and yearbook.

Merting, a senior government and international affairs major with a A-minus grade average, has plans for several programs which will, in his words, "directly affect every student on campus, or give him or her the opportunity to take part in them."

"I can think of at least five programs we have planned this year which will do this and I want to make the students here realize that student government thinks of them as more than just 12,000 warm bodies," he said.

Questions in the evaluation will seek to determine whether students feel their professors "stimulate intellectual curiosity and student thinking," and students will rate them on fairness of tests along with whether they "encourage a better grasp of the course being taught."

Union Plans Activities Night; 84 Organizations To Participate

MS Saturday, September 19, from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m., a student activities fair will be held in the Davis Bldg. of the Union Complex. The idea was presented to FSU by Mr. Rinehart, director of Indiana University, when he visited Tallahassee this summer. The fair is a chartered organization partnership. The fair will be supplied with the tables and chairs they will need for their brochures and other information they wish to supply to the observers. Everyone is invited.

This will be an opportune time for the students and anyone interested to familiarize themselves with the physical buildings of the Complex and get to know the various organizations on campus. This is a good time to find your interest on campus and to get involved in things going on around FSU and to develop your interests.

Tuesday night there was an organizational meeting that was well attended by interested clubs on campus. Each was given a form to fill out and told to bring their files up to date in the Attorney General's office.

Thirty-four organizations are presently preparing their booths for Sat. night. Among them are the Student Government, Program Council, the Sailing Club (who will have a boat as part of their exhibit), Circle K, the University Choral Group, various religious groups, and many others.

Besides the collection of organizations there will be a dance by the Checkmates from 7 to 10:30 p.m. in the ballroom. The Crenshaw Building and also the cafeteria will be open for use.

Union Board members and Student Government will be on hand to help. This should prove to be a profitable occasion for all participating.

DR. PHILIP COOKE

John Moes On Economics Staff

John E. Moes, an Indonesian-born Dutchman who has spent the past three and one-half years in Africa, is now teaching at FSU.

Dr. Moes, a specialist in economic development, worked in Somalia, Ruanda, and Upper Volta with the United Nations Technical Assistance Board as economic advisor to those governments.

Before that, he was an economics professor at the University of Halle-Saale and he has taught at the Universities of Virginia and Minnesota. He is now teaching with the FSU Economics Dept.

Moes received his Ph.D. from the University of California at Berkeley. He also studied at the University of Amsterdam, the Netherlands School of Economics at Rotterdam, and the University of Leyden in Holland. In 1962 his book, "Local Subsidies for Industry," was published by the University of North Carolina press. In addition to the countries in which he worked, Dr. Moes also has traveled widely in Ghana, Congo, Mali, the Ivory Coast and Dahomey.

Cooke Joins Welfare Faculty; Will Counsel In Clinic, Teach

Dr. Philip W. Cooke, who for the past three years has been with the Marriage Council of Philadelphia, and who received his doctorate in psychiatric social work from the University of Pennsylvania in May, has joined the faculty of the School of Social Welfare at FSU.

Cooke taught, did research, and did clinical practice at the Center. His research on family therapy, under a National Institute of Mental Health grant, concerned marital partners counseled together rather than separately.

His duties with the School of Social Welfare will be divided between teaching in the Department of Social Work and working in the University's Marriage Council Clinic.

The clinic is moving toward a community-based approach. The American Association of Marriage Counselors—the national professional representative body of marriage counselors. One of the services being established is consultation and training service for ministers, social workers, lawyers, and others engaged in some form of marriage counseling.

Dr. Cooke has a B.A. degree from Furman University and a master's degree from the University of North Carolina. He is a member of the Academy of Certified Social Workers, and the American Association of Marriage Counselors.

AF Angel Flight Marches, Hosts

"Just what is Angel Flight?" is a question that brought an eager response from Sandy Lewis, FSU Angel Flight Commander.

Angel Flight, according to Miss Lewis, is "a honorary service organization of selected and dedicated women."

Angel Flight is a national organization, and there are 100 chapters throughout the United States at various colleges and universities.

The FSU Angels are essentially a drill team, but serve as hostesses at campus and military functions as well. They are recognized and supported by the US Air Force; their purpose is to further interest in Air Force honoraries at colleges and universities.

Last year, the Angels numbered 55. Twenty will return this year. New girls will be tapped after Homecoming. Sophomores with an overall 2.5 average are eligible to sign-up. Following interviews, they will be judged prior to selection.

Activities include trips to Air Force bases in and around Florida.

Blackwells Fete Women's Club

The FSU Women's Club will host the 1964-65 season's event on Wednesday with a tea at the home of President and Mrs. Gordon Blackwell.

The annual tea, which will be from 4 to 5:30 p.m., will honor new members, according to Mrs. Thomas Wright, vice-president of the organization and chairman of the event.

Serving as hostesses will be the following members of the executive board: Mrs. Earl Frieden, president; Mrs. Richard Joel, past president; Mrs. Willard Nelson, secretary; Mrs. Peter Lukas, treasurer; Mrs. J.M. Price, president of newcomers (a division of the club); Mrs. William Heard, advisor; Mrs. J. J. Newcomer, Mrs. Jack Lewis, calling committee; Mrs. Lewis Kallan, membership; Mrs. F.R. Allen, friendship committee; Mrs. Myrtle Ritchie, interest groups.

Assisting with the floral arrangements will be Mrs. Ray Green; chairman; Mrs. Robert Lawton; Mrs. Clarence Edney; Mrs. Lynn Johnson; Mrs. John Champion; Mrs. William Quinley; Mrs. Zachary Stokes; Mrs. Robert Godfrey, and Mrs. Rod Shaw.

A nursery for pre-school children will be provided for mothers attending the tea. Supervised by the Newcomer's Club, it will be at the Blackwell home. In the event of rain the nursery will be moved to the Wesley Foundation, 705 West Jefferson St.

Arrangements are being made, according to Mrs. G.R. Choppin, publicity chairman, for members to receive their yearbook and also to join the various social interest groups.

The University Women's Club organized in 1926 when wives of professors at Florida State College for Women met to form a social organization, "The College Dames." Its purpose was to welcome new members.

kinson just after two FSU students saved the life of her three-year-old daughter at the Reservation last March.

Monday James Mulally and Daniel McConochie, Jr. received an award for meritorious service from the local Red Cross chapter in Tallahassee. This is the highest award given by the Red Cross. The award was recommended to the National Red Cross last spring by Dr. Reid Montgomery of FSU, and was accepted shortly thereafter.

Little Janet Wilkinson was spotted by Mulally floating face up with waves breaking over her face. When the child rolled over and began to sink, Mulally plunged into the water and pulled her to shore.

Mulally, a junior, and McConochie, a senior, labored over the child an estimated five minutes, giving mouth to mouth resuscitation and heart massage before she began breathing.

The boys also received a Florida citizenship and a special commendation award from Governor Farris Bryant earlier this summer.

Among the guests were Dr. Mode L. Stone, president of the Foundation and Dean of the School of Education, and Mrs. Stone, Dr. Samuel T. Lastinger, executive vice president of the Foundation and director of counseling and personnel services in the School of Education.

A contest was sponsored for the best door prizes for men's and women's houses. Palm Court FEA for Women won the women's trophy and Selby No. 3 for Men won the men's trophy.

Lee Ann Mills of Selby House for Women was crowned "Queen of the First Foundation Ball." Miss Mills will also reign as queen of the First Foundation house party to be given by Selby No. 3 on Saturday, from 12-12.

Music for the dance was provided by the "Impacts." The ballroom was decorated and refreshments were served by women from Gadsden House, a new Scholarship House.

Students Act For Peace Meets Tonight In Longmire Lounge

The FSU Students Act For Peace will have their first meeting today in the large lounge, Longmire at 7:30 p.m.

There will be an election of officers and a discussion of the group's past and present activities.

The Students Act For Peace stands for non-violent direct action through education.

"We are totally opposed to the solution of international problems by means of war," said Steve Baum of SAP.

"We believe that all such conflicts can be resolved by peaceful means. We think that people of every country, if their conscience demands it, should refuse to fight," Baum added. "Being opposed to war, we are also opposed to all preparation for war. We oppose the production and use of nuclear, biological, chemical, and conventional weapons," said Baum. Acting on the theory that "peace and freedom are inseparable," Baum added that SAP "identifies ourselves with all those who are exploited or who are denied human rights. We do not believe in frontiers. We believe that individuals, acting together across all boundaries, can stop wars and can secure human rights. We are determined to resist tyranny by non-violent means." SAP gives particular attention to the problems of violence and its opposite.

University professors and national lecturers will speak at SAP meetings concerning their viewpoints on world problems. There will be literature available describing the peace movement and the alternatives it proposes. Anyone interested may attend the meetings and discussions.

Grant Aid Open By IIE Program

Because of the importance of international relations, the United States Government is offering special opportunities to students for study in Latin America.

In addition to the grants normally available under the Fulbright-Hays program, approximately 80 grants for the 1965-66 academic year will be available to beginning graduate students and graduating seniors through a program supervised by the Board of Foreign Scholarships and administered by the Institute of International Education (IIE).

This program, which was started in 1963, will send young Americans to the republics in which the number of U.S. students has traditionally been small, such as Venezuela, Ecuador, Bolivia, Ecuador, El Salvador, Dominican Republic, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Honduras, Panama and Uruguay.

Candidates for the awards must be U.S. citizens and single, with at least a bachelor's degree

New Book Out

Dr. M.L. Greenhut of the FSU Dept. of Economics and Dr. W. Tate Whitman of the Dept. of Economics at Eastern University are the editors of a new book on southern economic development.

Both economists are members of the Ford Foundation supported interuniversity Committee for Research of Southern Economic Development.

The volume, entitled "Essays in Southern Economic Development," is being published by the University of North Carolina press with the publication date set for early October.

Included in the book are essays by Dr. Marshall Colberg, professor and department head of economics at FSU and one co-authored by Dr. Greenhut and Dr. Charles Stewart of George Washington University.

Bulletin Board Reserved

A special section of the bulletin board in front of the History Bldg. has been set aside for notices and announcements concerning "Students Study and Research Abroad," and further scholarship and fellowship opportunities for study abroad.

Scribe Predicts Win For 'Gunning' Tribe

By BOB CORNETT
Flambeau Sports Editor

The big man walks down front street, past the Longhorn Saloon, steps off the wooden sidewalk, faces the owhoot, draws—fires, and then calmly strides away.

He has cleaned up Our Town, and now rides off to the west with another notch on his gun.

For the first time in its series with Miami, FSU will be in the position of the stranger coming to clean out the punk up-start. The Tribe has experience, depth, and talent.

Miami has desire.

Miami also has a team of good potential, but (this beinglimbswinging time) this potential will not be realized Saturday night. Bob Bilenkoff, Rick Swan, Russ Smith and Pete Banaszak will be impressive in defeat.

They will fall as the villain in a grade B movie because they are weak; weak in the key position on any football team—quarterback. Neither Bilenkoff nor Swan has played a second of varsity ball.

With this kind of inexperience they will make mistakes. These mistakes will, for a large part, be caused by Dick Hermann, Jack Shinholser, Frank Pennie, Bill McDowell and Avery Summer: experienced defensive maulers.

FSU will wear the white hats Saturday because they are the veterans. They have been through one war and have a good idea what to look for in this one. And like any good group of vets, they have a few surprises ready.

At the end of last year FSU opponents might have thought a good pass defense would contain the Tribe. Surprise number one: the outstanding passing game will be balanced by a better than good running attack.

With the loss of Charlie Calhoun the Seminole kicking should have folded: surprise two, it didn't. John Hosak, and Ed Pritchett have developed into respectable punters.

The Hurricanes will be fired up said the Herald, and FSU mentor Bill Peterson. They were fired up last year, and with a more effective spark plug: George Mira.

As last year the Tribe fire power, sparked by Steve Tensi and Pritchett, will out gun the Hurricanes.

Intramural Corner

by MELODIE BETTS

Beginning this weekend, the three hard-surfaced tennis courts at the men's gym will be open for reservations between 4 and 7 p.m.

Any FSU student or couples wishing to play tennis at a particular time can call the physical education locker room, 2640 (or 2160 in the evening) and reserve a court for one hour.

For those students without partners, a tennis pool is being formed. Players can call the office and leave their name, and the pool will locate a partner for them.

Also being offered for the first time is a clinic for women wishing to obtain a rating in officiating volleyball, basketball, softball, and badminton.

The clinic will begin this evening at 7 p.m. Girls will attend lectures and films during the clinic. After passing a written exam, they will be classified as officials in training and paid 50 cents a game until they pass the National Practical Exam.

Practices for the sports days will be held tonight in the gym at 7 p.m. This is the final practice before tryouts Monday evening. All women wishing to participate are encouraged to participate.

Bowling tryouts will be Saturday morning at 8 a.m. MEN: There will be an organizational meeting of the wrestling club this afternoon at 4:15 in room 212, Tully Gym.

"MAY THE BEST MAN WIN, LITTLE BROTHER."

Brothers Showdown

Saturday night's FSU-Miami season opener in the cavernous Orange Bowl will also be a meeting between two brothers.

Donning the Garnet and Gold for his last season is Seminole Co-Captain Fred Bilenkoff, one of the finest all-around flanker backs and being boomed as a potential All-American.

The Hurricanes hope to counter their loss of George Mira with Bob Bilenkoff who will be wearing the orange and green of the UM varsity team for the first time.

Bob was instrumental in leading the Hurricane frosh to an undefeated slate last year, and Fred's "little brother" showed off his south-paw passing mastery against the Florida Baby Gators.

He blitzed the freshman from Gainesville for 14 of 21 completions, a total of 263 yards passing, including three touchdowns via the air. "Big Brother" is hoping to turn in a performance akin to last year's opener against Miami. He brought down the house by scoring all 24 points as the Seminoles skunked the 'Canes.

Both Bilenkoff's were standouts in high school sports back in their hometown of Erie, Pennsylvania, in fact, Bob had a number of professional baseball offers.

College scouts also knew the Bilenkoff home as a good source of gridiron talent. Bob finally decided upon college football and Miami's Hurricanes.

If pre-season heights and weights hold true, "Little Brother" Bob is actually physically bigger than "Big Brother" Fred. Fred, Robert being one inch taller and five pounds heavier than Fred, who is listed at 6-1, 160 pounds.

Sources indicate that the meeting will be in name only. Fred is scheduled to see strictly offensive duty against the Hurricanes.

The only time the hefty two might be on the Orange Bowl turf at the same time is if Fred goes in at safety for FSU to return a punt when the Miami offense goes down.

New University Union Will Open With Gala Student Activities Night

By BOB CORNET

Florida State University will open the doors of its new University Union Saturday night for a Student Activities Night in the ballroom of the Helen Davis Bldg.

Assistant Director of the Union, Herb Rinehart, said that the Activities Night will serve both as an introduction to the Union and to all activities at the University.

Starting at 7 p.m., the evening will feature displays from more than 36 student organizations, a dance to the music of the Checkmates, and a football scoreboard to keep sports fans up to date on the Miami-FSU game.

Among the exhibits will be a display by the FSU Sailing Club. The club will bring a Flying Dutchman Junior sail boat into the ball room, and have a demonstration on the proper care of the sail boat.

The Union Program Council will also have a booth with brochures explaining the function and proposed plans for the Union Activities.

In another part of the Union complex the Recreation Bldg., will be open for bowling and billiards.

Three coupons, from the coupon book distributed at registration will be good only Activities Night. These are for bowling, billiards, and one cup of coffee in the Union Cafeteria.

Rinehart said that the first two hours of the evening will be devoted to the Activities displays by the organizations. These will range from the Sailing Club demonstration to the Theatre Dance group—complete with leotard dancers—to a Chess tournament staged by the Chess Club.

The purpose of these displays, he continued, are to let students know about the new organizations on campus. These groups can explain their functions and recruit members, he added.

Besides the Sailing Club, Dance Group, and Chess Club, the exhibits will represent three different student publications, three military honoraries, service fraternities, and several music organizations.

There will be two band stands in the Union Ballroom, one at each end of the room. On one the Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity will keep a football scoreboard of the Miami game, starting at 8 p.m.

On the other bandstand the Checkmates will play for a 9-11 p.m. dance. All this will be free.

Rinehart said that since construction is not yet completed on the Union Complex only the Ballroom area and the recreation area will be open.

He added that he hopes that the Activities Night will be an annual occurrence each fall. In the future he expects that the Activities Night could include a tour of the entire Union complex.

Other activities on a later Union Night could be an outdoor concert by the University Band, and diving exhibitions in the Union Pool.

The entire Union Area is made up of the Helen B. Davis Bldg., the Crenshaw Bldg., the Activities Bldg., the Union Pool, and the Coyle Moore Auditorium.

The new Union also takes in the remodeled former Union. The new post office, Trophy room, depository, and Book Store are found there.

In the Davis Bldg. are the main cafeteria, the three second floor ballrooms, two student dining rooms, the President's Dining room and a special kitchen.

The twelve lane Brunswick bowling alley, and the tentable billiard room are located in the Crenshaw Bldg. The Activities Bldg. contains a snack bar, student store, barber shop and beauty salon on the ground floor. On the second floor are the Student Activities Personnel Offices, conference rooms, a browsing library, and two music reading rooms.

The third floor houses all Student Government, Court, and Publications offices.

Coyle Moore Auditorium, with seating for 450, has a specially equipped public address system and projection facilities for commercial films and special singing.

Between the Davis and Activities buildings is an enclosed walk way on the second floor. This can be used for special exhibits. The walkway also has Tallahassee's first and only escalator.

YAF, GOP Form Goldwater Club

James Steele, chairman of the Young Americans for Freedom, and Everett A. Steadman, vice-president of Young Republicans, announced the formation of a Youth for Goldwater-Miller club on campus.

The objective of the club will be to give purpose and direction to those students who desire to help elect the Goldwater-Miller ticket.

Projects will include voter registration drives, precinct work, and carbanding. There will be many opportunities to lend aid to the Goldwater headquarters in Tallahassee as well.

The first organizational meeting will be Sunday, from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. in Longmire Auditorium. The North Florida Division Chairman, Gomer S. Toney, will be the speaker.

Forum To Meet

Liberal Forum will have a meeting at the Unitarian Hall 7:30 p.m. Sun.

The speaker for the evening will be Dr. Edwin Smith, Director of Reading Services for F.S.U. Smith will discuss the tutorial program sponsored by Liberal Forum to raise the educational level of Leon County students planning to attend college in order that they may be better prepared to take the College Entrance Examinations.

Liberal Forum feels that many college students on campus can aid in tutoring small groups on a voluntary basis with rich dividends to both tutor and student.

Students, faculty members and their wives may attend the meeting and decide whether they might volunteer their services.

Refreshments will be served after the meeting.

Unitarian Hall is located at the end of Wildwood Drive just this side of Tully Gym looking from campus.

Motorcade Set For Seminoles

A student motorcade will be formed on Landis Green at 9 a.m. Sunday and will then travel to the airport to greet the Seminoles as they return from the FSU-Miami game. It was announced today by Barbara Walker, rally bureau chairman.

Leading the motorcade will be Student Body President John Merting. The plane, carrying the Fighting Seminoles, is scheduled to land at 9:30 a.m.

"We'd like to see all the cars on campus participate in the motorcade," Miss Walker said. "If any students who own cars are unable to drive in the motorcade, we would like to see them at the airport anyway," she added.

Merting said, "I would like to urge complete cooperation with the Rally Bureau and its work in backing the Seminoles. We're looking forward to an 11-0 season in the won-lost column and I urge full support of the team."

STUDENT BODY OFFICERS

John Merting, President; Jean Norman, Secretary of the Student Body; and Bob Rackleff, Secretary of Inter-Collegiate Affairs discuss Student Activities night scheduled for the Union Ballroom tomorrow

Student Government To Explore Parking Solutions Says Merting

Student Government has become increasingly conscious of two pressing, campus-related problems of student parking at FSU—limited parking space and inadequate transportation. Student Body President John Merting today announced that the Student Government is exploring several means of improving campus transportation and thereby alleviating much of the traffic congestion that has become a problem on campus. However, according to Merting, this lone bus has proven to be insufficient.

"There are three ways to meet the need of an additional bus," said Merting. "The first is to arrange for a shuttle bus system using the facilities of the city transit system. The cost of using the city buses would be met by charging a nominal fee per ride.

President Merting noted that the chances of making such arrangements with the city will depend upon the success of the city shuttle system between the campus and Alumnal Village.

The second method would be for the University to assume the cost of operating a second bus. The University is paying for the bus now in use.

The third and least likely solution would be for the cost to be met by an increase in Student Activity Fees, with the Student Government assuming responsibility for making the necessary arrangements.

The principle fault with such a solution is that the Board of Control is the only agency with legal authority to alter the Student Activity Fees. Secretary of Finance Bill Wood stated that "an increase of student fees amounting to 50 cents per student per year would provide approximately the $6500 necessary for maintaining another bus for transportation."

GREEK GIRL

OF THE WEEK

GREEK GIRL

The men of Delta Chi fraternity have chosen this week's Greek Girl, Christy Walker. She is a member of Alpha Chi Omega sorority. Chris takes an active interest in FSU as a member of Sophomore Council and Village Vamps. She is also active as a senior member of Fashion, Inc.

Majoring in Exceptional Elementary Education, Chris plans to teach in Florida after she graduates.

Much of her spare time is spent around water where Chris likes to go water skiing and swimming. Also high on her list of hobbies is sewing, which she practices on rainy days.

As for FSU, Chris has this to say, "I love it here, I wouldn't transfer for anything."

Signs Needed In Lobbies

Congratulations to the staff and all others who are responsible for the outstanding campaign to stop smoking in women's dorms. The Surgeon General would be quite proud of you. To maintain and improve on this job of administrative excellence, I would like to suggest one thing. What about placing "No Smoking" signs in the lobbies of the women's dorms for the benefit of the visitors here enough to cross the thresholds of these bastions of parental guidance and protection.

There are no ash trays true, but ash trays are also a rare commodity in, say, the Seminole Club where I believe the evil habit is allowed.

The only medium of communication is by word of mouth by the housemother or any other subordinate staff member.

To save the poor housemother for her more arduous duties of riding herd on her acquired brood, it would be a simple matter to install signs stating that the evils of smoke are forbidden in that particular place. I'm unaware of the complex organizational structure of the women's dorms, but to whoever is reading, how about it?

Spare those of us who are unaware, the embarrassment of trying to find a place to put out a forbidden cigarette.

Foreign Policy Affects All Citizens

(Editor's note—the Associated University Press Service recently sent the "Flambeau" this editorial by Dean Rusk, Secretary of State. A few of the other writers who editorialize for the A.U.P.S. are, Edward Albee, David Brinkley, Cyrus Eaton, Justice Arthur Goldberg, James Hoffa, Clair Booth Luce, Margaret Mead, and Gov. George C. Wallace.)

The "Flambeau" would be interested in having your comments upon this article and your opinion as to whether or not you'd be interested in reading what some of these other men and women have to say.)

Dean Rusk, United States Secretary of State (1961--), was born in Georgia and was educated at Davidson College in North Carolina. He was a Rhodes Scholar at St. John's College and Oxford University.

Before heading the State Dept., Mr. Rusk was President of the Rockefeller Foundation and was in government at various levels.

The number-one objective of our foreign policy is, in the words of the preamble to our Constitution, to "secure the Blessing of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity." Its primary concern is the safety of our nation and its way of life.

We can be safe only if our environment is safe. And today the environment which we must try to make and keep safe is no longer local, or regional, or hemispheric. It is worldwide. It is the air, the land and the waters and the air of the earth—and reaches as far out to space as man can maintain instruments capable of affecting life on earth.

Foreign policy is as close to every citizen as the taxes he pays to support this great struggle for freedom—more than $300 per year for every man, woman, and child in the United States. It is as close as his job or the price he gets for his farm products. It is as close as every citizen as his own dream of the future.

But the world will remain extremely dangerous until the Communists abandon their ambitions for their kind of world revolution and until critical political problems are solved, such as the division of Germany and Berlin, the aggression against South Viet-Nam, and the use of Cuba as a base for undermining the independent nations of Latin America. And the world will remain extremely dangerous until armaments, especially the superweapons, are brought under control.

We are the most powerful nation the world has ever known—militarily, economically, in every material way. And despite all that has been written about the Soviet rate of growth, our income, both national and per capita, has increased more than the Soviets' in the last 12 years. The Communist world as a whole is experiencing difficulties in production, especially in food production. And the standard of living is falling. It is lower now than it was before the "great leap" backward began in 1958.

The survival of man is no longer a matter merely for philosophers; it is an operational problem for governments and is involved in their daily decisions.

The first visceral reactions to the day's news could lead to catastrophe.

Prudence requires the highest to temper and the deepest wisdom to guide. We do not improve upon the ancient Romans if we turn aside from consulting the entrails of geese merely to consult our own. We need wisdom—thoughtful, prayerful, prudent, dedicated wisdom—to lead men through these problems in the next decades in front of us.

Guest Letter

Concept Of God Inherent

To the Editor:

People, all people commit the same error when they talk about a belief in God and not about knowing God. ("Belief is the acceptance of an alleged fact or body of facts as true without positive knowledge or proof.")

("Knowledge is the sum of what is known, whether on a single point or on all subjects, by individuals or all mankind.")

People who have a belief in God may from one day to another have their doubts. It is due to an active mind stimulated by daily happenings. People who know God do not change their minds ever and the knowledge of God is intensified by happenings from day to day.

The idea, concept, notion, or thought of God is natural, instinctive, inherent, spontaneous, automatic. From birth to our death we are surrounded by wonders in nature of every description which prompts us to search for a maker, a creator of everything including ourselves.

With passing of time knowledge increases and mankind came to the understanding that God cannot be characterized, portrayed, distinguished, without five senses. Our five senses will recognize, and classify everything which is concrete, of substance, of matter.

The abstract, the spiritual can be understood by man's mind only. To have the proper conception of the spiritual we may use terms like truth, honor, love, friendship, justice, brotherhood, righteousness, and a multitude more whose meaning will move us within, but will not be reached by our five senses.

God can be recognized by our mind only and in no other way. Was there a beginning for God? and is there an end to the existence of God? are questions we must be able to answer. In due time mankind came to the conclusion that God is infinite with no beginning and no end.

To understand the infinite we may go about by adding one to one and keep on adding always one uninterruptedly continuously.

There is no limit to the distance we may go. The human mind cannot comprehend, understand, or visualize an end.

To us mankind, the universe is infinite with no beginning and no end in space. Man's mind is finite, therefore it cannot think or reason in terms of the infinite and know God as we know our fellow man.

We know man in two ways, in body (person) and by his work. Some man made work, products last for ages and are not subject to decay. They did not come to be and exist by itself. God, we know by His works only. The heavens declare His glory. The earth and all that is therein His wisdom, love, justice, and mercy. The universe manifests His infinite power and might.

As we observe the cosmos and as we study nature we find that all things created by God are miraculous and wonderful. How do we know that God created the heavens, the earth, and the universe with all that is therein? Did creation come about by accident or design?

Experience of mankind is that all which comes about by accident is imperfect, senseless, and useless. To create a universe which is perfect, to create a human mind so amazing as it is can be ordered only by an infinite intellect, by an infinite power, by an infinite Being who is from no beginning to everlasting.

More than 900 graduate grants to 53 countries are available through the U.S. Department of State's educational exchange program, which is authorized by the Fulbright-Hays Act. The Institute of International Education (IIE) administers the competition for this program.

Application forms and information may be obtained from the campus Fulbright Adviser, Professor George Lensen in 210B History.

Individual department heads also have lists of countries offering opportunities in particular fields. The deadline for filing applications through the Fulbright Adviser on this campus is Oct. 15.

Students who wish to apply for an award for study or research, or for teaching assistantships, must have: U.S. citizenship, at least a bachelor's degree by the beginning date of the grant, language proficiency commensurate with the proposed project, and good health.

Social workers must also have at least two years of professional experience after the Master of Social Work degree. Applicants in the field of medicine must have an M.D. at the time of application.

Creative and performing artists do not require a bachelor's degree, but must have four years of professional study or equivalent experience.

Selections will be made on the basis of academic and/or professional record.

Some student representatives are invited to work part-time after the summer is over. Careers in the company are open to eligible students upon graduation.

All students receive thorough training by experienced educational representatives and are closely supervised and encouraged in their work. The work contributes to the experience necessary for a successful business or professional career.

Interested students may make immediate application by writing to: Paul Schreier, Educational Director, "Parents' Magazine's" Cultural Institute, 52 Vanderbilt Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017.

Under a special program, additional grants for 1965-66 will be available for study in Latin America. It is expected that as many as 80 grants will be offered to graduating seniors and recent graduates for study in countries where the number of U.S. students has traditionally been small, such as Bolivia, Brazil, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Uruguay and Venezuela.

Recommended fields of study are social sciences, political science, history, law and humanities.

The applications of the students, processed by the National Screening Committee of specialists in various fields and areas.

UP Sponsors Activities Table

The University Party will sponsor a table at Activities Night in the Student Union tomorrow to give information concerning the Party and Student Government in general to all interested people.

There will also be available to all candidates a free price list of all photograph studios taking candidate's snapshots for campaign posters.

The present chairman of the University Party is Walt Martindale.

"Before the birth of the University Party, one political party and the interest groups that composed it controlled the student government. They elected who they wanted and executed the programs they wanted, regardless of the wishes of any other group," Martindale said.

"That situation has now changed. We have a two-party system." "If I had to sum up reasons for having a student government (would) naturally include that it gives the students a voice in administering the affairs of the University and it develops responsibility and leadership," said McElroy.

Other officers of the University Party include Sandy Shulman, Treasurer; Beverly Bonner, Corresponding Secretary; Nancy Dale, Recording Secretary; Rod Brooker, Publicity Director; Bill Wood, Campaign Director; Bob Boles, Platform Committee Chairman; Tom Bartlett, Parliamentarian; Sarah Jane Carter and Women's Dorm Chairman.

PASSING PRACTICE

... is over for the Seminoles as they leave for Miami to face the Hurricanes tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in the Orange Bowl.

Peterson Looks For 'Dog Fight'

By DAVE ROSS
Flambeau Sports Writer

Saturday morning the '64 Seminoles will board a chartered plane for Miami, thus starting another chapter in the brief but colorful football history of FSU.

However the year's contest will be different from preceding games. The Seminoles have been picked to defeat the Hurricanes. In fact, if one reads the right magazines the Tribe will go "3" this season.

For FSU this is a unique situation. Not since the Tribe started playing big time football have the preseason forecasts been so good. Coach Bill Peterson explains that this year's team is composed entirely of boys he recruited and his staff coached.

He feels that he knows their capabilities and they know what he expects. This gives the Seminoles what Peterson calls, "Our best chance yet."

This year will be the eleventh meeting between the Hurricanes and the Seminoles. The Canes are ahead in the series with eight wins while the Seminoles have been the victors twice.

When asked about the Tribe being favored over Miami Peterson answered, "We're in for a real dog-fight. I can just see last year's score plastered all over their dressing room."

Peterson feels that Miami's personnel is not as weak as they would have us believe. He said, "Russell Smith is a great halfback and Pete Banazak can kill you up the middle. They have others."

The others Peterson was referring to were boys from last year's freshman team which went undefeated last year.

There will be no big surprises in the Tribe's starting lineup Saturday night. Although there has been a struggle for the starting assignments in the offensive backfield, Phil Spooner, Fred Eilermikoff, and Lee Narramore appear to have nailed down the back-field positions behind either Tensl or Fritchett.

Wright Will Feature Music Of French Impressionists

By GREGORY ROWAN
Flambeau Staff Writer

A concert of French and Spanish impressionists, featuring pianist Thomas Wright will be presented at 8:15 p.m. Tuesday in Opperman Music Hall.

Featured with the concert pianist will be mezzo-soprano Elena Nikolaidi, who was born near Athens, Greece. Soon after graduating from a conservatory there she appeared at the Athens Lyric Theatre.

Later, by means of a government scholarship, she continued her studies in Vienna where she became a member of the Vienna Opera. Miss Nikolaidi's voice and dynamic interpretations have won her acclaim in all the foremost opera houses of Europe and the Middle East. On this side of the Atlantic, she has sung with the Metropolitan Opera, the San Francisco Opera, and has appeared with major symphony orchestras under such conductors as Mitropoulos and Rodzinski. Professor of Voice at FSU, she has had concert tours throughout the United States, Canada, and Australia, and at present divides her time between her established concert career and her duties at the University.

Roy Johnson, pianist, and Ronald Wain, flutist, both faculty members of the FSU School of Music, complete the ensemble.

Free and open to the public, the all-faculty concert will emphasize the works of Debussy and Ravel and will include the music of several Spanish impressionists.

Wright will open the program with four preludes by Debussy: "The Hills of Anacapi," "The Dance of Puck," "Bruyeres," and "Fireworks," followed by "Reflections in the Water," and "Isle of Joy," also by Debussy.

The second part of the concert will include piano compositions of the Spanish Impressionists. Wright will play "Tango" and "Zapateado" by Turina, "The Maiden and the Nightingale" by Granados, and "Triana" by Albeniz.

Following the intermission, Wright will play three piano compositions by Ravel: "Frolic of the Waters," "Sorrowful Birds," and "Aubade of the Jester."

Miss Nikolaidi will then sing a group of songs by Ravel: "Five Greek Folk songs," "The Eternal Enigma," the "Vocalise" in the style of a Spanish Habera, and "The Enchanted Flute," (from "Scheherazade"). On the last song Ronald Wain will play. The program will close with two duo-piano pieces performed by Thomas Wright and Roy Johnson: "Feytales" by Debussy arranged by Ravel and "Ritmo" ("Rhythm") by Infante.

Thomas Wright is Associate Professor of Music at FSU where he is also Director of Radio-Television Instruction and head of the interdivisional department of radio and television in the College of Arts and Sciences.

He has appeared on several weekly television network programs, has been featured on three radio networks, and has worked in the motion picture industry in Hollywood.

Wright has appeared as soloist with various symphony orchestras throughout the country and is noted as a specialist in the interpretation of the piano works of Gershwin.

Tallahassee audiences are familiar with Wright's recordings of the standard piano literature. Recent concerts have included all Chopin, an all Rachmaninoff, and an all Beethoven program.

Theatre Festival Praised By Critics

The Asolo Theater Comedy Festival, which has just completed a successful season under joint sponsorship of FSU and Sarasota's Ringling Museum, was praised by drama critic Henry Hewes in the Sept. 19 issue of the "Saturday Review."

Hewes, a member of the New York Drama Critics Circle, known for his somewhat stringent reviews, termed the Asolo Theater operation "highly satisfactory, both as a transitional training ground and as a supplier of entertaining, literate theater to alert and responsive audiences."

The "Saturday Review" critic visited the Festival Aug. 22 and 23.

As distinguished lecturer, he spoke on contemporary theater and urged Ford Foundation support of the Festival.

He attended "The Twelfth Night," "The Lady's not for Burning," and "Gutrot for Scandal"—three of the four plays performed by the select student-professional group.

Three members of the acting company won particular praise in the Review article. Robert Strane, one of the directors, was praised for his "happily unstrained production of 'Twelfth Night.'"

In writing about the theatrical company Hewes said, "When one compares the work at the Asolo with some of the larger repertory-theater operations in this country, one thing becomes clear if the public wants quality of 'theater' which tends to diminish in proportion to the distance from the stage to the last row of seats, there must be a subsidy."

Just as governments and patrons now make funds available in order that all may enjoy the genuine experience of symphony, ballet, or operatic presentations of classic repertoires, so should they for theater," emphasized Hewes.

VICKI VOYLES

Court Changes Told By Voyles

Vicki Voyles, chief justice of the Traffic Court, today announced various policy changes.

The rules concerning scooters, motor bikes, etc. were not covered fully in the regulations booklet. Scooters, which may NOT be parked in places so designated for cars, stated Miss Voyles.

Any vehicles other than cars found in those places so designated for cars will be considered in violation and will receive a fine of $2, warned the chief justice.

The court feels that all students who have cars should be thoroughly familiar with the 1964 edition of "Parking and Traffic Regulations." A copy can be obtained from Security in the back of Westcott.

"This is especially important," said Miss Voyles. "The majority of our cases are the result of the student being unfamiliar with the Regulations."

All students having a car unable to register it under the stipulations defined in the booklet, but having special reason (e.g. jobs off campus) may appeal by letter to the Student-Faculty Committee.

The court will meet this year in room 202, Longmire, at 7 p.m. rather than the usual Wednesday afternoon time.

Homecoming Agenda Released; Pow-Wow, Concert Scheduled

Homecoming festivities are on the agenda for the weekend of Oct. 9-11. Scheduled for 3:30 p.m. on Friday, Oct. 9 is the Parade. Floats, bands, and official cars will compose the parade line-up.

The Pow-Wow is the feature of the weekend. Presented annually as the big pull-up for Saturday's Game, it will begin at 8:30 p.m. in the stadium. Besides the excitement of the games and the bonfire, the highlight of the evening will be the crowning of the Homecoming Queen for '64. Live Fountain, Jazz clarinetist known as "Mr. New Orleans," is slated to appear jointly with the "Cladoc" at the semi-formal dance which will follow the Pow-Wow. Tickets are $3 a couple. The dance lasts from 9:30 p.m. until 1 a.m. in Tully Gym. Late permission is being extended for women students for this event.

Preceding Saturday's football game is the Alumni Bar-b-que at Tully Gym. Serving begins at 12 noon. The Seminoles host the University of Kentucky in the game slated for 2 p.m. Saturday at Campbell Stadium. Post game Open House is scheduled at all fraternities, sororities, and dorms.

Winding up Homecoming '64 is the Chad Mitchell Trio concert Saturday night. Shows are at 7 and 9 p.m. in Westcott Auditorium.

The University Union will be the scene of the semi-formal dance Saturday evening at 8 p.m. The Checkmates along with Rick Powell's Orchestra will provide music.

Activities Night 'Is Successful'

"I don't think it could have been more successful," exclaimed Herb Reinhard, Asst. Director of the University Union, today in referring to the Activities Night Saturday night.

Reinhard emphasized the fact that more than 55 student activities were represented at one gathering. They were exhibits from all the activities.

Reinhard has estimated that between 1,000 and 1,500 people attended the Activities Night. He said that he thought that this was to be the most successful of Saturday night activities night. He said that he will most certainly be coming back to the future.

Enrollment Announced

Registrar Murray W. Kenna reports a record registration of nearly 1,000 more men than women, with an unprecedented enrollment of 12,137, including 2,037 graduate students, for the fall trimester.

As expected the junior class outnumbered the others at FSU, with 2,643. This, according to Kenna, reflects a heavy registration of students who have completed junior college work and have transferred. Other class enrollments are as follows: Freshmen, 2,480; Sophomores, 2,208; Seniors, 2,406; and special, 363.

Tryouts Begin

Tryouts for the Theatre Dance Group will be tomorrow and Thursday from 2:45 to 4:45 p.m. in the Dance Studio of the Women's Gym. All interested students may try out and men are especially encouraged. Although previous dance training is helpful it is not required.

Students who are returning to FSU and heading the school of dance at a Houston, Texas, college.

Various programs include an Open Studio (Technique Demonstration), an Evening of Dance, and out-of-town performances and technique demonstrations.

Rules Deadline Set

All dorms, scholarship houses, religious groups and off-campus houses who have not yet received official rules for Homecoming campus decorations may pick them up from the main office of Reynolds Hall.

All schedules, sketches and Homecoming plans are due in 414 Westcott by 12 noon tomorrow.

K for C Test Given

Fulbright-Hays Aids To Be Awarded

For the fourth year, the Fulbright-Hays Program in India is providing American college and university graduates opportunities for tutorships in English at Indian universities.

These awards are unique in that provision is made for the grantees to take courses in their own fields of interest at the universities to which they are assigned, or to carry on independent study or research, in addition to their duties as tutors in English.

Grantees leave in early June for India, where they receive a special training course in the teaching of English as a foreign language before taking up their duties at the universities.

The teaching responsibilities begin with the opening of the Indian universities in July and finish at the end of February. The balance of the grant period is free for the grantees' own study or research.

The eligibility requirements are the same as for the regular Fulbright-Hays student grants. Women are eligible and those selected will be placed in women's colleges. Single students are preferred. Married couples can be accommodated only both apply for and receive awards.

The teaching assistantship involves approximately six to eight hours of classroom instruction in the English language and usage and an equal amount of time spent in informal meetings and grading of papers.

The assistants work under the direction of a professor of English and are not required to have had previous teaching experience or to have majored in English. However, no training in English is an advantage and those qualified to teach grammar and English usage will be preferred.

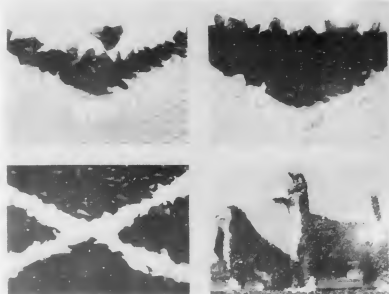

Candidates should possess a degree which carries well and good command of any marked regional accents. Those with experience in public speaking, debating and drama would be at an advantage in their position.

Because of the cultural and social differences to which adjustment must be made, mature, adaptable and dedicated individuals are best for these grants.

Finalists in the competition will be required to submit a tape recording of their voice, and the necessary instruction will be sent to them at the appropriate time.

Students who have successfully completed a year as a teaching assistant may apply for a renewal of their grant either as a teaching assistant or as a regular student grantee.

Please see Professor George L. Lord for further information and deadline dates.

"POMPS" PAPER

... aids students in Homecoming decorations and designs.

New Float Tissue Available

A new size colored tissue, specially designed to simplify, speed up, and eliminate waste in the decorations of homecoming floats and displays, parties, proms, and similar activities is now available from the Crystal Tissue Company, Middletown, Ohio.

Called "Pomps," the product represents an entirely new concept in the marketing of colored tissue for nearly all decorative purposes.

"Pomps" consists of 300 6" x 6" sheets of a single color, conveniently packaged in a show-through, printed polyethylene bag.

Made of first quality Crystal Four-drainer Tissue, "Pomps" is available in 17 dark and pastel colors, covering a full range of needs and requirements.

When using conventional, one inch chicken wire as a supporting structure, the tissues in each package will cover a total of four square feet by inserting one tissue in every other hole.

For denser coverage using one tissue per hole, one package will cover two square feet of chicken wire.

In announcing the new product, M.T. McMurray, Crystal vice-president of sales, said "Pomps" was planned and designed to eliminate costs and waste in speed and decoration time.

He added that the availability of 17 colors allows for an unusually wide variety of design ideas and dramatic finished creations.

A new graduate program in Information Science is now being offered by the Library School.

The program will lead to the Master's degree and is intended for students with an undergraduate major in science or engineering.

Researchers in all areas of knowledge must keep abreast with current developments in their field, but the task of doing this has become increasingly difficult, particularly in the areas of science and technology.

The volume of research and resulting literature has grown so large that it is often difficult for the researcher to keep up with new developments and pursue his research. To help the researcher, Information science is developing a system to meet his needs.

The principal functions of Information Science at present are: To utilize existing technology in librarianship, computer technology, business administration and other fields in the design and operation of information systems.

For further information about this field, contact Dr. Gerald Jahoda in the Library School.

Tickets Still Good

Season tickets for the University Union swimming pool will be good until the facility closes for recreational use Dec. 1.

Dr. Reid Montgomery, director of Student Activities and the Union, said that some students misunderstood a story in the "Flambeau" released by the assistant swim coach and were under the false impression that season tickets would not be good after Oct. 1.

The swimming team will use the pool for an increased period of time each afternoon beginning Oct. 1, but there will still be ample space for recreational swimmers, too.

Bus Schedules

One of the projects undertaken by the Men's Senate is the distribution of campus bus schedules in Sallee, Smith, and Keltum Halls.

These schedules are available to anyone who desires one. Students who do not live in one of the dorms, and would like to have a copy, may call the Men's Vice-President's office and leave his name and University box number.

Liberal Forum receives Aid for Services

Students and faculty members interested to be tutors after hearing a speech by Dr. Edwin Smith at the Liberal Forum, Sunday night.

Dr. Smith, director of Reading Services at FSU, said that one phase of the Liberal Forum sponsored by the Union will be "an attempt to recruit the dropouts in local high schools."

He said that the other part of the program will concentrate on giving communications skills to the students who are interested in going to college.

The program was conceived with the aid of the Liberal Forum, which is headed by "Tony Skiff," president of the Liberal Forum, Adm. Smith agreed, saying, "this is not a program but a project to help any underprivileged student."

He said that the program was not designed to be a resource person for the prospective tutors with the program, spoke to acquaint prospective tutors with the program, he said, "the most important thing is to have a high interest in the program."

Smith said, "I added the program was not designed to be a resource person for the prospective tutors with the program, spoke to acquaint prospective tutors with the program, he said, "the most important thing is to have a high interest in the program."

FSU Homecoming Begins Oct. 9 Helen Hayes Is Banquet Guest

Actress Helen Hayes will be a special guest at FSU's Homecoming Banquet Friday, Oct. 9, at 6 p.m. in the air-conditioned banquet hall of the new University Union.

Miss Hayes, best known for the name role in "Victoria Regina" in 1935, has begged off speaking to the banqueters, more than 1,000 of whom can be served in the spacious dining hall, but she has agreed to greet them from the head table, according to banquet chairman Daisy Parker.

"I'm too frightened of speaking to do more than announce a short greeting," the "first lady of the stage" wrote President Gordon W. Blackwell from her home in Nyack, N.Y.

For the actress, who was on the American stage for more than half a century, the Homecoming Banquet might be considered to be a birthday dinner. On Saturday, Oct. 10, she will observe her 64th birthday.

The actress made her stage debut in 1905 and at nine made her first appearance on the New York stage. At 18 she appeared in Barrie's "Dear Brutus" but her most spectacular early success was with Alfred Lunt in Booth Tarkington's "Clarence," which opened on Broadway in Sept. 1919.

She was active on the stage through the fifties and in 1959, she appeared in one O'Neill play, "A Touch of the Poet," in the Helen Hayes Theater, and also appeared over NBC television in the O'Neill play "Ah Wilderness."

TV was not, however, her favorite medium, and 10 years earlier she had said: "TV will mean the end of all art in the theater."

For more than thirty years Miss Hayes lived in a big Victorian house on the Hudson River at Nyack, New York. This house and its furnishings were finally sold in 1935 and the profit of $57,000 went to the American Academy of Dramatic Arts for scholarships.

She was married to the playwright Charles MacArthur. Their only daughter, Mary, died of polio in 1949 and MacArthur a few years later.

Dr. Blackwell will be the banquet speaker and alumni, students, faculty and friends attending the banquet will get the benefit of his reflections on FSU after four years as its chief administrator.

Blackwell, who has been responsible to a large degree for many solid gains, including faculty growth, higher faculty salaries, a big capital improvement program and increased appropriations, is winding up his connection with FSU on Feb. 1 to become president of Furman University, his Alma Mater.

As an additional attraction for alumni, FSU has booked an all-star team of 1958, baseball infielder, Dick Howser of the Cleveland Indians, as the banquet toastmaster.

Howser, who is from West Palm Beach, was All American as an FSU baseball player in 1957 and 1958 and was captain of the FSU team which won the College World Series in Omaha in 1958.

He signed with Kansas City in 1958 and after three years joined the Cleveland Indians. He was named Rookie of the Year in 1960 by Sporting News.

Homecoming Chairman William W. Rogers urged alumni to get their banquet tickets early. Tickets are $2.65 apiece and may be ordered at the Alumni Office.

The award of honorary memberships by the campus leadership organizations Gold Key and Garnet Key, for men and women students respectively, will be made at the banquet.

Pianist T. Wright Will Present Impressionist Recital Tonight

A French and Spanish Impressionism concert featuring pianist Thomas Wright will be presented at 8:15 tonight in the Opperman Music Hall at FSU.

Wright will present compositions by Debussy, Turina, Granados, Albeniz, Ravel, and Infante. He will be accompanied in two duo-piano pieces by Roy Johnson.

Elena Nikolaidi will sing several songs by Ravel. With "The Enchanted Flute," she will be accompanied by Ronald Wain on the flute obligato.

The program is open to the public without charge.

Compositions to be presented by Wright include: Debussy's "The Hills of Anacapri," "The Dance of Puck," "Bryce's," "Fireworks," "Reflections in the Water," and "Isle of Joy." Turina's "Tango" and "Zapateado."

Granados' "The Maiden and the Nightingale," Albeniz' "Trisana," Ravel's "Frolic of the Waters," "Sorrowful Birds," and "Aubade of the Jester."

Wright and Johnson will perform Debussy's "Festivals" and Infante's "Ritmo."

Mezzo-soprano Nikolaidi will sing a group of songs by Ravel: "Five Greek Folk songs," "The Eternal Enigma," "Vocalise," and, accompanied by Wain, "The Enchanted Flute."

Vandals

Looking for something to do tonight? Studies a drag? Your girl out of town? Beer all gone 'till the weekend? Play that new game (definitely Collegiate) "Vandals."

The rules are simple—just destroy something. The risks are few—the cops are too busy writing tickets. And the personal rewards are great—you show the squares who really swings.

The best time to play "Vandals" is late at night (you're not really hiding; it's just more fun this way). Take a car and cruise around awhile until you find a likely subject—the Business Building for instance.

Then, showing great ingenuity, guile, and craftiness, rip off all or some of the letters. Points are given for sloppiness, number of bricks destroyed, and a special category for cleverness.

In this category points are earned more for what's left than what's taken. The really sly devil will probably only remove the Bu and ess of Business Building. That's worth 12 points.

Frustration points are earned in the morning when the damage is discovered. The tally goes up with the cost of repair, and the intensity of profanity by the assessor.

Ah, that good feeling of a job well done. The confidence that comes from testing yourself in battle.

For the really enterprising player, this is, of course, small time vandalism. He's after the big score.

Recently a new champ made his appearance at FSU (he shall remain nameless in the interest of good clean fun). He took a $3,000 painting from the Spanish Art exhibit here last week.

The painting was later found by the Campus Security Force, though they stumbled all over themselves for awhile trying to recover it. Great fun, huh?

"The King" actually double finessed this trick. The painting was extremely valuable, and had a high frustration index.

The picture was part of an exhibit brought to FSU by the American Federation of Art. Had the painting gone unrecovered, the AFA would have refused to bring anymore exhibits to FSU. "The King" really put one over on the squares, this time.

While it's not usually a spectator sport, if you see anyone engaged in "Vandals" be sure to congratulate them on their cleverness. And naturally, don't squeal, that's the first sign of a square.

Freak Accident Injures Student

George Brown, a 1981 graduate student, was rushed to Tallahassee Memorial Hospital yesterday afternoon after walking through a plate glass window in the University Union. Brown was admitted to the hospital and sent to surgery for "repairs of lacerations." His condition was not known at press time.

Brown apparently mistook the full-length window in the former student post office for an open door and tried to walk through it. The Campus Police said that Brown received "...severe lacerations of the left eye to the chin line area, and on the right hand."

SOUNDS GOOD TO ME

...A prospective ROTC cadet ponders a point during one of the ROTC orientation courses which the Army and Air Force offer at FSU.

ROTC Begins Orientation

The nervous shifting of chairs ceased as the Major strode into the room and began another session of the ROTC orientation course by opening the floor for discussion on the leadership advantages offered by participation in the ROTC.

The "class" members were part of the 500 freshmen and upperclassmen students enrolled in the newest addition to the ROTC curriculum offered at FSU, an introductory orientation class which meets two class hours a week for three weeks this trimester.

The Army Major served as the moderator of the class and led the discussion of advantages and disadvantages of the program, presenting the facts on which the service bases its appeal to the new collegians.

The instructors in the services which maintain ROTC facilities at FSU, Army and Air Force, have turned to the elective orientation class as a means of supplying the ROTC officers which these services require.

The course developed as a result of the University decision last year to drop compulsory ROTC for freshmen and sophomores and make the training elective.

Speaking for the Army detachment, Major William J. Connolly stated that the purpose of the orientation process was to "give our new freshmen the facts pertaining to the Army ROTC program and Army commissioned life in general. The topics which the prospective cadets have discussed include Army pay and promotion, graduate schooling, and leadership."

Hurricanes Stay In Clouds; Over Keyed

After realizing full well that his Miami Hurricanes were not as destructive or powerful as the Miss that swept through south Florida a few weeks ago, Coach Charles Tate let it be known that never, in his long association with the wars of football, has he seen a team so keyed up as his youthful team was Saturday night for their recital with highly-regarded Florida State.

According to the head coach, the fired-up Hurricanes stayed up in the clouds for the duration of the ball game and never got their feet on the ground long enough to provide a challenge for Steve Tensi, Fred Biletnikoff and Co.

If this was Miami's case, then Coach Bill Peterson's warriors must have been perched a few clouds over when the opening whistle blew but luckily did manage to make it back to earth in time to prove, beyond any stretch of the imagination, that they were the best team on the Orange Bowl turf that night.

The tough Seminole defense unit, led by the linebacking duo of Bill McDowell and Dick Hermann, had little problem in diagnosing Tate's surprise "11" formations for which Peterson and staff had thoroughly cautioned about.

They encountered almost no difficulty with the roughest dashes of the later-injured Russell Smith and gifted Pete Banaszak. Smith managed to pick up 26 yards in his three tries before exiting while the usually-able Banaszak netted only 16 yards in his nine trips to the firing line.

Tensi and junior Ed Fritchett riddled the Miami secondary with 16 completions and sophomore fullback Les Narromore proved he's going to be a valuable commodity for the next 9 games with his timely pickups.

For the second straight year, flanker back Fred Biletnikoff treated Miamians to a show-and-a-half as he hauled in nine aeriels and personally accounted for 165 yards. Without Biletnikoff, and the steady Les Murdock, the scoreboard operator could have gone to sleep as the former's 15 and 16-yard receptions from Tensi were the game's only scoring maneuvers.

Post-game statistics pretty well summed the evening up...FSU led in every major category, prevailing on the ground, in the air and even in backward progress via the officials. If one must cite incidentals, the 11 penalties which the Seminoles drew were the only major minus signs in an otherwise almost perfect first game, if there ever was one or ever will be. Too, the rain had a dampening effect as far as the FSU offense was concerned.

However, Peterson blamed himself for the infractions saying "It was poor coaching on my part."

If anyone actually hurt the Seminoles in the running department, it was sophomore quarterback Bob Biletnikoff, who had to take a back seat to brother Fred in his first go with the big boys.

He managed 38 yards on the plus side in 12 maneuvers which really isn't any monstrous total for a leading rusher.

Of course, the elusive oft-injured Smith would have surely helped the Hurricanes but Tate readily concedes that they're going to have to start learning to get along with out the junior speedster.

"It looks like his bad leg is going to bother him all season," Tate said with a painful countenance. Peterson's backfield corps of Maury Bibert, Howard Ehler, Jim Massey and Winfred Bailey showed little strain in chasing down the tosses of Biletnikoff and the highly-touted Rick Swan.

Student Government to Form Political Education Committee

"A university is for students," will be the theme for FSU's annual Legislative Weekend to occur Nov. 12, 13 and 14, according to Phillip Flemming, FSU Director of Development.

Student Government will actively participate in the weekend activities for the first time.

"This falls directly in line with our plans for an effective state-wide university-student Political Education Committee," said John Merting, Student Body President.

According to Merting, the committee will be set up to make the needs of the university system in Florida known to state legislators.

"We have met with interested persons from the University of South Florida, the University of Florida, the University of Miami and the University of Tampa to discuss aspects of the planned committee," Merting said.

"We have also discussed the matter with the Florida Education Association and we hope to be able to work closely with them in order to have an effective organization," he added.

"One of the major needs of the program at present is getting students at FSU who know their legislators or who are interested in working with them to participate in the program," Merting continued.

The students will be asked to meet their legislators during the Legislative Weekend and show them around the campus while getting better acquainted with them. They will then be asked to see the representatives of their home areas during the Christmas holidays and talk with them about programs affecting Florida's universities which the Political Education Committee decides are pertinent problems within the educational system.

"We would like to get one boy and one girl from each county in the state who knows his or her legislators to participate in the program," Merting said.

Students who are interested in working on a program of this type government offices between one and 5 p.m. to be interviewed for possible work with the committee.

"The committee will not be a student pressure group, but will study actual needs of the university and present factual report of needs and the reasons for them to the legislature," according to Merting.

"Approximately 180 students are needed to actively participate in the program as it is outlined now," he said.

"This type program has worked very effectively in other states and with proper handling can work well here too," said Merting.

Doyle Resolution Passed By Women's Senate; Want Space

Women's Senate yesterday discussed and passed a resolution by Ruth Doyle, that more drawer space be added to the women's section of Nathaniel-Salley.

The dorm was originally planned to house men only, leaving less space for clothes storage than is presently needed. (Two women now share one dresser.)

The resolution will be presented today to the Student Senate.

Joy Dickenson, representative of the Intercollegiate Association of Women Students, discussed the importance of acquiring FSU students with the problems of women graduates.

The members of Women's Senate expressed concern over news means of arousing interest in Student Government by the students on campus.

Dean Elizabeth Lynn, associate dean of women, pointed out to senate members that service organizations on campus were being called upon to all local organizations in activities which were not associated with FSU.

She requested that any groups not supporting Campus Chest be refused service by FSU service organizations.

SS Wants Material

Got any opinion articles, short stories, short story stories, shaggy dog stories, cartoons, jokes, photograph essays, essay essays?

"Smoke Signals," FSU's student magazine, is currently accepting submissions for the November issue.

All material should be typewritten, double-spaced and include return address if it is to be returned (cartoons, however, may be simply rough ideas).

Send contributions by campus mail to Smoke Signals, 410 Longmire. Deadline is Oct. 9 for consideration for this issue.

Seating, Insurance, Groups Discussed At Cabinet Meeting

At the Cabinet meeting yesterday, Attorney General Ed Scott reported that although 56 organizations were now up to date, many are not, and the deadline for doing so is tomorrow.

He emphasized that organizations not up to date by Thursday will not be allowed to use University facilities, or even meet on campus, and that they must undergo the formalities of being reinstated by the Senate.

Scott also announced that 3,000 seats have been reserved for block seating in Campbell Stadium.

Sec. of Internal Affairs Norman Martin said that payment of student insurance will not be accepted after Sept. 30. Students may purchase the insurance in 210 Longmire.

Presidential Assistant Steve Prentice announced that the Student Government will present an informative program over radio station WMFN from 3:45 to 4 p.m. every Sunday.

Secretary of Finance Bill Wood reported that steps are being taken to secure another buss for campus transportation.

Phi Kappa Tau Offers JE Beard Scholarship

This trimester Beta Iota Chapter of the Phi Kappa Tau fraternity will present the James E. Beard Scholarship Award to the sorority having the most improved grade point average.

The award will be in the form of a "rosette" trophy and will be presented twice annually, once at the end of the Fall trimester and again at the close of the Spring trimester. The Summer trimester will not be included.

The James E. Beard Scholarship Award is being presented in memory of Jim "The Bear" Beard, an FSU automobile accident in June 1964.

It has been the desire of the parents and the Phi Kappa Tau's that an award of this nature be given to promote scholastic excellence at FSU, a spokesman for the fraternity said.

Announcements

Alpha Phi Omega National Service fraternity will have informal rush tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Ballroom "CC" at the University Union.

Membership in Alpha Phi Omega is open to all interested college men who wish to serve.

AFO was founded in 1925 and has expanded to nearly 400 chapters, the largest Greek-letter fraternity in the world. Iota Rho, FSU, is 13 years old and among the top chapters in the nation.

Anyone interested in learning more about AFO may attend.

"There has been a misunderstanding by male students regarding the use of Reynolds Hall laundry substation," said Phil Hunt, director of auxiliaries.

Men may not use the washer and dryer facilities, but are permitted to use the north door of the substation as a laundry pick-up station only, he explained.

All photographers interested in covering Gymbkana should call Phil Novak at 222-1995.

Seems that Student Senate has elected a real taskmaster for vice president in Joyce Killian.

Her first action was to curtail the number of absences allowed members of Senate during the year. This was followed by a thorough study of the Student Body Constitution and the Student Body Statutes for Student Senate in order to tighten up procedures.

Looks like an interesting year for Senate.

***

Speaking of vice presidents, Miss Jeannie Will certainly deserves the thanks of the entire student body for her work as acting vice president this summer.

Miss Williamson took time out from her honors work in English to give the Summer Legislative Council purpose and direction.

***

We have heard some complaining about the "John Merging Fan Club" in the pages of the "Florida Flambeau."

Sorry gang, Student Government is your elected representative and as such is the "Flambeau's" most important news source. Naturally the President of the Student Body makes the most news of anyone on campus.

Besides that he is doing one hell of a good job.

To those who complain, we suggest you read some other newspaper (ignore national news, however, we understand that they are doing the same thing with someone named Johnson).

***

We have heard rumors, unsubstantiated at the present time, that the new addition to the Psychology Building is nothing more than a gigantic rat farm.

Seems plausible. With architecture like that no human would want to use it.

***

Again on the same subject, modern designers are wonderful.

They build two structures showing all the ingenuity and architectural design of a matchbox, give them to the math and education people, and then don't even install little essentials like pencil sharpeners.

Progress.

***

Heard another excellent recital by Thomas Wright last night. We believe that Mr. Wright, through his dedicated interest in the University and the student body, brings more credit to the School of Music on campus and in the local area than any other music faculty member.

S.A. 'Hipster' Tactics Could Backfire

The recent election in Chile should bring to mind several questions. First, tradition should be considered. The common trend in the past in Latin America has been for the extremes of the right and left to vie for public office.

The presidential election in Chile was extraordinary in this sense. The contest was between two leftists, Frei, a left of center candidate and Allende, a far left candidate. One question might be is this going to be a new trend in Latin America?

Another example might be Cuba. Manuel Ray, one of the chief underground, anti-Castro leaders, has stated that if he were able to take over Cuba, he would retain much of Castro's already existing economic program.

The more pertinent question in an election year is what would the U.S. policy towards Latin America be like under Goldwater? There seems to be a tendency of some conservatives to consider god-like qualities inherent in the concept of private property and private enterprise.

Part of Eduardo Frei's campaign promises was concerned with the possibility of nationalizing the vast U.S. copper industry in Chile.

It should be realized that Frei ran on a pro-U.S. platform contrary to his opponent, and that there was certainly relief in the U.S. when Frei was elected. The question here isn't whether the Chileans are justified in nationalizing the mines, but what will we do if they do so?

By international law, Castro did not have the right to shut off the water to our naval base, but he did. Goldwater said to send in the Marines, turn it back on, and Johnson said to cut the pipe in half.

At a time when we are trying to retain our influence in Latin America, we can afford to have Goldwater in office? His answers to too many problems seem to be similar to Goldwater's, i.e., send in the Marines. Is the presidency a rotating office as some say, or will Goldwater retain his shoot from the hip-hip technique, 1 for one, 2 for two, to take the chance and shut out. Therefore I feel it is much more important to defeat Goldwater than to elect Johnson.

'Union Lanes' Will Feature Brunswick Alleys, Tables

By MELLODIE BETTS

Strikes...cheers...spares...smiles...spliffs...censored...are the sounds of people enjoying a game of bowling.

Within the university complex stands the Crenshaw building housing the latest in bowling lanes and billiard tables.

They have the new Brunswick A-2 machines to make bowling twice as fast, pin indicators to help ease spare making, and telescopes for league and match games, as well as the new Brunswick pocket billiard and snooker tables.

Also for the avid bowler and pool players will be the new Pro Shop with a three day service on bowling balls. They will also carry a complete line of bags, shoes, and other bowler's aids.

On the agenda of the new lanes at present is the formation of leagues. On Monday and Tuesday evenings, the faculty leagues will use the lanes. Wednesday and Thursday evenings will find the student's mixed leagues on the approach.

"We will try at all times," stated Herb Reinhardt, Asst. Director of the complex, "to have at least one pair of lanes available every evening for open bowling."

In the future, a tournament will be held to select the men's and women's team to represent the FSU Union in the Region 6 Association of College Unions. They will travel within the state as well as Alabama, Mississippi, and Georgia. Students who have competed in ABC, WBIC, or received money for bowling will not be eligible to compete for the team.

Besides a bowling team from the Union, there will also be a Billiard Team of men and women. Instructions for either bowling or billiards for students, faculty, and children are available.

The house will be sanctioned ABC. Any bowler who is not in a sanctioned league may obtain an ABC, WBIC, or a Junior's score card with the house. (The sires, Events as the starting scotch doubles, head pin and tournaments are up for consideration now.

Dr. Doak Campbell, Former President Publishes Book Based On FSU Rise

Dr. Doak Campbell in a new book, "The FSU Is In Transition," records the transformation to a new campus president.

Dr. Campbell came to FSU in 1957. There were 164 regular faculty members and 1857 students, he said. In the 132-page book, newly published by the Florida State University Press, No. 40.

When he retired in 1957 there were 452 regular faculty members and 6982 students on campus.

Since his retirement in 1957 the university enrollment has almost doubled again and currently there are 12,137 students enrolled.

It was during Campbell's presidency that FSU began to build the programs of study and research which have been important to the growth since then and he deals with these in his book.

Campbell said that on Sept. 2, Labor Day, 1946, the governor and several other officials met in FSU's Swanee Room to discuss an acute situation at the University of Florida where 2200 applicants were on the waiting list due to a return of men discharged from the armed services.

"After the close of the dinner meeting the governor asked I, president, Campbell whether the College could provide teaching and other services for a thousand men provided the state could provide living quarters and other physical facilities as well as funds for additional faculty members," Campbell said.

"President Campbell agreed to undertake the assignment, provided the emergency funds for securing additional faculty members could be released by the Cabinet at once.

"It was suggested that the recently deactivated facilities of the Dale Mabry Air Force Base could be reconditioned in a short time and made to serve temporarily."

On the next day Campbell had instructions from the Cabinet to proceed with a Tallahassee Branch of the University of Florida for men students on Oct. 1. Campbell recalls that the then attorney general, Tom Watson, made a point that in so doing the Cabinet was not setting a precedent for coeducation.

"President Campbell replied that whatever the technical legal position might be, the action had, in effect, made the college coeducational. The public generally accepted this point of view."

In the spring of 1947 the Legislature officially made FSU coeducational and it became FSU.

"As a result of the major change in the nature and scope of the institution and of the phenomenal growth of the state of Florida in population and in resources, the development of the institution during these years was indeed exciting," said Campbell. "The students came in increasing numbers, and faculty members were added in numbers not previously dreamed of. The physical plant was expanded constantly, year by year, but always remained from three to five years behind the immediate demands."

Campbell had these words to say about college students in his introduction:

"Students by nature are inquirers. But they are more than inquirers. They are rebels in the sense that they do not accept everything from their elders without question."

"They are impatient with the status quo. They are conscious of the importance of determining their own courses of action."

Student Senate Sets Procedure

The second session of the 17th student senate was held in Longmire Auditorium yesterday afternoon with newly elected Student Body Vice President Joyce Killian presiding. The senate passed a bill establishing an Intercollegiate Association of Women Students to aid the IAWS action in her duties regarding a standing committee of Women's Senate.

The bill was introduced by Pam Mozur and sponsored by the Women's Senate.

A bill establishing a Senate-Student Relations Committee was also introduced and referred to the committee on Labor, Student Services and Education.

The proposed committee "will promote the Student Senate's activities to the student body and will act as a means of communication between the student body and the student senate."

The first resolution of the 17th Student Senate, establishing rules of procedure for the present session, was also passed.

that we're behind FSU all the way," said Miss Lewis.

"The bureau's main objective will be to have more student participation than ever before in supporting the football team," she added.

"In previous years, the rally bureau has not been used to its fullest capabilities. However, under the capable leadership of Eubanks, I feel that the bureau will function as it was intended to," Martin said.

He continued, saying, "Team spirit has to be good to win games but student spirit has to be just as good and is just as important."

Merting said in his opinion, "FSU's students don't deserve the type of team we have if they don't care enough to support it."

"The students in the stands and on campus who are not on the football team can't realize the sacrifices made by the members of the team."

"Members of the team need and appreciate the support of all the fans who are there to see any one realize," he continued.

"Let's show them how much we appreciate all of the work they do for FSU" pressed a hope that the reduced rates will enable students to use the newspaper for campaigning while remaining within the campaign budget limit.

A proposal was brought before the BOP by "Studio 3," a local advertising agency, that their agency be used by the "Flambeau." Although, the "Flambeau" has worked with national agencies in the past, they have never worked with local agencies.

A committee with Erik Collins, John Merting, president of the student body, and Ray Montgomery, advisor to student publications, was formed to investigate the feasibility of using a local agency and to report their findings at the next BOP meeting, Oct. 20.

The FSU Debate Squad was granted space in the 1964-65 "Tally-Ho." The BOP members ruled that since the debaters were engaged in intercollegiate competition, they should be free space.

Miss Pat Freeman, new editor of the "Florida Flambeau," was elected chairman of the Board.

Savage of the Week

McDowell Gets Title For Tackles

by RICH HALTEN
Flambeau Sports Writer

FSU Coaches have named their first "Savage of the Week." The accolade goes to junior linebacker Bill McDowell who led the Seminoles in pre-empting all Miami scoring plans.

McDowell, a Tallahassee boy who played for Leon, racked up a rockhard record of 11 tackles and eight assists, and more than once panicked Hurricane quarterback into throwing off target.

The "Savage" award has been a weekly presentation during the grid season to the top player on the defensive unit.

McDowell had plenty of competition for this week's achievement, the entire FSU defense playing an iron-clad opener. McDowell and friends held the Coral Gables Collegians to a minimum of yardage and shut down two touchdown drives in the second half.

McDowell's bone-crushing performance was a re-run for many coaches. The Seminole Linebacker of the same award last year, after an opening win over Miami,

Ashworth New Frosh Coach

FSU has hired a former standout guard to serve as Freshman Basketball Coach.

He's Rufus Charles Ashworth, 24, a playmaker and defense man on three FSU teams (1959-62), who for the past year has been head coach at Edison High School, Miami.

A Biology major, Ashworth graduated from FSU in April, 1963, with a degree in Science Education.

Ashworth's former teacher and new boss, Head Coach Bud Kennedy, said of his appointment, "He's good to have Rufus back. He has a fine back-ground, plenty of experience, and loves basketball. He knows our system well, and should do a fine job with the freshmen."

His FSU career spanned the beginnings of FSU's patented "Seminole Shuffle." Kennedy and Assistant Coach Hugh Durham first began experimenting with the offense in 1959-60. Ashworth's sophomore season.

Last season as a high school coach, he taught the offense.

As an All-City forward at Miami's Coral Gables High, Ashworth averaged 23 points a game.

He led the 1958-59 FSU freshman team in scoring, but was then moved from forward to guard.

Scouting Report

by JOHN MAJOREY
Flambeau Sports Writer

Texas Christian University, whose football team isn't supposed to raise too much of a commotion around the Southwest Conference this season, proved Saturday that it won't be an easy mark for any team this year in a 7-3 losing effort to favored Kansas.

Actually, the Horned Frogs of coach Abe Martin made it down to the Jayhawks' one-foot line before quarterback Randy Howard fumbled with 20 seconds remaining.

Martin returns 20 of 39 monogram winners off a squad that posted a 5-1 mark in 1963, but fumbled in All-American game at Tommy Crutcher, who will be a hard man to replace.

However, Martin feels he may have a runner of Crutcher's caliber in two-time starting halfback Jim Fauer. In fact, the Frogs' mentor has such big plans for his 185-pound co-captain he's come up with a new offense designed particularly with "letting Jim run loose" in mind.

Fauer, who broke FSU's back last year with a 46-yard pass interception, didn't waste any time against Kansas picking up 120 yards overland in 19 carries and booming out as 82-yard punt.

Since Fauer accounted for a majority of TCU's 159 yards on the ground, it is quite reasonable to assume that he is the man to watch. Too, the Horned Frogs recorded five more first downs than Gale Sayers and Co. and even won the aerial game, 12 to 69, but still finished second on the scoreboard.

The Frogs' defense, led by guard Steve Garmon and center Ken Hensen, didn't do a half bad job on the ever-tough Sayers, who is seeking his third straight big light rushing career.

Of the 6-6, 211-pounder, Martin says, "He's tremendous — steady, dependable and always giving 100 per cent, I only wish we had 10 more like him."

Hensen, at 6-6 and 250, is an excellent pro prospect who was drafted as a future by both pro leagues. A pre-season selection on Tom Harmon's All-American team for the second straight year, Hensen mans the middle of the Horned Frogs defense along with Garmon. Directing FSU's novelties, defense are 40's Ken Nix and Steve. Although Howard usually is the starting nod, it was junior quarterback Jim Fauer who closed the game.

Martin describes his Dugout as "formation with a team on one side at the same time. When the stress is on the pass, we close it's on the run, so we still have power and quickness to play off the same formation."

In the alignment, Fauer runs the tailback or main running position while Larry Bullock is full and Bobby Sanders is the yard-field goal.

Larry Perry (159) and Tom Reeves (188) fill the guard line. Henson is the center.

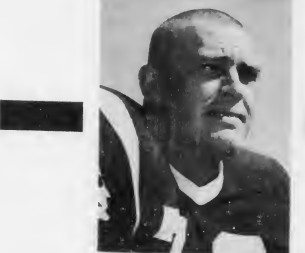

The starters shape up as experienced backup with ends, Hensen and Bullock. All were two-letters under Martin. In exception of the two flankers (Hensen and tackle Smith).

The Frogs face much the same challenge against FSU this year's meeting, when they will be a rain-soaked 13-0 when they go to Coach Bill Petersen's flying warriors.

Then, the Seminoles were the 24-0 rout of Miami. This time the Tribe prevailed, 14-0.

The setting will be the same same come Saturday — the scenery and a few of the changes will have changed, know it.

Meet The Seminoles

AVERY SUMNER

...has earned two letters at his defensive tackle position. He stands 6-2 and 228 pounds and uses his size effectively on enemy ball carriers, being credited with 126 tackles in two years.

Frosh Development Pleasing To Proctor

"I am pleased with the development of the squad," said freshman football Coach Proctor.

The freshmen are now preparing for their game against the freshmen of Miami. The game will be played Oct. 3, in Orlando.

In referring to Thursday's Red Shirt game in which the freshmen were defeated, Proctor said, that he felt the defensive interior line was strong and that the passing and kicking was equally good.

Proctor also mentioned a few individuals whom he thought did well. Doing the kicking was Thurston Taylor.

Passing and completing five of seven passes was Bill Burkhardt.

Other boys mentioned were Mike Burglar, linebacker, Bill Cox and Bill Gunter, halfbacks, and center Merton Wilcox.

Swimmers Wanted

FSU Swimming Coach Bill Stults has urged all men who are still really interested in being a member of the swim team to get in touch with him.

Stults may be reached at his office in Tully Gym, or when the team works out five day afternoons between two and six at the new University Union Pool.

New 'El Kenz' Opens Tonight In IS Center

There is a unique atmosphere, an oriental look, in the campus, and a goodly supply in Tallahassee. It is "El-Kenz", the International Center's oriental coffee shop, which opens Friday at 7 p.m. in the center's basement on W. College Ave.

Open to the public from 7-12:30 p.m. on Friday and Saturday nights, the coffee shop will serve different kinds of coffee, soft drinks, and pastries.

Miss Mary interpreted the name, and went down to the basement one day and it looked like a hidden place. It was dark and small, so I called it "El-Kenz". That's Arabian for "hidden place" where the character of the place is discovered by a "hidden person".

The dark, smoky look dominates the place. Lights reflect through red, orange, and green glass. Pillows and cushions are placed on the floor and will use small tables. The Japanese influence, and the customers will remove their shoes as they enter and place them in the racks. Entertainment will be furnished every night by the International Center members.

We want everyone to know that this is an informal place where people can come, with or without shoes, and meet people from all over the world," explained Himaya.

MISS SYLVIA FRIEDERICH

Concert Tonight: Opperman Hall

Mezzo-soprano Sylvia Friederich will present a recital in Opperman Music Hall at 8:15 p.m. tonight with Gordon Gibson as pianist.

A member of the faculty at the Hochschule Music School in Rochester, Miss Friederich has concentrated widely in the United States. She was a student of the soprano, Ernst Gerger, in Germany where she studied under a Fulbright fellowship.

Tickets at $1 each will be available at the door on the night of performance.

Circus Begins '64-65 Activities Under Haskins Leadership

The 1964-65 season of the student circus will begin this Saturday night, under the leadership of Jack Haskins, who organized the Circus in 1946.

Coach Haskins has selected Adrian Catanzar, a stand-out circus performer who got his degree for Florida State in April, as his assistant for this year's production of "Flying High."

Dance Planned

The University Union Dance Committee will sponsor a dance and political information session tomorrow night in the ballroom of the Union.

The dance will be held at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in Room 200 of Tully Gym, and interested students may attend.

Plans for the home show to be held in March will be discussed.

Although a deficit in the Circus budget has brought about a curtailment in this year's program, plans for a limited road show schedule will also be outlined.

Classes Give Plans

Classes at FSU have contributed nearly $5,500 towards the purchase of grand pianos for the University Union.

Miss Marie Williams, program director of the Union and advisor to classes, said that the money came from surpluses created by fund-raising projects.

The bulk of the money came from classes beginning with that of 1959. Approximately $700 came from balances in old funds going back to 1941.

The plans will be used to assist in the programs conducted in the Union.

High Cost Of College Education Offset By Financial Aid Office

According to FSU's Financial Aid office, a Florida resident, living in university housing and eating on the University Food Plan, will need at least $625 per trimester or $5000 to get a bachelor's degree at FSU.

The latest labor statistics indicate that a college education is a highly profitable investment. The average head of a household who is a college graduate is earning approximately $5,000 more each year than the average high school graduate household head.

borrow on long-term, low-interest loans which they repay later when they are earning better than they could while in college.

Because a college education is expensive, the FSU Financial Aid office, under the direction of Dr. James F. Carr, Jr., is assisting students to find many ways of meeting their expenses.

Approximately 500 FSU students receive scholarships each year. Last year $138,600 was distributed for scholarships here. This year Carr's office expects the amount to climb to $150,000.

The most popular type of financial assistance is student loans. More students are discovering that a good way to work one's way through college is after graduation. Students

Guest AUPS Columnist—Gov. Paul Fannin

Conservatism Is Not Archaic

Paul J. Fannin, Gov. of Arizona, is one of Presidential nominee Senator Barry Goldwater's strongest supporters. Gov. Fannin was instrumental in achieving for Senator Goldwater the Republican nomination. The Arizona governor is considered one of the more articulate advocates of conservatism.

Conservatism is today's challenge to the status quo. It is a dynamic challenge to the prevailing policies of liberalism, to the people who advocate and administer those policies, and to the theories behind them.

In simple terms, conservatism is an adherence to ideas and policies based on experience rather than theory.

Conservatives are constantly searching for new ideas, and in fact have probably originated most of the world's best thinking. Aristotle was a conservative. Cicero was a conservative. John Locke was a conservative. Immanuel Kant was a conservative. Edmund Burke was a conservative.

The list extends back through the most fertile periods of social, political, and economic expansion in the world's history—the 19th Century Industrial Revolution, the 18th Century Age of Reason, the development of science in the 17th Century, the tremendous worldwide economic and intellectual renaissance of the 15th and 16th Centuries, all the way back to Rome in the 2nd Century B.C. and Athens in the 5th Century B.C.

Conservatism is sometimes mistakenly considered an archaic form of modern political thought, which is ridiculous.

It is not, as its critics imply, a reactionary philosophy with the purpose of restoring an earlier social or political order any more than it is an effort to maintain the status quo. This is the argument used by the principal defenders of the status quo, and in the United States today they are the so-called liberals who have become fairly well-established in public administration, the news media, the arts, the academic profession, the professional labor field, social and welfare work, and some segments of American corporate management and finance.

Many of these people have something to lose personally if the status quo is changed.

Many others feel that a way of life which is familiar to them is being threatened by any deviation from the doctrinaire liberal views dominating their own professional and social environment.

It seems to me that liberalism as a form of modern political thought is acting as a deterrent to human progress in precisely those areas where progress is now most needed, and while unfortunately it cannot yet be called archaic, the sooner it is discarded for something more promising, the better.

Then we can begin to cope with the multitude of problems already left in its wake. The role of conservatism today is to accomplish this purpose.

Announcements

There will be a tea at Dorman Hall on Sunday, from 3-4 p.m., honoring the exchange students from the University of Massachusetts. Special guests will be the current exchanges, former students of FSU who participated in the exchange program, the selection committee, and the head of the program, Dr. Gifford Hale.

A training workshop for the 1965 "Tally Ho" staff will begin at 9 a.m. tomorrow in Longmire Auditorium. Any interested students may attend.

"Flambeau" feature writers will have a brief meeting at 4:30 p.m. today in 213 Longmire. Anyone interested may attend.

Appalachicola National Forest seven miles south of Tallahassee.

The Juniors will leave today and return Sunday morning. Their weekend will be devoted to training in tactics presently employed in the Regular Army.

Captain Edward J. Stein, a member of the Army Cadre at FSU, and the Officer in Charge of the Exercise explained the FTE as "more of an orientation to living under field conditions, incorporating as much as possible the things they have learned in class, in preparation for summer camp and later service in the Officer Corps of the U.S. Army."

The subjects in which the Juniors will receive instruction and practical application include: Preparation of a bivouac area, tactical movements, Platoon in the Defense, Light Machine Gun, Forming movement by the compass, and combat formations.

This exercise, the first of two to be this year, is an intrinsic part of the education of the ROTC Cadet in the advanced program. It allows the practical application of what they have learned in class. It encourages the cadet to develop some of the traits and standards of an officer in the U.S. Army, such as personal appearance, integrity and courtesy. If a cadet maintains his composure under adverse conditions of the field, the Army maintains, he has begun development as an officer.

The efforts of Captain Stein and the NCO's of the Detachment will be directed to this end.

Gymkana Travels

Members of Gymkana are leaving today for Sanford, to present several performances for the First Christian Church. Saturday matinees will be at 8 a.m. and 3 p.m. The troupe will return Sunday afternoon.

Johnson Speaks To Debaters

Robert Johnson of the Florida Industrial Commission spoke at the regular Tuesday night meeting of the FSU debate squad.

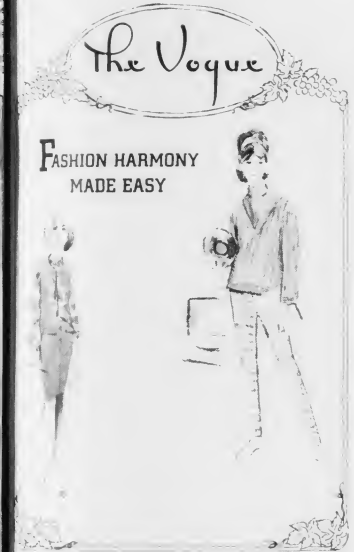

His discussion of poverty and unemployment was in keeping with the national inter-collegiate debate proposition—"Resolved, that the Federal Government should establish a national program of public works for the unemployed."

Johnson defined poverty as "a relative concept," basically the denial of elemental needs. He enumerated a number of common causes among which were psychological dependency, lack of motivation and social hostility.

The squad will meet again Tuesday night at 7 p.m. to divide into negative and affirmative teams.

Debators and others interested in the forensics program may check the bulletin board in the main hall of the History Bldg. periodically for information.

Who Out-Psyches Whom May Decide TCU Game

By BOB CORNET
Flambeau Sports Editor

It's awfully easy, when indulging in olympian prognostication, to regard games—in particular football—in a deterministic, behavioristic light. That is: football is a science dealing with factors of weight, size, speed and skill which, when placed in the proper equation will yield one inevitable result.

Unfortunately for science; but fortunately for fans, football is played by 22 men each with a particular psychology. Tomorrow night psychology will play a big part in the Seminole's meeting with the TCU Horned Frogs.

The Frogs will be thinking about a 7-3 loss to Kansas, a game that was decided by a TCU fumble on the one foot line in the last 20 seconds of play.

Tailback Steve Fauver will want to prove his 120 yards in 19 carries was no accident. He'll want to erase all memories of last week's fumbles after big gains.

FSU, a team that has existed on spirit and "moral victories" for the past several seasons, will be thinking too. They will be thinking about the past. Last year they lost to TCU 13-0 on a Fauver interception in a rain-soaked discouraging game. Steve Tensi never quite recovered from that game.

As last year the Seminoles are going into the game favorites after decisively beating Miami. Tensi and Fred Biletnikoff were amazing in that game both years. Once again the question is, can they keep it up. Last year they couldn't.

No Repeat

By DAVE ROSS
Flambeau Sports Writer

Hoping history will not repeat itself, Florida State's Seminoles will invade Texas Saturday night to besiege the Horned Frogs of Texas Christian University.

Last year after the Seminoles scalped George Mira and company the Frogs downed the Tribe 13-0 on a wet and muddy night at Campbell Stadium. Again the Seminoles are the favorites, but by a smaller margin, only three points.

Last year against Miami, Steve Tensi and Fred Biletnikoff were the offensive standouts while Bill McDowell had won the defensive "Savage" award. The story is the same this year.

However Head Coach Bill Peterson feels that the Seminoles are more versatile this year than last. He said, "Biletnikoff could be the best in the country, all we do is get the ball to him. We also have some running backs."

The running he mentioned was the return of Phil Spooner and the appearance of sophomore Lee Narmore. In between passes Narmore gained 56 yards to make him the state's leading rusher.

However Peterson was more pessimistic when he said, "This will be one of our key games. Since I've been at FSU we have never won a second game. If we get this one and start a winning tradition I'm sure the rest of the season will take care of itself."

When asked about the Horned Frogs Peterson said, "They are small but they have desire. A bad break helped Kansas defeat them last week and I'm sure they will be up for us."

"Halfback Jim Fauver hurt us last

Armstrong Explains Bank Problems

By STEVE PRENTICE
Flambeau Staff Writer

Poor machinery, constant employee turnover, and a heavy workload are the major reasons for problems facing the student depository this year, according to Mrs. Patti W. Armstrong, cashier.

"The machines we have now are in need of constant repair and a request for $16,000 worth of new equipment has been turned down," she said.

The three "Burroughs Sensomatic" calculating machines now in use at the depository normally sell for $2,000 each. Mrs. Armstrong explained, "But the company has offered a trade-in of only $400 each on them."

"With only one or two machines in operation at a time it is no wonder that so many students have to stand in line to get money or to make deposits," she added.

Mrs. Armstrong said another problem confronting the bank is that employees are not paid enough to continue working in the depository for any length of time.

"It takes approximately six months to train a person to handle the different phases of the operation here," she said, "and with the hours we have to work no one stays long enough to be efficient on the job to the degree necessary."

"I believe I could handle all the business of the bank with two additional full time workers and no student assistants," she said.

"We will have a better working arrangement when we move over to the new Student Union Building, but that will not alleviate the problem."

"The reasons for students having to wait in line are the poor machinery and the lack of adequate help, not the office area or the fact that we only have one door here."

Mrs. Armstrong outlined a plan which is being discussed by the administration which she feels will greatly improve the problems.

If the plan is approved, students would be allowed to cash student bank checks anywhere on campus. "By doing this, students would not have to wait in line here so much of the time," she said.

"Then if we could open the bank from 8:30 a.m. until 2:30 p.m. daily, the work of balancing the books could be done in the afternoon instead of after hours at night."

"At present, approximately 50 percent of the students use the banking facilities, Mrs. Armstrong said, "but who knows how much business they would stand in line on their money."

"I think the junior and senior students here are aware of the problems we are faced with and we get fewer complaints from them than we do from the new students who are unaware of the situation," she concluded.

Workshop Held

The Panhellenic Workshop, Saturday, was said to be "very successful" by Debbie Allen, president of Panhellenic of FSU.

The keynote speaker, Elmer Turner, dean of women at Stetson University, was unable to attend the workshop because of a family death. Sandra Smith, Panhellenic president at Stetson, spoke in her place.

The theme of the workshop was "From Competition to Co-operation." The two co-chairmen of the workshop were Diane Felsing and Ann Marsden.

The first discussion group was "from competition to co-operation in the scholastic world." This group was headed by Mrs. Ed Herp.

The discussion group headed by Mrs. Carl Kuersteiner dealt with "the collegiate world."

"The social world" was the subject of the discussion headed by Inez Johnson.

The fourth group, led by Mrs. Angus Laird, discussed "the outside world."

Need Workable Theories 'White Backlash' Affects Civil Rights

Of all of the human sciences one of the most vital is that of economics. Economic problems have bedeviled man throughout his history and remain to this day a major concern. Part of the economic problem is technology and production. Part of it is ethical in nature.

A major concern, however, is the nature of any system by which goods are produced and distributed to people. It is in this latter area which one would expect the discipline of economics to have presented a set of theories whose validity is verifiable in practice. The current controversies about economics make it readily apparent that verifiable hypotheses have not yet been produced.

I would suggest that one of the main reasons for the present lack of practical, useful theories comes from the methods of the discipline of economics. Fundamentally, the economic theorists have ignored the method of science and of empirical study.

In general, economists have been more concerned with developing a thoroughly consistent theory than with testing that theory by scientific means.

Similar criticism of traditional methods in economics is offered by E.C. Harwood:

"The methods of conducting theories applied by the Keynesians to a substantial extent by the classical economists were the older, now obsolete methods. 'Briefly, those methods included Aristotelian logic, introspection, what may be called secular revelation (a process at which Lord Keynes was especially adept), and the quest for certainty so long persisted in also by philosophers.

"Such methods give great weight to the internal logical consistency and general plausibility of an hypothesis but accord little weight to the desirability of testing its logical implications against measurements of economic changes before offering the hypothesis as a warranted assertion applicable to the problems of men."

With the passage and apparent success of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, it would seem appropriate that further guarantees would be enacted to assure Negroes the equality they demand. Significantly, such demands are now falling on deaf ears.

There is agitation for housing laws to end "de facto" segregation. It is demanded that the anti-discrimination clauses of federally backed housing loans be more rigidly enforced. There is pressure to draw the federal government into the controversy of bussing pupils to achieve racial balance in schools.

Spurred by the deaths this summer of the three Mississippi civil rights workers, there has been open avocation that the federal government should take over the Mississippi state government.

This pressure can be seen in other ways also. The recent rioting in northern cities seems to stem from the feeling that someone should "do something more" for the Negro. Civil rights groups are demanding "freedom now," but government officials don't seem to have an attentive ear. Because of this there have been cries of "sellout."

Why should this be so? The reason often given is political fear of the so-called white backlash. Actually this answer is reflective of a basic attitude in our culture. That is, a man will rebel when he feels he is being pushed. Naturally, the die-hard segregationist has always felt he is being pushed.

But now an increasingly larger number of people feel that the reasonable demands of Negroes have been met, at least for the time being. This is reflected in a recent poll that indicated that 83% of the U.S. population felt this way. Perhaps this is indicative of secret hope but it is nevertheless the way we feel. Because we are a nation of the majority, politicians will attempt to cater to demands the majority feels are excessive.

If these demands are excessive, "excessive" legislation is inevitable. A reaction is likely to ensue. The Negro movement had to be set the Negro movement had to be disobedience and picketing were staged by reaction groups. Thus of thing can be seen today in New York City in the reaction to bussing of pupils to achieve racial balance.

If the time should ever come when public sympathies do not lie with the Negro and his cause, the movement for equality of citizenship will indeed taken a setback; regardless of the morality of the situation. Unfortunately the ideal cannot be recouped with political reality.

There should be no surprise, then, that there has been little new civil rights legislation introduced or proposed. Clearly legislators don't want to get ahead of general public feeling. This issue for fear of causing reaction.

Negro leadership should also realize this. They must tread a fine line. On the one hand they must be their cause in the public eye, but on the other hand they must not go to such a degree that a general public reaction sets in.

By being the cause, Negro leadership shouldn't complain too often about a "sellout" but should realize that their ideals must be tempered to political reality.

Program Set

The Program Council of the University Union of the Union-FSU will hold a student orientation meeting tomorrow at 7 p.m. in the "C" in the Union.

Students interested in serving on Union committees may attend. Views for committee members will be held after the meeting. A student building is planned.

Committee chairmen are: Gladys Harrison, dance; Ray Davis, foreign; Jan Walker, hospitality; Jeanne Williams, informal entertainment; Dee Hufford, literature.

To the Editors:

Last weekend's campus flick, "Gentlemen's Agreement," was shown at a most appropriate time—the end of the long, hot summer. It showed the struggle of the few who human rights and equal opportunity in our country.

It pointed out that people who bear a joke about some person of a different race or religion from their own do not stand up and take some action against this side effect of bigotry, hate, prejudice, and discrimination, those who think they are fair and just God-fearing people are really helping the side of prejudice.

There is no question in my mind that the mainstream of people in the South are part of the class, segregationist, No. The majority of people aren't Klansmen, but who controls a city when there is a showdown between civil rights and the closeted society?

How can there be law enforcement when even a state patrolman thinks he's "Mr. Injustice" when you

Announcement

Freshman Flunkies meeting for off-campus freshman women and those in temporary housing will be at 4:30 in Longridge Auditorium.

An exhibition of modern Spanish painting is currently being displayed at the University Art Gallery above the Seminole Club.

When visiting the exhibition, the average student may wonder why these modern paintings look the way they do. Dr. Gular Bosch, Dean of the Art School, can perhaps give the most authoritative answer to our questions about modern Spanish art.

First of all, she says that modern art is perfectly serious and sincere in its development toward destruction. Contemporary man is characterized by a drive to explore the unknown.

Abstraction in modern painting is synonymous to exploration of space by modern science. The characteristic is easily seen in the works by Tharsart featured in the present exhibit.

Also, modern art "expresses a return to humanity." It attempts to regain the human which has been smothered by the confusion of contemporary existence.

temporary existence.

For example, Todor has tried to incorporate the modern machine into a human symbol. This effort is found in four of his works at the exhibit. Another theme in modern art is the "loneliness of people." This is expressed especially well by Gudi, Her lonely human figures are restless because they have some need that can't be fulfilled in our materialistic society.

Dr. Bosch also gave her opinion of the art exhibit: "It's a good exhibit to introduce students to contemporary art. Some of the paintings aren't the best, but these paintings are so expensive that we were lucky to get them."

Featured are seven contemporary Spanish artists: Gudi, Claret, Gudi, Gudi, Tapies, Tharsart, Todor, and Vilacasa. The exhibit will be at F.S.U., until October 6.

Whatever your opinion of modern art, the exhibit should prove interesting and stimulating.

Off-Campus, Freshman Candidate Letters

MICKEY MONCHICK
Class President
Mickey Monchick

Dear Editor:
The interest of better Student Government at FSU, I would like to urge everyone to vote in the coming election. Student Government is only as strong as the people it serves, so success or failure depends upon you, the students. As you know, the regulation and control of over 12,000 students is no part-time job. It takes the wholehearted effort of really experienced leaders to make Student Government a success.
Experience is the real key to success in the coordination of campus activities and the person best able to enter you his qualifications in this regard is Mickey Monchick. Mickey has served as vice president of the Florida Association of Student Councils which is an organization of some 100 schools and he has also served as president of his own high school's student body. He was also a member of the Governor's Youth Advisory Council. Because of these leadership qualities and others, Mickey was selected for the 1964 National Leadership ship Contest.

These experiences have given Mickey a large understanding of the problems confronting the student body and the freshman class in particular.

We hope that you will all go to the polls on this Tuesday and think seriously about the future of FSU Student Government and about the qualifications of those whom you select to lead you.

Sincerely yours, Hugh Burke,

Lief Erickson, Freshman Class President, 1962

Class Vice President Nick Friedman

To the Editor:
With our student elections forthcoming, something should be done to inform students of the qualification and ability of candidates. Being a freshman, I am mostly concerned with my class elections and with the office of vice president in particular. As a Texan, I realize that size is impressive, but in choosing a candidate one should be wise and not judge by size. Instead, one should judge by quality. And that makes Nick Friedman the best candidate for the office of freshman class vice president. Nick was parliamentarian and vice president of the student body at Miami Edison Senior High School (where he served as acting president for more than one semester). He was also vice president of the Dade Youth Council, president of Discussion Club, page editor of his school newspaper, and a member of H-Y and Key Club.
Of course, there is one drawback—Nick is only 5'2". But, even though I am a Texan, I will forgive anyone voting for "Big" Nick Friedman for freshman vice president.

Off-Campus Senator Dutch Powers

To the Editor:
As your off-campus senator, Dutch Powers will represent you by initiating action for:

1. Fairer apportionment of the off-campus district, giving you more Senate representation.

2. Student government action on off-campus housing policies concerning upkeep of housing during occupancy, and fair consideration of problems of both students and landlords on matters of housing, rent rates, and upkeep.

3. Improved communications between off-campus students and myself as your senator by polling off-campus students by telephone, on legislation before the Senate which concerns them; making scheduled, pre-planned, personal appearances before off-campus groups to discuss all legislation, past, present and future.

4. A strong, overall program to make FSU's image first in Florida by promoting a growing interest in FSU among the state's junior colleges and their respective student governments and by soliciting aid from junior college students in their home areas to promote FSU's image among legislative and civic leaders.

I will have a qualified, efficient staff to assist me in making sure that my vote in the Senate firmly reflects the interests of off-campus students.

Dutch Powers

Off-Campus Senator Bill Falck

To the Editor:

What are the vital issues of the current campaign? There are none. What are my fellow candidates saying? Nothing. As an old time politician what am I saying while camped here in my smoke-filled room with an election tomorrow? Actually, very little.

There isn't much to say. The position of off-campus senator is a relatively minor one. But I do feel that in a race involving 17 candidates for eight seats in the senate, I have the best record of public service.

In the college I transferred from I was a senator, class president and also secretary of the senate. Here at FSU I was an administrative assistant to the president specializing in proposed legislation and constitutional revision. The University Religious Council has seen me as a delegate to the General Assembly, a North Carolina college published a faculty handbook I had written. The Florida Free-Legal Association elected me president in March.

These are the accomplishments of a proven administrator and a public servant. Tomorrow, please remember to vote, and to mark your ballot for Bill Falck, Off-Campus Senator.

Magnificent Seven Stop Frogs As Seminoles Win, 10-0

By RICH HALTEN
Flambeau Sports Writer

"The Magnificent Seven," Seminole defensive front wall, is shaping up as the toughest tribe of Indians since Custer's last stand.

This band of beef jogged off the field Saturday night in sweetening Fort Worth satisfied with the fact that neither of FSU's first two opponents have been able to get a single point on the board.

Led again by the ferocious play of Bill McDowell, the Seminole Defenders were instrumental in wrapping up a 10-0 victory by containing what was believed to be one of the most explosive ground attack in the tough Southwest, if not the nation.

McDowell, whose linebacking job against Miami won him the "Seminole of the Week" award, pounced on two TCU bobbies and crashed through to block a fourth quarter Frog field goal attempt that could have thrown the contest into a deadlock.

TCU's defense unfortunately keyed two, sometimes three, men on Fred Biletnikoff. The flankerback was only able to get free for two receptions.

Fortunately the Seminoles racked up over 130 yards passing with short screen throws to ends Dawson, Wachtel, and Floyd, and backs Spooner and Narramore.

FSU won the opening coin flip but with a defensive game in mind they elected to defend and let TCU receive. After a 15 yard penalty, TCU's versatile Jim Fauver punted from his own end zone and the Seminoles set up shop at the Frog's 48.

The tribe cranked up its ground game and moved to the 23 on the running of Spooner and Narramore. A Steve Tensi bullet to Jungs Wachtel gave FSU first and goal at the eight.

On two runs and one pass reception Narramore edged to the one foot line. Fourth down the Horned Frogs ganged up on the right side to stop Narramore cold and take over possession.

Finding themselves 99 and two-thirds yards away from the Seminole goal line the Texans elected to punt from their end zone again. A Tensi pass was intercepted but the Frogs could not move. Fauver punted a third time and FSU got rolling again.

Tensi couldn't find Biletnikoff open, and turned to chunking short gainers to Dawson, Floyd, and Spooner.

With fourth down on the TCU 19 Les Murdock showed up on the Fort Worth turf and put a three pointer through the uprights.

Penalties on both teams nullified the points. But after a successful warm-up Murdock boomed his second placement even better and the tribe got three points, their first against a Southwest Conference opponent.

Paul Spooner ran in the games' lone touchdown with nine minutes left in the fourth quarter. His six yard run off right guard capped a drive started at the Tribe's 27 after McDowell had blocked a Frog field goal attempt.

FSU Sports Day Co-Eds Make Victory Sweep

by MELODIE BETTS

FSU girls made a clean sweep of all events in the Sportsday Tournament against Miami Dade and Gulf Coast Junior Colleges.

The games got underway Friday evening with Garnet playing Miami Dade in volleyball. It was a hard fought match with Garnet winning the first game 15-9. Then, in a seesaw battle, Dade edged a 17-15 victory behind Martha Meads' serve, but FSU bounced back to a 15-6 match win.

FSU Gold team smashed the Dade "A" Team 15-11 and 15-0 behind the powerful serve of Rene Washington and the spiking plays of Chris Fadgett.

In the only basketball game played Friday, FSU Garnet won by default in a game with Miami Dade. With one minute left in the third quarter, Dade was leading 21-16 when their high scorer Dorothy Braswell fouled out of the game following two previous teammates, thus leaving the team with only four players.

Saturday morning found more of the same as FSU continued to dominate the courts winning their volleyball games against Dade and Gulf Coast. Jodie Harris and Sandi Lee led the Garnet teams in scoring. Joyce Vincent from Dade was high single scorer with 12 points in one game when they defeated FSU 15-10 only to lose the match.

The Gold Basketball Team ran all over Miami Dade "B" squad as they racked up a 76-8 total. Captain Judy Bense led the attack with 15 points followed by Mary Gerding, 14, and Di Barnhart, 12.

The Gold team defeated Dade "A" 37-9 to add the finishing touches to complete FSU victory.

The bowling competition pitted the teammates against one another. Top honors, Nancy Cooper and Melodie Betts, in the morning competition, Cooper led with a 192-10. Betts had a 181-290.

Intramural Corner

The Racquettes announced a week-end of mixed tennis matches beginning October 2 for all tennis-minded students. There is an entry fee of $.50 per player. Registration will take place in the Women's Gym, room 201. All entries must be in by 5 p.m., September 25. All students are eligible to participate except varsity and freshman tennis players. The director of the tournament is Miss Ann Lankford, ext. 2086.

Johnson Asks Merting To Washington For Outstanding Students Reception

PRESIDENT JOHN MERTING

THE FLORIDA FLAMBEAU

Published Daily By The Students Of Florida State University

Attorney General Scott Tells Policy Concerning Activities

by CHARLES STANSFIELD
Flambeau Staff Writer

Attorney General L. Scott outlined the policy of his office today concerning the activities of students and organizations on campus.

Students are free to organize and to join organizations for educational, cultural, political, religious, and social purposes. Yet they are free within the limits imposed by their responsibility to each other and the structural life of the University," commented Scott.

CJ, Democrats Schedule Rally

The Young Democrats and the Young Republicans will sponsor a political action off-rally tonight at the Freeman Amphitheatre at 8 p.m. featuring Doyle Conner, State Commissioner of Agriculture, and James H. Pettee, Jr., an attorney, who is the State Secretary of the Young Democrats of Florida.

Guest speaker, Dr. Elton L. Harrison, professor of government, will make the case the Democratic Party has done for the youth of Florida.

Harrison, current president of the Young Democrats, will serve as the spokesman for the group. Harrison promised that the off-rally will be "brisk and brief." Free campaign buttons will be given to students who attend the rally. Pettee has served on the staff of Gov. Averell Harriman and Gov. Adlai Stevenson.

President Lyndon B. Johnson has extended an invitation to FSU Student Body President John Merting to attend a White House reception for outstanding student leaders from representative colleges and universities throughout the country Saturday.

During the reception, talks will be made by President Johnson, Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara, Secretary of Labor Willard Wirtz, and Ambassador Adlai Stevenson.

After the reception, Merting will attend a buffet dinner and entertainment at which the President's daughter Lynda will be hostess.

In a letter written to FSU President Gordon Blackwell, President Johnson asked that he suggest a college student from FSU who, while maintaining a good academic record, has also shown special qualities of good character, leadership, and interest in college and public affairs.

"I have a great interest in the young leaders who are emerging in our colleges and would like to get to know them and their thinking as much as I can," continued President Johnson.

"I want to leave to you the designation of the fine young man or woman whom you feel would well represent your student body," added the President. "Please inform me by telegram at the earliest possible time the name and address of the student you designate."

"My family and I look forward with particular pleasure to this occasion, and I warmly appreciate your cooperation."

President Blackwell nominated John Merting by telegram to Washington immediately. Although President Johnson asked that Blackwell consider his letter as Merting's invitation to the White House, the Student Body President will receive a formal invitation sometime this week.

Johnson had suggested in his letter that the student selected "might be the president of the student body, the senior class, or of the undergraduate council, or a person who holds no high student office."

The expenses of Merting's trip to Washington will be borne by the University.

In accepting the invitation, President Merting expressed great pleasure in being selected.

"This certainly came as an unexpected but welcome surprise."

Rule Confusing Says Candidates

Dutch Powers, candidate for off-campus senator said today, "The statute describing precinct 14, the off-campus precinct, is grossly misleading to both candidates and voters."

"Many of the candidates running for off-campus senator and many of the students who will be voting are under the impression that students residing in the Women's Off-Campus Multiple Housing Units will be able to vote for off-campus senators. They will not," Powers said. The Women's Off-Campus Multiple Housing area was placed in its own precinct, precinct 24, for the 1964 elections. Previously, students in that area voted in the off-campus precinct.

According to information I have been able to gather," Powers said, "the reason for placing the women's housing in a separate precinct was that they come under the regulation of the university housing office. However, the same residences were under the same regulations in previous years when students living there voted in the off-campus precinct."

The statute states, "Those students living in privately owned residences shall not be considered members of a particular living area, but shall be regarded as day students and will be members of a special precinct for day students."

"Many student residences, including some fraternities, are privately owned," Powers said.

Adams Here Today

Florida's Secretary of State Tom Adams will be guest speaker at the International Student Center at FSU today at 11:30 a.m.

He will welcome all foreign students to Florida and Florida State University and also speak on the Florida-Columbia Alliance Program of the Secretary of State's Office, according to administrative assistant, Susan Taylor.

Adams will also touch on Florida's International Exchange Student Program, said today.

Student Body President John Merting will also attend the meeting and will make a brief speech to the students.

Members of the Florida Press will be in the hall, and it has been requested that as many FSU students as possible attend the meeting.

Off-Campus, Freshman Candidate Letters

Frosh Class Veep Jeff Beck

To the Editor:

Today all of you will be called upon to make an important decision concerning the election of your future vice president. The week of hard campaigning and work for the vice presidential candidates is over and many of you will do not know who to consider as your choice.

At this time I would like to tell you, whom I did not have the pleasure of meeting, my qualifications for the office of vice president.

I have served as vice president of the junior class and president of the senior class at my high school which I feel gives me the necessary experience as a student body officer. I was elected co-chairman of the first Republican Mock Convention ever held at a prep school in this country. I was awarded a National Merit Scholarship letter of commendation and I participated in the National Honor Society. I was honored to serve as Secretary of Alpha Omega Religious Organization.

I maintained a 3.7 overall high school grade average. I certainly feel that I am well qualified but these qualifications do not make a good

Sec. Social Chairman Mary Law

MARY LAW

To the Editor:

I will serve I have heard it said around campus the Freshman Class officers serve only as figurehead leaders here at FSU. I feel that as a class officer I will be your representative and when elected I intend to do so actively and forcefully, not figuratively.

I can do the job and have the experience to guarantee that it will be done well. I was elected secretary of my class and was an active member of hand for eight years.

In hand I received twenty Superior rating medals and three achievement letters. During this time I held the positions of solo clarinetist, rank leader, and was selected to perform with the United States Air Force band.

I was also a member of the All-State sightreading clinic. For four years I worked in the Cotillon Club in which I was chaplain and the chairman of the homecoming skit. Besides these activities, I participated actively in the student government and was secretary of the Y-teens.

If you elect me secretary-social chairman of the Freshman Class, I will work to promote strong school spirit among the students and will seek to make the class of '68 outstanding among Freshman classes. Let's all start now to build that spirit and get out and vote. And remember my name, Mary Law, for secretary-social chairman.

Mary Law

Frosh Class Pres. Jim Jones

To the Editor:

FRESHMEN, go to the polls and vote. You are responsible to see that the right people are chosen to represent, lead, and WORK for you. It does not matter who is elected, but rather what that person will do for you the student. Do you want to elect a personality, or do you want to put a man in the office who will work for you? I ask you to consider this question as you go to the polls.

As a willing worker, I also ask you to consider me for your next class president. Thank you.

Freshman Class President

JIM JONES

Off-Campus Senator Larry Spalding

To the Editor:

There are some candidates who do not have the vanity to plaster their pictures over the entire campus. These people should be noted. They seem to represent that portion of the candidates who have approached this election with maturity.

I am seeking election as off-campus senator because I can represent the off-campus students as well as or better than the other candidates. I especially understand the problems confronting students who have served in the armed forces and students who are transfers from a junior college or another university because I am both. I have found that the problem of off-campus housing control and restrictions is one which particularly needs action.

Because I have worked with or for student government in each of the schools I have attended, since junior high, and because I was, specifically, a student senator at the University of Chicago, I feel I am capable of serving well both off-campus students and Florida State University.

Larry Spalding

JOHN MAYNARD

Off-Campus Senator Mel Smith

MEL SMITH

To the Editor:

Within the walls of the Student Senate is found the most representative pulse and echo of student opinion. This branch is linked to the individual student more directly than any other. In the framework of our student government, its members must possess a constant awareness of the needs and desires of the student body, and be able to translate these needs into effective legislation.

In seeking a Senate seat from precinct 14, my objective is to be part of a productive Senate, to legislate upon and enact progressive far-sighted legislation that reflects the desires and needs of the student body.

There exists a need for more effective legislation encompassing the entire realm of student life. I stand on these needs and on a program that will bring effective legislation to these areas.

1. CAMPUS TRANSPORTATION between buildings is a major concern of the student body, this a concern of mine. This problem calls for Senate action.

2. JUNIOR COLLEGES are playing an ever increasing role in our higher educational system. There is a definite need for a more progressively developed program for assimilating these junior college transfers into the Florida State University student body. This, too, calls for effective Senate action.

3. COMMUNICATIONS: there is an urgent need for improved communications between the college campus and the off-campus student. This also call for decisive Senate action. I seek to represent the off-campus students of precinct 14 in both my legislative program and actions. I seek to serve in your behalf and in your interest.

Mel Smith

Frosh Class Pres. John Maynard

To the Editor:

Today the Freshmen of Florida State will choose their class President from a field of several candidates.

The importance of this election to the several thousand Freshmen cannot be minimized. There are many facets of the class program which many students will realize exist.

The next Freshman Class President will find that his position is related to the operation of the Student Council, the body in which all the officers perform their duties. The elected leader of his class, as a Freshman President will serve the Student Alumni Affairs Committee, and will share the responsibility for promoting class spirit and interest in alumni affairs.

In addition he will share the planning and execution of the Homecoming Activities Program given for the benefit of the student body, and the coordination of the Christmas festivities.

As a candidate for this office, I hope to get the opportunity to set out several of my ideas. My effort will be to increase the influence of the Freshman Class within the InterClass Council, and that our class can be properly represented in these affairs. I will work within the Student Council to promote bringing more student entertainment to this campus.

I hope that you will serve as a senator. Mel Smith, your elected representative will be to the polls and vote.

John Maynard

Frosh President Buster White

To the Editor:

Campaigning for the office of Freshman President is the most difficult thing I have ever attempted. Why is it difficult because of the fact that there are real issues and in order to be the voter, I, as a candidate, must visit every dormitory and meet as many of you as possible. With this kind of undertaking it is impossible for the majority of students acquainted with the candidates. If I am elected I will devote my time and energy to the duties of the office in my power to provide a sensible assembly of candidates in the coming elections.

Second, I plan to initiate a drive to raise a greater sum to help deserving freshmen of this university. I raised $600 for my class alone.

BUSTER WHITE

high school and I have the knowledge to help you get a scholarship. When you go to the ballot please keep me in mind. I dedicate myself in service to you.

Buster White

Off-Campus Senator Conrad Bell

To the Editor:

Why do we have a student government? The usual answer is to give students a voice in the administration of university affairs and, of course, leadership development should be included. But reason enough for it is that it provides a training situation for our future federal and state leaders.

Many of the students who show interest and take an active part in student government today will make your laws tomorrow.

Problems faced by our senators on campus many times differ only in degree from problems faced by senators in Congress and our state legislatures.

A good example of this is the problem of transportation. One doesn't have to look far to find misrepresentation in our state. We also have this problem on our own campus.

Let's all start now to realize in senate that the day students are misrepresented in number within the senate. This will be one challenge for me if I am chosen to represent you in student senate.

A serious consideration from you will be greatly appreciated.

Our FSU Depts Go Over Goal

Four departments have exceeded their goal in the drive for $19,000 for the 1964-65 campaign gets underway.

Departmental committees met late last week in session, and, although the next meeting was scheduled for today, FSU Co-Chairman Grover Rogers said the following departments had passed their goal by Thursday:

The Inter-Departmental Office, Mrs. Patricia Appleby, solicitor; Food Services, Henry Stokes; Planning Services, J. R. Kasten; and Personnel, Mrs. Patricia Johnson.

Dr. Rogers, dean of FSU's School of Business Administration, urged that the metal-polymer collectors push the campaign and put FSU over the top early in the campaign. The drive is part of a nationwide United Fund goal.

CONGRATULATIONS

Coeds Lead FSU Sailors To FICR Win

Gail Halsey and Pat Twitchell, FSU's coed skippers, led the Tribe sailors to victory Sunday on Lake Bradford in the first Florida Intercollegiate Championship Regatta.

FSU piled up 74 1/4 points in two days of competition to beat second place Miami Dade Junior College with 69 points. Dade was disqualified in the last race for tacking too closely.

The University of Florida took third place by accumulating 59 1/2 points. St. Petersburg Junior College was next with 46 1/4 points, followed by Florida Presbyterian 40, and St. Johns River Junior College, 26.

TWO CO-ED SKIPPERS

...took the tillers for FSU Saturday and Sunday in the first annual Florida Intercollegiate Sailing Championship Regatta on Lake Bradford here.

Miami Dade skipper, Dan Brown took individual honors in Division A with 37 1/4 points. Halsey, with 40 points won the Individual honors in Division B.

By winning the meet FSU will become the first holders of the Michael Kasha perpetual trophy, Kasha is the FSU team's faculty sponsor.

Halsey and Twitchell were the first women skippers to sail for FSU. They won this position by defeating eight male skippers in preliminary competition last weekend.

Among those sailors that they defeated was Herb Elphick, Commodore of the FSU Sailing Club and an expert sailor. Elphick placed third as a team captain recently in the North American Intercollegiate Championships at Seattle and Vancouver.

Sunday's regatta was sponsored by the Tribe sailing club. The racers used the FSU Flying Dutchman Junior boats on the Lake Bradford Reservation.

FSU Opponents Produce Upsets

FSU's future opponents had a successful weekend, going four and two in pulling off two major upsets.

The University of Kentucky, the Tribe's homecoming opponent, surprised number one team Mississippi 27-21. Houston upset Texas A. and M. 10-0; N.C. State beat Clemson 9-0; and Florida whipped Mississippi 16-13.

New Mexico State, Saturday's home opener for the Seminoles, went down under a 76-0 barrage thrown at them by Utah State. Virginia Tech dropped a 38-21 decision to Wake Forest.

Here is the Seminoles' schedule for the remainder of the season, Saturday--New Mexico State, here, Oct 10--Kentucky, here, Oct 24--VT at Blacksburg, Oct 31--So., Mississippi, here, Nov 7--Houston at Houston, Nov 14--N.C. State, here, Nov 21--Florida, here.

Flambeau SPORTS

Spooner Grinds Out Lone TD As Offense Stalls At Goal Line

By JOHN MADOREY
Flambeau Sports Writer

If Lee Narramore had been successful at his second blast at the rugged TCU line Saturday night, no telling what the final outcome would have been.

As it was, Steve Garmon, Ken Henderson and Co. held on the one-foot line and the Seminoles were to sweat until Phil Spooner crushed through the same spot with a little more than nine minutes showing on the Amon-Carter Stadium clock.

"That re-ill, fired them up," head football coach Bill Peterson said yesterday via The Bill Peterson Show on Channel 6. "They really felt they had something to play for when they held down there."

From that moment on the Horned Frogs of Abe Martin played as if Texas provided the competition with halfback Jim Fauer shouldering the brunt of the offense on his small 5-9 frame.

But Fauer in all his glory was not good enough, not by the calculations of the Seminoles' "Magnificent Seven."

Led by linebacker Bill McDowell for the second straight week, the "shaven seven" limited the Frogs to 112 yards on the ground and 50 by air.

It was McDowell's Hacked Kick at the TCU 24 that led to the Seminoles' only six-point maneuver of the night. The other three points came via the accurate shoemanship of senior Les Murdock, whose 33-yarder held up for three periods before Spooner's plunge terminated the Seminoles' first sustained drive of the year.

The FSU ground attack didn't scare anybody but then again it didn't have to. With Steve Tensi finally getting down to business, the air arm furnished 135 yards on 11 of 21 tries. The ever-calm Tensi proved that Fred Bilenkoff wasn't the only pass-catcher on the offensive crew as he repeatedly threw to ends Red Dawson and Don Floyd.

Bilenkoff, who was fired at a few times during the contest, managed to pull in a pair which wasn't bad considering he had two men on him on first and second down and as many as four in a third-down passing situation.

Vote!

While it should hardly be necessary to say in the middle of one of the most hotly contested presidential races in the history of this republic, nevertheless, we should like to remind the legal voters of FSU that Saturday is the last day of voter registration for the November elections.

Without registering one will not be allowed to vote. Americans are in the unique position of being their own governors, in that they choose their own leaders.

If they, through negligence, give up this birthright, the consequences are obvious. They will be ruled, not the rulers.

Exercise your right and your responsibility. Register and then vote.

This principal of responsibility carries over into campus politics, too. Here all students have an opportunity to elect their representatives to Student Government.

Only through full and active support can this be an effective legislative body. The Student Government can be a significant voice in campus affairs, promoting student welfare and securing services for the students, but only through student support.

In the Friday run off of this year's Fall Election, FSU students will have the opportunity to make their choices known for the 1964 Homecoming Queen and those precinct and freshman class senators and freshman class officers who did not obtain a majority sufficient to be elected yesterday.

Get out and vote.

It's ELEMENTARY

explained Mr. Jack Eichinger of FSU, developer of the new chart of electron configurations of the elements.

Periodic Table Undergoes Alterations

The periodic table of elements which has been a familiar wall decoration in chemistry and physics lecture rooms since it was developed by the Russian scientist Mendeleev in 1868, now is being supplemented and in some instances replaced by a new table of elements devised by an FSU chemist.

The new table of elements, developed by Dr. Jack Eichinger Jr., and first used in 1957, provides the same information as Mendeleev's table, the atomic number, atomic weight and the symbolic name of each of the elements, and it carries additional information in the same amount of space.

Called a table of the "electron configuration of the elements," the table developed by Eichinger charts in readily usable form a vast array of knowledge about the electronic structure of atoms which has been gained largely in the last 30 years—the atomic age.

"Our table was simply an effort to simplify the teaching of chemistry to beginners," said Eichinger, a 60-year-old professor of chemistry. "We used to teach the periodic table, then the properties of elements and finally some information about atomic structure."

In the past several years, principally since the discovery of the neutron in 1932, more and more information has been discovered about atomic structure. To a great extent a student had to learn much of this by rote memory and the problem of learning became greater as new chemical knowledge was taken down to the freshman teaching level, and even into high school classes.

"A table of the sort which was developed here attempts to make this knowledge available to a student more by reasoning than by memory," Eichinger said. Eichinger's table began to take hold fast, it is now used in classrooms over the FSU campus and has been carried also to other college classrooms and to high school classrooms in Florida.

Many universities, colleges and high schools in the country use the chart and it is printed on the inside cover of several chemistry textbooks for high school or for college classes.

The chart was copyrighted by the Division of Chemical Education of the American Chemical Society in 1957 and is distributed out of Tallahassee by a corporation called Charts, A Boston distributor of scientific teaching aids, Cambosco Scientific Co., Inc., now also has begun distribution.

Eichinger has just returned from two years of teaching at Baghdad. As a result of the introduction of the chart there, it now is expected to be distributed through schools in much of the Arab world.

Eichinger's chart arranges the elements horizontally by their atomic number, from one for hydrogen to more than 100 for the most recently discovered element.

It is arranged vertically according to the "electron shell" their electrons occupy within the atom. The shells are numbered from one to seven, and so on, by the atom, according to distance from the nucleus, the more distant shells having more electrons.

Eichinger wrote an explanatory pamphlet to go with the chart and this, "Surveying The Elements With The Electron Chart," has been translated into Arabic and is being distributed at Baghdad along with Eichinger's chart.

The FSU chemist, a member of the faculty here since 1946, took leave in August, 1962, for a two-year assignment as one of nine American professors assigned to an engineering and physical science teaching program of the Administration For International Development administered by the University of Texas at the University of Baghdad.

One of the things Eichinger started at the university was a training program for high school teachers of chemistry modeled on the National Science Foundation institutes conducted in this country.

The AID program, bringing some American knowledge and methods in engineering and physical science education to the Arabs, is only repayment in part of a 1000-year-old debt to Arab scholars, Eichinger said.

European scholars of the Middle Ages got much of their knowledge of Greek thought from Arabian translations, he said, and Arabs also contributed much original knowledge in mathematics, medicine and other fields.

"I had one big surprise," said Eichinger. "I had always heard about the Arabic numerals and expected to find the same characters we use for one, two, three, etc. Only the one and the nine are identical, however. The Arabs use a reversed three for four and a 0 for five, for instance."

A specialist in chemistry education, Eichinger has been in charge of the basic chemistry courses here for several years. He's the co-author of a widely used high school textbook, Chemistry and You, which has gone into several editions. In 1956, he became executive secretary of the Nuclear Development Commission of Florida, which prepared a program of nuclear education for which the 1957 Legislature appropriated $5 million to the universities. While FSU's nuclear research program was being organized, he served as coordinator.

He's a native of Iowa and received both his bachelor's degree and Ph.D. degree from Iowa State University.

'Coach Pete' Not Writing Off NMSU

Once-thrashed New Mexico State brings its football team here Saturday night as Tallahassee's large and small will try to fill newly-expanded Doak Campbell Stadium.

While everyone figures the Seminoles will have a field day, this could not be the case as the Aggies of coach Warren Woodson will be out to rebound from a 76-0 setback at the hands of Utah State last week.

Whether the Aggies are that bad or Utah State is that good, remains to be seen, but one thing's for sure--Coach Bill Peterson isn't letting up one iota this week.

Peterson is planning on going into the Kentucky Homecoming encounter with a 3-0 record and with possibly the only major college eleven in the south still unscathed upon.

Woodson, a 32-year veteran of college grid wars, will counter with the best he's got--which seems to be razor-thin at a glance.

The originator of the Winged-T offense while the head coach of Hurricane Simmons, Woodson has only three seniors off a squad that posted a 3-6-1 record and hardly hopes to do much better in 1994.

The Aggies did however, win their first game of the season downing Arlington State, 3-0, on a 36-yard field goal by Lou DiMartino with 11 seconds remaining.

Gone from the '63 squad is James Preacher Pilot, the two-time national rushing champion, along with quarterback Armando Alba and their apparent to Pilot's vacated shoes is JC All-American Gary DeBernard (5-11, 200) who will line up in the tailback position in Woodson's Winged-T setup.

Also counted on to shoulder the brunt of the offensive load is junior letterman Joe Johnson, who had a fine year as a soph gaining 499 yards in 83 assignments. A 60-minute man, Johnson also plays linebacker on offense.

The heights reached by Woodson's eighth edition, may well depend on senior quarterback Rich Norman, who spent a majority of last year as a back-up man for Alba. Rated as a consistent performer, Norman did manage to complete 18 of 40 tosses for two touchdowns last year.

Senior tackle Co-captain Carl Bage heads up a relatively green line along with letterman Gene Molewski (6-1, 215) and Will Hudgins (6-0, 235).

The guards boast considerable weight with Willie Adams and Owen Thomas going 225 and 225, respectively. At 6-0, 210, Wenell Chambers is called by Woodson as the best center he's had at NMSU.

Flambeau SPORTS

BOB CRENSHAW

...is New Mexico State's top receiver at left end. The 6-2, 200-lb. Crenshaw is also rated as a top blocker by the NMSU coaches. He handles the chores for the Aggies in addition to his other duties.

Intramural Corner

WOMEN: Volleyball teams play this afternoon at 4:15 p.m. The archery tournament begins this afternoon and tennis practices are being held at 4 p.m. Students are reminded that the courts behind the women's gym are reserved from 4-6 p.m. for tennis intramurals and Racquetball practices.

There are 50 teams signed up for volleyball, 54 archery, entries and 42 girls participating in tennis for this season. Schedules for games and practices will be posted daily in the Women's gym or can be obtained from the individual sports managers of each team. For information call the WRA office ext. 3348 between 4-6 p.m.

OFFICIALS: For any girls interested in obtaining an intramural rating, there will be a written test given tomorrow evening at 7 p.m. in Room 301 of the Women's Gym.

BOWLING: The Wednesday night mixed league bowls at 7 p.m. All bowlers in the Thursday league have a meeting at 6:30 p.m. tomorrow to elect officers.

SAILING: Beginners sailing lessons will be offered Saturday at the Reservation. Persons wishing to join the club must obtain a season's membership card for $5 and pass a swimming test before Saturday.

The test consists of a fifty yard endurance swim and can be taken at the Reservation or at the Union Pool.

If taken at the pool, the lifeguard on duty must verify the test by signing the membership card of the participant.

Persons passing the test will then meet for sailing lessons for three weeks at the end of which time, they will be given a written test. Upon passing the written test, they will become "Qualified Skippers" and be eligible to use the boats any weekend they desire.

Transportation will be provided to and from the Reservation. Interested students can contact Bill Mains, 607 Kellum, today or Friday for further information.

MEN: Fraternity Flag football games continue today at 4:10 p.m. D.C. meets T.C., S.N. vs L.C.A.; P.K. Psi plays P.D.T. at 5:10; S.C. vs A.T.G.; P.K.T. vs P.K. Phi and P.K.A. take on S.P.E.

The results of Monday's Dorm Independent games found Geology over Wesley, 39-0; FSO beat P.L. Majors 12-6; BSU and Kellum tied at 6-6; and Alumni Village forfeited to Smith Hall.

Artist Productions To Come; Raduga Dancers Series First

by AVE DEAN
Flambeau Staff Writer

There will be seven Artist Series attractions in the 1964-65 season, beginning with the Raduga Dancers Oct. 19.

Artist Series productions will be scheduled only for one night each this season, according to Mrs. Kathryn Vernon, director of Special Events.

Artist Series productions are included in the Student Activities fee, but students must come by the Central Ticket Office in Westcott to pick up reserve seat tickets.

There will be no charge, but the tickets must be obtained before the night of the performance.

The Raduga Dancers are the first Russian group to be available in the United States for a one-night-only performance.

It will include eight great ballet dancers schooled in the tradition of the classical Russian ballet and about an equal number of folk dancers and musicians from the various provinces of the Soviet Union.

A former Broadway production, "Spoon River," based on Edgar Lee Masters' "Spoon River Anthology," will be performed at FSU Oct. 27. The company will include some of the members of the original Broadway cast, including Charles Aidman, the show's brilliant young adapter, singer, and star.

Sean Langdale, the world famous blind organist-composer of St. Chlotilde Cathedral in Paris, will present a concert Nov. 5. Langdale is well known throughout the United States for his recordings, many of them his own compositions.

The Dallas Symphony is scheduled for Feb. 11. The 92-member orchestra will be conducted by Donald Johanos, who is known for his adventurous programming. Ivan Davis, who won top honors in the first Franz Liszt Piano Competition given in New York's Town Hall, will be piano soloist.

The Dallas Symphony played at FSU several years ago. At that time it was under the direction of Walter Hendl, now head of the Eastman School of Music.

Returning by popular demand will be the San Francisco Ballet which appeared at FSU two seasons ago when it performed two original ballets, "Deck of Dancing Cards" and "Original Sin," choreographed by Lew Christensen. The Ballet is scheduled for March 6.

"Beyond the Fringe," the hilariously satirical Broadway hit based on current events will be presented at FSU March 9.

Scott Sets Block Seats For Recognized Groups

Block seating for all FSU home games is being reserved and assigned to the attorney general's office.

According to Attorney General Ed Scott, block seating will be available to all campus organizations with a request for 50 or more seats, and it has complied with state government laws and is a recognized organization.

Committees Ask For Volunteers

A meeting of the University Union Council, including Reinhard, heard speeches by Herb Reinhard and Miss Marie Williams Tuesday night in Ballroom B of the Union.

Reinhard, chairman of the Union Council, introduced Reinhard, commenting on his experience in working with unions.

"The union movement is nothing new," the college campus is experiencing. They have never had one," Reinhard said. He explained that the union movement is spreading throughout the world with most located in the United States.

Reinhard emphasized that a "facility" doesn't mean that you have a "facility." The most important thing in any union is the program."

He feels that the University Union will have the greatest impact on FSU. "It is not just a union, it is a way of life. It is a way to put into practice what they have learned in the classroom."

Reinhard called the Union the "living heart of the campus." It is for the students and will be run by them. "The only way for the Union to be a good one is for you to be interested," he concluded.

SAP Meeting Today

Sulashan Kapoor, an Indian exchange student, will speak on "Gandhi and Civil Disobedience" today at the Students' Act for Peace meeting in the Student Lounge of Westcott at 7:30 p.m.

"We have bargained with the athletic ticket office for choice seating this year and have required an ample number of them," Scott said.

"All block seats will be between the 37 and 50 yard lines and should give everyone an equally good view of the game," he added.

"For this reason, there will be no drawing for seating positions this year but all seats will be assigned by my office upon the request of the various organizations."

Scott said requests for block seating must be in to the attorney general's office no later than Wednesday at 5 p.m. immediately prior to the week's game. Requests must be made separately for each game.

"This week, however, since plans have just been completed, requests will be accepted until 5 p.m. today," he said.

"The reason for drawing for seats in the past was that available seating ranges from bad to worse and it was a fair way of distributing the available space."

With approximately 3,000 choice seats available this year there is no need to go through the extra work and trouble of drawing.

"When an organization receives notice of the position of their block seating, they will still have to place signs designating their seating area, however," Scott said.

Party Bill Introduced

A bill to recognize political parties at year round campus organizations was introduced in the third session of the seventeenth student senate which was held yesterday afternoon.

The bill would enable any person holding elected or appointed office to file with the Attorney General as a member of a political party. It was referred to the Judicial and Rules committee.

SG Broadcasts

Student government at FSU has initiated a 15-minute, weekly radio show which is broadcast over WMEN at 3:45 each Sunday afternoon.

Student Body President John Mering and Student Body Men's Vice President Jack Cannon will appear as regular panelists on the program, with Presidential Advisor Steve Prentice acting as moderator.

The program is called the University Forum and is being sponsored by Lloyd's American Service Station on the corner of East Tennessee and Magnolia in Tallahassee.

The program is designed to present problems and items of interest to students at FSU and other universities. The program is held on the University Forum and is being sponsored by Lloyd's American Service Station on the corner of East Tennessee and Magnolia in Tallahassee.

In addition to Mering and Cannon, four guest panelists appear on the program each week to add their ideas to the discussion.

We want to present both sides of the problems discussed on University Forum, to the students, so they can arrive at an educated solution to the problem or at least be informed on the subject matter," Mering said.

Questions, or items used in the weekly discussions are carefully chosen before the program so the subject matter will be informative and interesting," he added.

Campbell Says Statutes Vague

John Campbell, commissioner of elections said yesterday that election laws in the Student Statutes would have to be revised and suggested that a voter registration program be started for future elections.

Campbell, in a cabinet meeting yesterday, said that certain precinct elections such as off-campus elections were not properly covered in a situation.

"The statutes just don't cover the situation in which there are 16 or more candidates," Campbell said, and with such a short time to prepare for the first election of the year, it has been impossible to make everything perfect."

"I have also had numerous complaints about dishonesty in the election," continued Campbell.

"The way the polls are set up now, there is nothing I can do about any of these things that are happening. "Since many of these accusations of dishonesty are without foundation, and without proof of actual violations, no action can be taken."

One plan which Campbell suggested, that of voter registration, would help solve the problem, he believes. "For instance, if students would fill out a registration card, including their name, precinct, class and address, the elections would run smoother and the problem of dishonesty in voting would be solved to a great degree," he added.

"I am going to do everything in my power to solve the problems faced in the election of student officers and senators, but it will take a little time," he said.

Other cabinet officers outlined progress in programs on which they are working. Student Body President John Mering stressed student participation in pep rallies and motorcades which are being sponsored by the Rally Bureau.

to advise the Board in its search for a new President for FSU.

Dr. Malcolm Parsons, head of the Dept. of Government of FSU, was named temporary chairman of the committee which will suggest names of outstanding educators to be considered for the appointment.

In a letter to Dr. Parsons, Chairman Baya M. Harrison, Jr. of St. Petersburg said the Board hoped to make a selection at the earliest possible date.

Harrison said the objective of the board is to select and obtain "the best qualified and available person to serve the interests of FSU and the state of Florida."

Other members of the faculty committee are Dr. Russell P. Kropp, professor of educational research and testing; Dr. Helen D. Cate, professor and head of food and nutrition of the School of Home Economics; Dr. Wiley Houghton, professor of music; Dr. Robert Hall, chairman of biological sciences; Dr. Robert Wolverton, associate professor of classics; Dr. Homer A. Black, professor of accounting of the School of Business.

ID Schedule Set

Photo ID cards will be distributed Oct. 8, 9, and 10. The place of distribution will be announced at a later date.

The delay was due to the embossing process and the Registrar's office will have a booth set up Saturday night at the Stadium to help straighten out any difficulties with temporary ID cards.

Temporary ID cards will be good for the ballgame Saturday night.

Motorcade Tonight

Barbara Walker, chairman of the FSU Rally Bureau, announced today there would be a pep rally and motorcade tonight at 7:30.

The motorcade will form in Westcott, will go through the campus and terminate at Landis Green for a pep rally.

"I want to see even more participation for this rally than we had last week," said Walker.

US Problems Not Simple

"The trouble with the so-called liberal today is that he doesn't understand simplicity. The answers to America's problems are simple." This is an alleged quote of Goldwater made at Memphis, Tenn., last alleged because if he said it will be either denied or said to be taken out of context.

One excellent example of where Goldwater sees a simple problem is the complex problem of Communism. Here Goldwater gives me the impression that all Communists are the same, and that they should be treated as if they are the same.

Not long ago that illustrious man of God, the Rev. Carl McIntyre of the 20th Century Reformation Hour, said that the Sino-Soviet axis is a gigantic force. If my memory serves me correctly, Goldwater has said basically the same thing.

Goldwater would like to treat the Russian, Chinese, North Vietnamese, Albanian, and the Eastern European Communist as one entity, i.e., Communist.

But certainly one can realize the many variances in these countries just as one can recognize the many variances in the so-called free world group of nations.

There is also the difficulty of classifying countries such as Ghana, Mali, Burma, and Cambodia. There are also many newly independent countries which have adopted tenets of both capitalism and Marxism. There are also countries like Finland whose foreign policy is largely dominated by the Russians, but whose domestic policy is largely independent.

How can a rational man say that America's problems are simple? America is a frustrated country with tremendously complex problems. It is a country which is probably the strongest in the world, but yet one which must allow the weakest of the weak to kick her around.

But don't fret for there is a savior on the horizon. There is a man who sees America's problems as simple, a man who will solve the problem of Russia by withdrawing diplomatic recognition, a man with the answers.

What are the main issues with Goldwater? They appear to be morals and freedom.

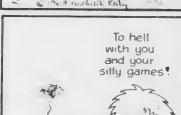

Morals which so many conservatives have longed for some long-term possibility of being able to legislate, e.g., the civil rights bill. With Goldwater as president our women will be safe on the streets, our children will be able to say prayers in the school under the protection of the state, and the "wheelers-dealers" will be eliminated from office.

On the freedom side, we will once again become a nation of individuals. In Atlanta Goldwater said, "The central government must give you a number to replace your name; now we want to give your freedom and your name back again."

It will be interesting to know just how Goldwater plans to put names behind IBM's instead of numbers. But I am a believer. No longer will be 45-42 (selective service number); 5238 (driver's license number); 8-27-40-388 (selective service number); 10-45-1 (checking account number); 207-54-0537 (social security number); ad infinitum. No, once again I will be a free individual. If we had simple problems, then a simple man like Goldwater would make a fine president. But we have problems so involved, so complex, that historians will debate them for many years after they have been assigned as issues of importance to many other historians.

What animal is it that in the morning goes on four feet, at noon on two, and in the evening upon three?

'64 Eys Hate Campaign

This is a curious campaign. Sadly enough, in one sense, it is unlike any known before. This is turning into a campaign of hate, of raw irrational hatred, and ironically, the object of this passion is a man himself incapable of it: Barry Goldwater, senator from Arizona.

Perhaps the intensity of this fury is only a matter of degree. Typically, Americans tend to vote "against" rather than "for." In 1960 many of those who voted for Nixon were voting primarily against Kennedy. In 1952 and 1956, the vote was against Stevenson.

The bulk of the vote for Wendell Wilkie was simply against F.R. So the custom has been since men campaign against Adams in 1928, against Jefferson in the office. In every election, needless to say, the animosities can be turned around: Thousands voted against Eys, against Eisenhower, against Wilkie, against Smith or Hoover, as their feelings led them.

Yet the passions aroused by Mr. Goldwater seem to be different from the ordinary hurly-burly of a presidential race. His detractors are not merely making noise—in this quadrant, rattle-rattle-royal, all of us know it up and jump on the chairs. In their cries against Mr. Goldwater one hears the high, keening wail that trembles on the edge of madness.

There is a blood lust here, pathological, half insane.

Read carefully, if you please, the hysterical editorial "Evil Port" in the "Saturday Evening Post." Here Mr. Goldwater is depicted as "a wild man, a stray, an unprincipled and ruthless political jockey" as artist like Joe McCarthy. The "Post" does not ask merely that Mr. Goldwater be defeated. The "Post" demands that he be "crucially defeated," for "a crushing feat will drive the fanaticism of the Republican party and the woodwork whence the party has come."

A crushing defeat would remove the party's "true leaders" and would mean the wreckage that "meanless, reckless, ill-mannered, arrogant men are sure to follow."

Goldwater has his faults; of course he does. But "wild man" is an unjustified slur.

Mr. Goldwater won his election to the Republican National Convention as freely and as fairly as Kennedy won his Democratic nomination four years ago.

Were half a million votes for California primary "needs" and "test," in view of its old-fashionedness, I suspect that Eys and who are these "true leaders" are not leaders, such as Rockefeller and Rockefeller, who would command a following in the "Post."

The "Post's" purblindness is remarkable, but it is only one blot in this hate campaign. It is still, in view of its old-fashionedness, is the Democratic "Post" effort to paint Mr. Goldwater as a trigger-happy warmonger as the atomic destruction of the world. These hysterics, I suspect, will help Mr. Goldwater, but hurt him. This is extremely ironic, for he is being heard as ideal this year, and extreme in his busy business. It repels, it does attract.

The realists who have been destroyed. Mr. Goldwater would eradicate his ideas, stamp out the fields with salt and create an unintended result, the barn witches any more, we are mistrustful of his words.

FSU Needs Panty Raid

What this campus needs is a good, old-fashioned panty raid.

Students, arise! You have nothing to lose but your quality point! The panty raid, an integral part of campus life across the nation, has been missing from FSU for too long. The last really good panty raid, one which the administration tries to forget and which the students can remember, was over four years ago.

Led by a few high-spirited students, about 2,000 males converged on Jennie Murphy and other women's dorms, chanting the familiar phrase, "We want panties."

The administration, being naturally concerned for its young charges, tended to regard this as a spontaneous and rare outburst of student spirit.

Anyway, the administration panicked and called out the campus police, the Tallahassee police, the National Guard, SAC, the FBI, and other assorted tear gas bomb throwers, and after being rather loudly dispersed by the obviously perturbed faculty.

The students left the campus to hash the evening's festivities.

And that was that. Since then, the administration has become decidedly tougher about panty raids, and has even nipped the buds of any further attempts.

Consequently the men students of FSU have to seek other outlets for the campus from the oppressive censors.

These usually take the form of private and clandestine drinking bouts and include such activities as smoking, grossness, and laughter at redneck.

In the course of striving for "grossness," FSU has sacrificed its reputation to promote maturity.

All the recent attempts to impose the sad state of school spirit have failed because they have little appeal to most of the students here. The efforts of this university to manufacture a professional image has reduced the student body to a dull, lifeless mass.

Then again, maybe it's just plain

Flambeau Forum Turnout Disappointing

To the Editor:

As an enthusiastic spectator of all sports but being more partial to football, for obvious personal reasons, I was both amazed and disillusioned as I looked over the "legion" of turn-out of coeds that was to be "raided" to greet the victorious Seminole this past weekend.

These men have sweated and groaned through five and, as was more often the case, six practices a week in the heat of the day for months. They have ground the fundaments of football into their systems so that they react in an instant to any situation, such as grueling perfection and stalwart determination.

With dust, rain, mud, bruises and cuts as their only companions they have prepared themselves for any event on the "Gridiron." They make every move a forward move and every gain a substantial gain.

They have given up the cushions of relaxation and the luxury of laziness to bring honor and glory to FSU. These men, above all others, should be the bachelors that have EVERY student roaming the "civied" walkways of FSU.

But where were these same loyal fellows when they could have shown their gratitude and appreciation for a job VERY well done? Ask yourself: Where was I? Why couldn't I manage to get a little of the prize, that I must have felt, for a victorious team come to life by participating in a worthy activity which was condoned and organized by my Student Body President?

Was it asking too much for this show of appreciation—I think not, because the show was taken upon every fraternity, sorority and club leader at FSU to begin a program for sport, not only for football but for all competitive University sports. This program should begin immediately. These men and women who are active in sports are your schools' best representatives—they are the best in their field. Your loyalty and support is surely the smallest gift you can give them.

Students can make the other schools in the nation take notice and know that you are behind your teams, win or lose, 100%—IF YOU JUST WILL. Think about it and Thank You. A Football Player's Wife Mrs. B. C. "Skip" Lemon

Laundry Pitiful

To the Editor:

I write concerning the university-operated atrocity, the laundry. After waiting eight days for my three day service, I received my first joy bundle.

One of the dresses might have fit Tom Thumb, if he lost weight. The other probably could have been wrapped six times around a baby elephant. The only plausible explanation I can conceive is that the university has inadvertently hired a Salvation Army rug-maker.

The humor of the situation, I am sorry to say, has been lost on me, and I refuse to part with two new dresses without at least a small whimper of rage.

The past summer brought boasts of improvement from the university regarding the student regulated laundry. If regulations do not soon become more stringent, we will all be forced to invest in tubs and washboards.

Candidates

All candidates desiring to run campaign statements in the Friday "Flambeau" must have their letters into the "Flambeau" office no later than 12 noon today.

Also, if a run-off candidate desires to see or hear picture to accompany the statements, a new photo (glossy) should be submitted.

All letters must be typewritten. No letter of more than 250 words will be considered.

What's News?

To the Editor:

Here is some more complaining about the "John Mering Fan Club" coupled with a complaint about the suggestion for the "legion" to "read some other newspaper."

First of all, I am in agreement with the sentiment that Student Government is a most pathetic source, but is John Mering's face news? If we are going to read about Student Government let's read about everything, good or bad.

Secondly, rather than "reading some other newspaper," it might be better to change the policy of the paper we are all paying for.

By the way Mr. "Potpourri," need we remind you that "someday" Johnson" is campaigning for an office (a news worthy office, wouldn't you agree?) and John Mering isn't, is he?

Incidentally Mr. "Potpourri" who is the "you" in "your elected representative?"

Flair Added To Football Game

The New Mexico State - FSU football game will have an added flair at half-time.

Amplifying the theme, "The World's Fair, Past and Present," the Marching Chiefs will salute the most famous fairs in history.

Forming the London Crystal Palace, the scene on the first World's Fair in 1851, the Chiefs play "Hill Ho, Oh to the Fair" and "Hail Britannia."

Other outstanding fairs will be featured, such as the 1876 Fair at Philadelphia, where it was inaugurated with the first use of the telephone. The Chiefs will play the popular Glenn Miller tune, "Pennsylvania 6-5000."

Other formations will include the Eiffel Tower (Paris 1889), moving Ferris wheel (Chicago 1893), and the 1964 World's Fair.

Forming a Large Note and Clef, the Marching Chiefs pay a special tribute to the winner of FSU's Distinguished Professor Award, Carlisle Floyd. A feature of the 1958 Brussels Fair was the performance of Floyd's "Susannah." The band will play two selections from the opera, "square dance and aria."

Musical selections included in the Chiefs' performance will be, "The Last Time I Saw Paris" "Chicago," "The Stripper" "It's Almost Tomorrow," and "Sidewalks of New York." The majorettes, solo twirler (Cookie Winchester) and the new Seminole Twins, Voodoo Reynolds and Jerry Williams, will be featured.

Miller Talks On Schweitzer College

ARL CAMEL AHMED

The Reverend Clifford W. Miller, director of the Office of College Ministry of the Unitarian Universalist Association, spoke at the University of Florida Monday night.

Miller discussed the Unitarian Universalist College program including the annual European study trip to Europe.

Miller also discussed the history, philosophy, and organization of the Unitarian Universalist movement and slides were shown covering the various organizations, churches and Unitarian groups.

Miller, who described the Unitarian Universalist as one of reason, the Unitarians, as he said, believe in the oneness of God and universal salvation of mankind.

When asked if the Unitarian movement is a sect of Christianity, Miller paused for a moment and explained that Unitarians regard Christ as one of the prophets. They are closer to and inspired by the Brahama Sama, and Buddhism as well as Mohammedanism.

He explained that all have just one thing in common—oneness of the gods or Creator. He added that Islam appears to them further away from the Unitarian religion, perhaps because the West knows little about it.

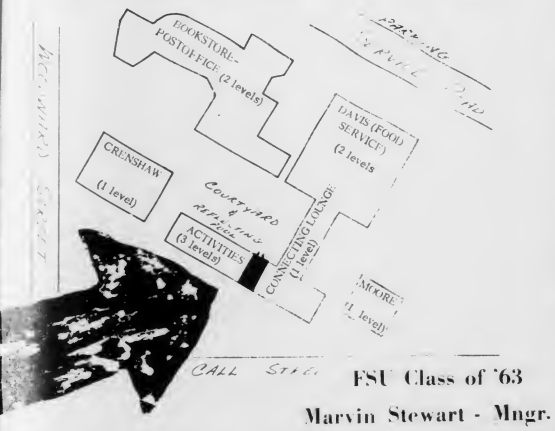

The Unitarian Universalist Association of America maintains 131 campus groups in North America supervised by full or part time employees. It sponsors study trips abroad and fellowships. Lectures by distinguished personalities upholding the Unitarian belief are frequent. The Albert Schweitzer College in Switzerland is thought to be the origin of the Unitarian faith.

Miller commented that the Unitarian religion or philosophy is popular among people on American campuses. By 1970 the number of followers and believers is expected to go up as high as ten million, according to Miller.

Tally Merchants Push To Pack Campbell Stadium

"Pack Campbell Stadium Saturday night," has been the cry of the Tallahassee Chamber of Commerce as they have designated the New Mexico State game "Stadium Appreciation Night."

The event was planned to promote and advertise the enlargement of Campbell Stadium by 15,000 seats. W. L. Shelley, President of the Tallahassee Chamber of Commerce, said that the Chamber's desire is to express appreciation to all men and women responsible for the stadium enlargement.

"These area residents," he continued, "have been working to get the stadium enlarged for several years and many others contributed their time, talents and money to the program when the Board of Control requested that FSU show community interest in the project by selling season tickets well in advance of the usual ticket drive."

Other Chamber officials said that the primary reason for their interest in the stadium enlargement is the economic benefits that it can bring to Tallahassee and the surrounding area.

Harley Ruidt, chairman of the event, said, "Stadium Appreciation Night is designed to encourage residents of the tri-state area to play in FSU football."

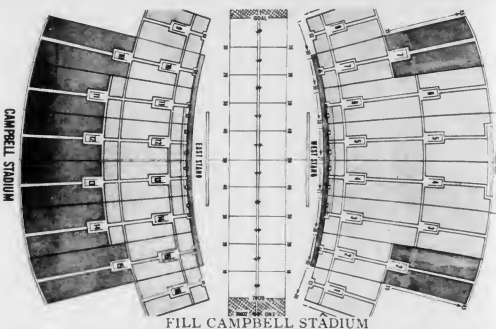

"Good attendance," he said, "is a pre-requisite of scheduling big name FSU opponents to play in Tallahassee. We must pack the stadium Saturday night."

To kick off the Appreciation Night, the Chamber has had a radio broadcast of ceremonies at 11 a.m. Saturday. The program will be broadcast live over all the Tallahassee stations as a public service.

Among the show guests will be Dr. Donak S. Campbell, President Emeritus of FSU, after whom the stadium is named. Other guests will be Dr. John Clumpton, Vice President of FSU; Wilson Carraway, President of the State Senate; and Vaughn Mancha, Athletic Director of FSU.

The New Mexico State game will be the first time that the "new" Campbell will be used. The Stadium formerly seated 25,000. Now it will hold 40,000 patrons.

The additional 15,000 seats served as inducement to get the University of Florida-FSU game scheduled in Tallahassee this year. Nov. 21,

...will be the aim of the Tallahassee Chamber of Commerce as they sponsor "Stadium Appreciation Night" Saturday night for the FSU-New Mexico State football game. This will be the debut of Campbell, a 40,000 capacity stadium. Previously the park's capacity was 25,000.

'Magnificent Seven' Praised; Can't Afford To Let Up: Pete

by DAVE ROSS

Flambeau Sports Writer

Undeclared and unscored! upon, FSU's Seminoles best the Argos of New Mexico State under the lights of Campbell Stadium Saturday night. The Argos are one and one for the season. They defeated Arlington State in their first outing but were trounced 76-0 by Utah State last week.

However, Head Coach Bill Peterson said, "We can't afford to let up. New Mexico State is an up-down team. They send quite a few boys to the pro ranks each year."

As usual Peterson had praise for his "Magnificent Seven" stalwarts; he said, "Our 'Magnificent Seven' have pride. They don't want anyone crossing our goal line."

Last week in Fort Worth the "Seven" became the "Magnificent Seven plus one," as Wayne McDuffie came in to fill the shoes of injured Max Wertstein at left end. McDuffie performed his chores so well that the other seven allowed him to shave his head also.

When asked about the tribe's "questionable" offense against the Horned Frogs, Peterson replied, "Our offense hasn't jelled yet. Improvement has been the word for practice this week."

The Tensi-Fritchett directed offense moved the ball well Saturday night but were repeatedly stopped when they got deep in TCU territory.

Peterson had particular praise for Fred Irlenkoff. He said, "Fred only caught three passes last week, but he took two or three defenders with him each time he went downfield."

The Seminoles will be minus the services of half-back Joe Petko Saturday night. Petko sprained his foot in the TCU game last week.

When asked about the Seminoles' homecoming opponent Kentucky upsetting Ole Miss last Saturday, Peterson frowned and said, "That's next week."

Foundation Board of Trustees Has Annual Meeting At FSU

The Board of Trustees of Foundation, Inc. will have its annual meeting at FSU tomorrow.

This will be the first annual meeting since the Foundation reorganized this year and the first meeting for six new members of the Board. It was established in 1960 under the direction of the late President Robert M. Strozier.

The Foundation, a non-profit organization, serves to stimulate private financial support for FSU. It receives, invests and disburses gifts, grants and bequests to FSU and manages the endowment income from its resources.

As a non-profit organization, the Foundation provides tax benefits for its patrons. For individuals, contributions up to 30 percent of income are tax deductible. For corporations, contributions up to five percent are tax free.

A wide variety of contributions are accepted by the Foundation, says Philip J. Fleming, executive vice president of the Foundation.

Life insurance policies for which premiums are tax exempt and cash value of the policy is deductible at the time of transfer.

Dr. Gordon W. Blackwell, FSU president, serves as president of the Foundation. Fleming, FSU development director, is executive vice president and treasurer. Mrs. Louis Hill serves as secretary.

New members of the Board of Trustees are Braden Ball, Publisher of the "Pensacola News-Journal" and president of the Florida National Bank of Pensacola; Floyd B. Bowen president of International Minerals and Chemical corp. and president of the Florida State Chamber of Commerce; J. J. Daniel, president of Stockton, Whately, Davin and Co. and a director of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad; Richard J. Gardner, attorney and a director of the Quincy State Bank; John G. McKay, attorney and a director of Embury Rieck Co. and Stanton D. Sanson, realtor and chairman of the Florida Council of 100 Education Committee.

This period is the last time rush will be given this trimester.

MIKE WIGELIUS

Bureau Formed

Secretary of State, Mike Wigelius, today announced that his office is considering a plan to establish a formal link between the students of FSU and the Tallahassee business community.

The end means of this bureau will be achieved by students meeting with local business officials or representatives of the Chamber of Commerce.

Possibly the bureau will make suggestions to merchants and business officials in line with the type of design, style, quantity, standard of service, and quality of goods which students desire, a gauge of students' needs.

The bureau will serve to satisfy any inquiry concerning Tallahassee merchants.

It will establish economic support between students and merchants.

Run Off Candidate Letters

Frosh Class Veep — Andy Woods

Frosh Class Pres. — John Maynard

To the Editor:

We are proud to endorse Andy Woods for Freshman Class Vice-President and to urge his election by his fellow freshmen.

We feel that Andy has the necessary qualifications to hold the office of Vice-President of the Freshman Class. However, qualifications are not enough, standing alone, to assure that a candidate will serve his constituency well.

Knowledge of the office he is seeking and new ideas to improve that office are also necessary if a candidate is to be worthy of seeking office.

Andy Woods has all of these and, space permitting, we would proceed to go into detail on each point. Since this is impossible, we would like to recommend that everyone read a copy of the letter Andy has written to all Freshmen. Copies of this letter have been placed in every Freshman dorm for your convenience. Any consideration for Andy Woods for Freshman Class Vice-President would be most gratefully appreciated.

ANDY WOODS

To the Editor:

As one of the presidential candidates who lost Tuesday, I would like to strongly urge all of you to vote for John Maynard for your Freshman Class President.

The main reason I feel that John Maynard is the best man for this position is that he has a plan, a plan which will improve the entire Freshman Class.

John Maynard's goals as President of the Freshman Class will be to improve the standing of the Freshman officers in the Inter-Class Council. He will see to it that your class officers have the same authority and an equal vote as the officers of the Sophomore, Junior, and Senior Class officers. At present they do not have this equality, and I feel that John is the man to improve this.

John will also see to it that all Freshmen at FSU, whether Greek or Independent, will be represented fairly and honestly. This has not been done in the past, and again I feel that John is the man to insure that all Freshmen will have the opportunities to have a successful career at FSU.

That John Maynard is a willing and energetic worker is evident by the results of the Tuesday primaries. He led in votes in a field of six candidates by polling almost one third of all the votes cast. Yet John has been able to keep up his studies with a full academic load.

John Maynard is the man that will serve you best. I know John to be the type of person that if elected, will serve the Freshmen to the best of his ability. He will not merely assume a name job and do nothing.

For these and other reasons, I strongly endorse John Maynard for President of your Freshman Class.

Off-Campus Senator Larry Spalding

The Editor:
I am a candidate for off-campus senator. I cannot promise sweeping reforms of the Student Government, but I can promise to do my best to represent the interests of any student who is not studying under study by the senate. I can promise, however, that if such things are necessary, then they will be studied, proposed, and, if possible, passed by the senate. There is another problem which should be investigated by the senate. That is a study of the requirements for housing rated "adequate" by the Off-Campus Housing Office. I will do everything in my power to see that houses which are substandard because of construction, or age, or proper heating facilities are not given the minimum rating of adequacy.

I will try to find the extent of this problem and get the senate to pass appropriate legislation to tighten standards of housing for the health and safety of the off-campus students.

Although I cannot promise passage of these and other programs, I can promise hard work and dedicated service to off-campus students and to Florida State University.

Larry L. Spalding

Frosh Class Senator — Reid Montgomery

To the Editor:
I want to thank you for your support in the first balloting for freshman class senator.

My participation in this campaign has given me the opportunity to meet you and to learn of your keen interest in student government. I know that you will want your freshman class representatives to assume an important role in the fine student leadership that exists on the Florida State campus.

I feel that my experience in high school will be of value in representing you in the Senate. These activities include vice president of the student body, sports editor of the newspaper, president of the future doctors club, winner of Danforth Award for leadership, membership in National Honor Society, Key Club, DeMolay, and chaplain of Florida Boys State.

If you give me the honor of serving you as Freshman Class Senator, I will endeavor to represent you well.

Reid Montgomery

Off-Campus Senator Bill Falck

To the Editor:
Bill Falck came in second in the general election held Tuesday. He was the campaigner who stopped students in the street, in the hall, on the porch and in the rooms of their own homes, and asked for their support and confidence. He believes in a personal campaign so much that he made his own campaign signs, instead of following herds to the printer.

There is a point to his philosophy of personal campaigning—namely, that of individual service. As your senator, he will work for you as hard as he has worked himself in this election.

Bill Falck

Frosh Class Pres. Mickey Monchick

To the Editor:

Due to the indifference shown in the past election, it has become necessary for us, the candidates which you did not elect, to try to serve you as best we can. We would like to urge you to go to the polls this Friday and choose the candidate which we deem the only qualified candidate for the office of Freshman Class President.

Mickey Monchick, as you have already learned, served the students of this state as Vice President of the Florida Association of Student Councils and as a member to the Governor's Youth Advisory Council.

He has worked with student government leaders all over the state and is aware of the problems confronting the students and administration.

Through these offices Mickey has learned that a student government position is not a seat of glory—it is a lot of hard work.

We believe that Mickey Monchick will serve you as a leader, not as a figurehead. Therefore we urge you to go to the polls Friday and think before you vote.

Jim Jones
Candidate for Freshman Class Pres.

Frosh Class Senator Doug Stewart

To the Editor:

I'm Doug Stewart, your freshman class senatorial candidate, seeking an office where I may serve you best.

My reasons for believing that I would represent you well as student senator revolve basically around my most prominent qualification—experience.

I have had five years of previous experience in Student Government, three of which I served in a major office capacity, (one year as Student Body President, and two years as Student Body Vice-President). I was also elected Vice-President of the Student Council Organization of North-West Florida for the 1962-63 school year.

Recently, I was appointed to the executive committee of the Florida Youth Corps, which is operating directly from the Governor's office. This experience in local, district, and state politics makes me well qualified for a senatorial seat.

But most of all, I am eager and willing to work with you to make this year's freshman class stand out as a unique and individual body of young Americans.

Your support and vote will be greatly appreciated. Thank you.

Connor Cites Accomplishments Of President, Democratic Party

State Commissioner of Agriculture Doyle Connor, at the Johnson for President rally Tuesday night, cited accomplishments of Democrats and said the party is still "the best people of Florida."

"The South has benefited and will benefit more under the continued leadership of a Democratic president," Connor told the group of over 200 students gathered in the Opperman Amphitheatre.

"On one occasion by a single vote Goldwater hoped to put 10 to 12 southern states in the Republican column when he voted against the Civil Rights Bill," continued Connor.

Connor said President Johnson's war on poverty was a great step in the campaign to fight Communism in the country. "We know that Communism breeds on poverty, and this program is designed to combat Communism," he said.

Dr. Elston Roady, president of the government, was also a speaker at the rally.

Flambeau SPORTS

Seminoles Should Smash NM Aggies

by BOB CORNET
Flambeau Sports Editor

What a lousy week for writing.
New Mexico State is a relative unknown from the far West, lost their last game by the sizeable score of 76-0, lost key men by graduation, and must depend on green junior college transfers and sophs.

On top of that, the Aggies defense gave up four touchdowns on passes last week, and this week must face one of the nation's leading passers in Steve Tensi.

Just to make it even more ludicrous, Tensi hit 11 out of 11 to Fred Biletnikoff in passing practice Wednesday afternoon.

Coach Bill Peterson, true to his reputation as the master of understatement said, "We may let them pass a little more this week."

However, before anyone decides that it's also a lousy week for football and trots off to the Talem tomorrow night and not the game, remember no team likes to be humiliated twice.

The Aggies are an up-down team. After the 76-0 pasting of last week, they should be very up for this game. They will come to play football.

This too, is a big game for the Tribe. Everyone expects Peterson's charges to roll over the seemingly powerless Aggies. The Seminoles must prove that they can.

Game Tomorrow

Seminoles Will Meet Aggies

FSU opens its home football season tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in Campbell Stadium against the Aggies from New Mexico State University.

The game has been designated "Stadium Appreciation Night" by the Tallahassee Chamber of Commerce, who hopes to fill newly expanded Campbell.

The Chamber has been pushing ticket sales for the game in the Tallahassee area. Students get into the game by presenting their I.D. card at any east side gate.

For the first time in its history as a big time football team the Tribe will take a 2-0 record into their home opener. The Seminoles defeated the Miami Hurricanes in their first game, 14-0. They whipped TCU 10-0 in the second game. The Aggies will bring a 1-1 record to Tallahassee, winning their first from Arlington state 3-0, and dropping the second 76-0 to Utah State.

Head Football Coach Bill Pererson would like to make it 3-0, and have the Tribe as the only unbeaten, untied and unscored upon team in the South going into the Homecoming game with Kentucky next week.

Soccer Plays Sun.

The FSU soccer club kicks off its schedule Sunday at 4 p.m. in a match with the Bruins of Jacksonville. This year's team will consist mainly of Germans, Vietnamese, and Americans working together on the forward line. Team practices will be held tomorrow at 10 a.m. Spectators are invited to the game Sunday.

STEVE TENSI

... will lead the Seminoles' tomorrow night against the State Aggies. Tensi is the Tribe's leading passer and records every time he completes a pass.

Twin Piano Recital Scheduled For Tonight In Opperman Hall

The familiar saying, "Double your pleasure, double your fun," would seem to be proper slogan for FSU's musical twins, Kathy and Carolyn Haynes, who will present a piano recital tonight at 8:15 p.m. in Opperman Music Hall.

Although far from identical the credits do share a sisterly resemblance and some common interests. Both have played the piano for 14 years and are currently taking applied music study here with Edward Kilenyi, and are in the Music Honors Program.

Carolyn was the state winner in the Florida Federation of Music Clubs and both twins have played with concerto symphonies in Miami.

Carolyn, with a grade average of 3.97, and Kathy with a 3.95 overall, are both members of Alpha Lambda Delta Scholastic honorary, as well as Sigma Alpha Kappa.

Kathy will perform "Prelude and Fugue in E-flat, Vol. 1," by Bach; "Sonata, Op. 78," by Beethoven; "Rhapsody, Op. 79, No. 2," by Brahms; "Nocturne, Op. 37, No. 2," by Chopin; and "Capriccio, Op. 28," by Liszt.

Carolyn's selections will be "Prelude and Fugue in F minor, Vol. 1," by Bach; "Sonata, Op. 54," by Beethoven; "Nocturne, Op. 48, No. 1," by Chopin; "Etude, Op. 25, No. 12," by Chopin; and "Romanian Dance, Op. 8," by Bartok.

Smelko Tops Cast Of 'Man For All Seasons'

Al Smelko has been selected for the leading role in the upcoming production of "A Man For All Seasons," Richard Fallon, director, announced today. The play opens on Oct. 21.

Smelko, a doctoral candidate in theatre, will take the role of Sir Thomas More, a man determined to maintain his integrity in sixteenth-century England, when King Henry VIII forced a break with the Catholic Church.

Smelko, who was featured in last season's premiere of "Trog" and had the lead in Tennessee Williams' "Summer and Smoke," has had a number of roles in Asolo Theatre Festival production, including, "The Lady's Not For Burning," "School for Scandal," and "The Imaginary Invalid." He was featured two years ago in "The Taming of the Shrew."

Another actor from the Asolo company, Grant Kilpatrick, has the role of Common Man in the production. An interpretative character, Common Man provides communication between the audience and the stage events. Kilpatrick is also a doctoral student in theater and his roles at Asolo last season were in "Twelfth Night," "A Lady's Not For Burning," and "School for Scandal."

Morrison Talks To Philosophers

Philosophy does not provide "a fail-safe explanation," declared Dr. Paul Morrison, speaking to Phi Sigma Tau, the philosophy honorary fraternity.

Morrison is associate professor of philosophy, coming to FSU after having taught at Tulane University for seven years and the University of Florida for one year.

Lecturing on the need for general empiricism program in contemporary philosophy, Morrison compared and contrasted the nature of scientific explanation with what past philosophers thought to be the nature of philosophical inquiry. The error was that thinkers such as Hegel and Descartes thought philosophy must have a unique subject matter that was, in some sense, trans-empirical; therefore our knowledge of such subject matter was "indefinite."

The particular disciplines of science emphasized the domain of legitimate empirical investigation and unless philosophy was to be equated with the Humanities it would seem to be without a function.

In this way, Hegel viewed the task of philosophy to be that of providing a rational and systematic knowledge of the past. Hence, it could be distinct from the Humanities without being identified with the sciences.

Senate Scheduled

There will be a Women's Senate meeting tomorrow at 4:30 p.m. in Longmire Auditorium.

All newly elected women precinct senators are required to attend as well as all women class senators.

Manhood

Seemed to be some rather odd conduct in a few of the Greek sections in the block seating at Saturday's football game.

We realize that the Greek groups can contribute much in raising school spirit at such events thus justifying the block seating arrangement.

When this enthusiasm turns into chaos with thrown coke cups and other debris, however, many may start to wonder if block seating is necessary.

We believe that Greek organizations should try to live up to their claims of manhood and remember their manners.

Otherwise, good use can be found for those seats now taken up by the blocks.

SG Senators Apathetic

Now that the Student elections are over there will no doubt be the usual lamentation by Student Government members about student apathy.

They have a point; only 28% of the students voted in this last election. They usually point out that students just don't care about their government.

"If the students were only more interested they would see how much we are doing," I contend that what the students do see of their government is the reason they are not more interested.

In the eyes of most students the SG has a long history of being "risky dink." Students consider SG some special kind of private club. In the past, all that SG appears to have done is shuffle committees, investigate their own internal affairs, rewrite the constitution, and serve as an official looking rubber stamp for the administration. It's good practice for political science and government majors maybe.

Once in a while a member of SG will sound off about the sums of money they allocate. Most students look at this with a skeptical eye. In total they are responsible for about $250,000. To begin with, $140,000 or so automatically goes to inter-collegiate athletics.

Another large sum goes to the campus hospital, and so on. The sum over which the SG actually can exercise a meaningful measure of control is small. Does anyone believe the SG could actually hold back that $140,000 to inter-collegiate athletics?

Actually, the most important contributions of the SG go unnoticed. One of their most notable efforts is the creation of the new Student Union.

HUMIDITY HIGH-WIND LOW-
IF YOU MUST BURN,
LET THIS BE SO!

The reason we have the new Union now can be traced directly to the efforts of the SG.

In the mill right now are plans for a student evaluation of faculty, a statewide "College Bowl" type television show, and an FSU Day by the downtown merchants. Why this student apathy then? Simply because the students don't see much of, or hear from, their Senators.

This lack of communication is the hard core of student apathy. The activities of SG get good coverage by this newspaper. No, the burden of this apathy falls directly on the shoulders of those who complain most loudly about it; the Student Senators.

While some Senators have kept in contact with their constituents, most have woefully neglected to do so. This is the reason that SG tends to be thought of as a private club. I'll wager that the majority of the students on this campus don't even know the name of their Senator. Now, if the Student Senators deem that it is important that the students of this campus be interested in their government, I think it is time they did something about it other than just complain.

I think it is hypocritical to complain of an apathetic campus when we have so many apathetic Senators. The only person who can break this idea that SG is a private club is the individual Student Senator.

Until the day comes when he goes out to meet his constituents, I suspect that we will have an "apathetic" student body.

Suggests Raid

To the Editor:

It is my opinion that your idea of school spirit in connection with the well established national tradition of party raids is good in its own right. However, you seem to have forgotten that Florida State University is attempting to create the image of leadership and definite progress, as compared to other universities, both in the state and in the nation.

For this reason I think the party raid is definitely out of style. Still being faced with the problem of a lacking school spirit, though, we must replace the party raid with some form of activity within the realm of uninhibited student fun, at the same time keeping leadership and progress in mind.

My suggestion would be a "Fruit of the Loom attack," for lack of a better name, in which the men and women on campus who are inclined to take part in such wholesome fun, would just reverse their places. The result of a raid on men's dorms by two or three thousand women shouting "***[G]***" would, to say the least, be revolutionary in its far reaching reverberations across the country.

And, in the true form of a Florida State University student body, individualism, leadership and progress in student activities would be the result.

Yes Bob, your idea has the right bent, but let's keep FSU FIRST IN FLORIDA and FIRST IN THE NATION!

Needs Diogenes

To the Editor:

Diogenes, Where Are You?

At 8:00 Friday morning, September 25, this writer witnessed a major tragedy in the form of a minor incident. Four "gentlemen," apparently on their way to breakfast at the University Union Cafeteria, approached the row of newspaper "vendors." Then one of them applied brute strength and a seemingly well-practiced skill and opened the door of one of the "vendors." Another member of the group made a comment to the effect that he hadn't thought the fellow would do it, but... he made no effort to stop him from removing two papers; in fact, he reached in and took one for himself.

What quality morals—how much lack of self-respect—how little dignity must a person have to stoop to stealing something which he could borrow or read in the library for free? Is self-respect worth so little effort to be traded for the "prestige" of walking in to breakfast with two papers under arm? Or is self-respect extinct in our modern society?

Seminoles Smash Aggies 36-0

BY BOB CORNET
Flambeau Sports Editor

Coach Bill Peterson used New Mexico State as a testing ground for his less experienced players Saturday night as the Tribe followed their press notices and trounced the Aggies 36-0 in the FSU home opener.

Peterson let his regulars take a second half rest after the starters had built up a 16-0 lead in the first half, and then gave his second unit a chance to show their stuff.

It took ten minutes for the first squad to get started, but after they got warmed up they moved at will through the Aggie defense.

Proof of this is the fact that the Tribe was forced to punt only once in the entire game. That was in the third quarter after two 15 yard penalties.

The Seminoles' first score came on a 15 yard field goal by Les Murdock. After driving to the five from the Aggies' 47 the Tribe was held for three downs, forcing them to try a field goal.

The March was highlighted by good running from Phil Spooner who had runs of 18, eight, six, and three yards. However, neither he nor Lee Naramore could get the ball across the goal line.

Two plays after the kick-off FSU again took possession of the ball, when Dick Hermann recovered a New Mexico fumble. This gave the Seminoles the ball at the Aggies' 36. From here Steve Tensil and Fred Blumenthal renewed their passing acquaintance with two passes that yielded one touchdown. At the end of the first quarter the Tribe had a 10-0 lead that was seriously challenged only once.

At the beginning of the second quarter, Blumenthal showed off his running abilities as a punt receiver. He jumped, twisted, and bounced 38 yards to the New Mexico 27. Here Ed Fritchett came in for Tensil and took the club to the two where the drive stalled.

Aided by penalties and a 53 yard pass play from Rich Norman to Hartwell Menafee the Aggies sped down to the Tribe 17.

With fourth and five from the 17 it looked as though the Seminoles would finally be scored upon as Art Garcia came in to attempt a field goal. Just as last week at TCU, Bill McDowell came crashing through to block the kick and preserve the Tribe record.

FSU then moved 83 yards to a TD on runs by Wayne Glardino and Larry Green and a pass to Blumenthal. The attack was climaxed by a Tensil to Don Floyd pass good for 37 yards and a touchdown.

Tensil was injured on the play, being hit as he threw, and spent the rest of the game on the bench with an ice pack on his neck.

At intermission the Seminoles were moving according to plan and enjoyed a 16-0 lead.

Just to show that the rain didn't affect them, the Seminoles took the second half kick-off and moved 67 yards to a quick TD that put them ahead 22-0.

The Seminoles scored twice more in the game. Fritchett was instrumental in both drives. In the first he took the ball to the 15 on a 43 yard option and then scored on a one yard sneak.

Three minutes later Fritchett and Green maneuvered the club down to the 12 where Green took it in. After the PAT the scoreboard read 36-0.

LES MURDOCK

... broke the scoring ice Saturday night at Campbell Stadium on a 15 yard field goal that put the Tribe ahead 3-0 in the first quarter of the game with New Mexico State.

Groups Revive 'Hour'

(See editorial page 2)

Student Government and "The Florida Flambeau" announced today a plan to revive the annual English Coffee Hour now slated for extinction.

The new system calls for representatives of both organizations to organize the informal discussion groups, provide the necessary refreshments, and in general to be in charge of making all arrangements.

Members of the English Dept. will only be asked to deliver the lectures.

Started by Dr. William Hudson Rogers, the English Coffee Hour met each Friday at 4 p.m. in the Westminster House.

The programs consisted of lectures delivered by members of the department about English topics, book reviews, and general information. Coffee was served by Westminster staff members.

With Rogers' retirement last summer, the programs lacked leadership. It was decided to drop the series.

Several members of the English Dept. expressed displeasure with the Coffee Hour's demise, however, and they were willing to continue to deliver the lectures. Miss Jeannie Williamson, representing Student Government, and Erik Collins, representing the "Flambeau," formulated the new plan whereby the two groups working in conjunction with the Westminster House, which will continue to house the activities.

Student Government and the "Flambeau" will attempt to provide everything necessary to return the series to its old standards.

"Many, many people have expressed to me their deep disappointment at the disappearance of the Coffee Hour," said Miss Williamson. "The lecture series provides one of the most entertaining yet educational programs on campus," she continued.

Collins expressed the hope that the many people who attended the lecture series in the past would let their feelings be known to the English Dept.

"I am sure that the department will not refuse to provide the programs when they see that people are interested in the series and that many would like to attend," Collins said.

He said that the "Flambeau" will be able to give the necessary publicity for the hour while Student Government will lend official student support.

"We at the Student Government are 100 percent behind the efforts to revive the programs," said Student Body President John Merting.

"Student Government is always willing to sponsor programs of proven student and faculty interest," continued Merting. "We hope that the students will continue to support the English Coffee Hour as they have in the past."

Gray Is Speaker For Dedication Of Salley Dorm

Former Secretary of State Robert A. Gray will be the principal speaker at dedication ceremonies of the Nathaniel Moss Salley Residence Hall at 2 p.m. Friday.

The late Nathaniel Moss Salley was dean of the School of Education at Florida State College for Women for several years. His son, G. Lawrence Salley, having studied under him two summer sessions for teachers at the Salley, will respond to Gray's remarks.

Gray is a former student of Dean Salley, having studied under him during two summer sessions for teachers at the then Florida State College for Women. Gray at that time was a school teacher in Gadsden County.

Dr. Gordon Blackwell will preside over the dedication ceremonies Friday. Thomas D. Bailey, state superintendent of public instruction, will represent the building which will be accepted by Dr. Wayne C. McCall, Board of Control member from Ocala, and President Blackwell. The Reverend Jeffery A. Friend of the St. John's Episcopal Church will give the invocation and benediction. A reception and tours of the building will follow the dedication ceremonies.

The eight-story dormitory, FSU's first air-conditioned residence hall, is situated to provide living and study space for 586 students.

The east tower of the dormitory houses 293 men students. The west tower houses the same number of women students. A story-high section connecting the two towers provides a large recreation area, a lounge, offices, a telephone switchboard and other facilities.

Your Turn

The trimester system has slowly but surely been chipping away at the few extracurricular events enjoyed by the FSU student body.

Recently, it seemed that the English Coffee Hour would follow the dusty path to obscurity also, leaving an even larger void in the chasm marked "cultural activities" hidden in the current catalogue.

Student Government and the "Florida Flambeau" have made the initial effort to return the Hour to the FSU Active list.

The remainder of the effort will have to come from the faculty and the students. The students involved have shown their willingness to take care of the scheduling of the programs, the publicity and the refreshments.

Someone will be needed to deliver the book reviews and lectures. We hope that the members of the English Dept. will cooperate with the new program as they have with the old.

It is inconceivable that a university as large as FSU does not provide some sort of literary review for interested individuals.

The Coffee Hour has presented lectures by distinguished authorities of the Arts in the past.

The Coffee Hour has been a trademark of FSU's Liberal Arts field since it's conception through the inspiration and work of Dr. W. H. Rogers.

The students and faculty can ill afford to sit back and let it die merely because they were too busy to shoulder all of the responsibilities.

The "Flambeau" and Student Government have agreed to bear the heaviest load.

Now it's your turn.

Effective Seating System Needed

What this campus needs is an effective block seating system for home football games.

Block seats were first established on the idea that an organized group such as a fraternity could provide more spirit and whoop it up for the team more than a larger number of unorganized individuals.

This year the blocks were moved closer to the cheerleaders and everything seemed set for a good year—until a series of command decisions threatened to wipe out the entire system.

The first in the series was Attorney General Ed (Sigma Chi) Scott's decision to assign blocks, rather than draw for them as usual. The two most undesirable blocks in the section were assigned to the SAEs and to the Sigma Chi's (ironically enough).

Then a group of independents decided just before the game Saturday night that the Sigma Chi and SAE blocks were the best in the house and promptly filled them. The SAEs and Sigma Chi's, deciding they'd rather switch than fight, fanned out into the crowd.

The SAE's settled for the FSO block. Those in the FSO block are independents, and were naturally angered at the thought of giving up their rightful seats to any group of Greeks. The SAE's were sporting enough about the whole situation as they forced their way into the FSO block.

And the Sigma Chi's? They quietly and peacefully moved five entire rows of Sigma Chi's and their admirting dates into the Lambda Chi and Delta Chi blocks. The situation got serious for a moment when a Delta Chi officer let it be known that Delta Chi's were being turned away for lack of seats, and that those not Delta Chi's were invited to move out of the Delta Chi block.

The typical Sigma Chi comment was a muttered "I ain't a-gonna move, damn it."

If the block seating system is to survive, there are several actions which must be taken immediately.

1. The traditional method of drawing for blocks must replace the arbitrary method of assigning blocks.
2. The entire group of blocks must be clearly marked before the game begins, and must be enforced during the game to prevent seats from being taken up by unauthorized individuals.

3. Each organization must be notified in advance of the exact location of its block. (Typical Sigma Chi pregame comment: "Duh, where's our block, anyway?")

4. Each organization must be able to request police action if necessary remove individuals who are sitting in the wrong block.

Otherwise, give blocks back to the independents, who are at least interested in what's happening on the field.

David, Douglas Wells Among First For Veterans Assistance

With brothers David and Douglas Wells, are among the first Tallahassee area students to be approved for Veterans Administration educational assistance under an extension of the War Orphans Educational Assistance program. David and Douglas, 20, are juniors at FSU. David will major in Hotel and Restaurant Management, and Douglas plans to major in Criminology and Law Enforcement.

They were interviewed by a VA Counselor before being approved for the $110 a month assistance provided under the law. Benefits will continue for 36 months or until they complete their education.

The extension of the program which previously provided assistance to children of deceased veterans became law July 7. Under the extension, children of veterans who have a total disability, permanent in nature, as the result of a service connected disability arising out of service during the Spanish American War, World War I, World War II, the Korean Conflict or peacetime service since September 16, 1940 may qualify.

Disabilities incurred during peacetime service must have resulted directly from performance of active service, armed conflict, or while engaged in extra-hazardous service.

Generally, the child must be between 18 and 23 years of age to attend school under the program. If the child has completed high school or dropped out of high school, benefits may be awarded before age 18.

President Dines at White House

It was with a deep honor and a warm experience to have met and dined with President Johnson and family," said Student Body President John Merting upon his return Tallahassee Sunday.

Merting was among some 250 other students who received an invitation to Washington and dinner at the White House.

Seated in the "East Room," the first group first heard speeches by Secretary of State Rusk, Secretary Defense McNamara, and Secretary Labor Wirtz which preceded a morning and congratulatory talk by President Johnson.

Each delegate was received by President and Mrs. Johnson and their daughter Luci and entertained for a buffet dinner.

Miss Bird (Mrs. Johnson) told Merting she is anxiously anticipating her visit to Tallahassee and FSU.

All students may attend.

Four evenings ago, the Lambda Chi Alpha were the victims of "sticky fingers", the symbol of their fraternity was stolen.

There is now a bare space on the wall in the LXA living room, where a large wooden replica of their fraternity pin used to hang. The Lambda Chi's are willing to negotiate for the return of their pin—out out of fear, but out of depression.

There will be a meeting of Sophomore Council at 9 p.m. tonight in Loggins Auditorium.

Photo ID cards will be issued on a first come, first served basis Thursday and Friday in the main entrance corridor of Tully Gym. ID cards will be given out Thursday from 8:30 a.m. until 5 p.m. and on Friday from 8 a.m. until 2 p.m. ID's will be required for Saturday's game, and a booth will be set up near gate 10 to issue ID's to students who didn't get them Thursday or Friday.

Fashions Pose Coed Problems

The fickle Tallahassee weather poses a bewildering problem on the minds of many FSU coeds: "What will I wear for homecoming?"

Homecoming's past history has shown many hot, blazing, sunny afternoons, with woe to those who wore uncomfortable wools. If this coming Saturday proves to follow suit, dark colors and wool should be avoided.

Light, bright colors will not only be more comfortable, but will add to all the color of Homecoming. Downtown Tallahassee stores carry a limited supply of kilts and cotons in a moderate price range.

For the semi-formal dance on Friday, a wide variety of dresses, both in color and style, are carried by these stores.

"Mademoiselle," a leading fashion magazine for women, claims that the fashions seen on campus will follow a '64 Beat.

The '64 Beat is a head-to-toe look that begins with a kicky, pleated, high-rising skirt (to top of knee) reveals long stretches of textured stockings and sweaters that cling like T-shirts.

The news is also in the pantsuit, in which the jacket takes a pair of slacks or a skirt length culotte. A dog-leash belt may be added. The belt boom which made its continental debut, continues throughout the '64 look.

The sweater switch is likely to cause the biggest stir this fall. They are made to lend personality. Some have little ruffles on a U-neckline, while others have fine ribbing. If these toppings are tucked in at all, they're smuggled into a hip-riding skirt.

ISTC Jobs Available

Plans for 1965 have been announced by the International Student Travel Center (ISTC).

Executive Director Frank A. Gordon announced that year-round and summer jobs are available for 900 students and teachers for ages 17 to 35.

Job selection ranges from resort-boss, work to chalet-keeping, factory and farm work.

The best jobs are found in the Common Market Countries and England, Scotland, Ireland, Scandinavia and Switzerland.

Over 500 students were successfully employed by ISTC in 1964-65. Gordon emphasized "planning ahead" because the best choices are found for those joining before Dec. 31, 1964.

In any case, candidates must allow 2 to 4 months for guaranteed placement processing.

Seminoles Impressive In 36-0 Victory

by BOB CORNET
Flambeau Sports Editor

Coach Bill Peterson and the Seminoles proved the forecasters right Saturday night as they came within one point of their predicted winning margin. The Tribe piled up 36 points against the New Mexico State Aggies. They were predicted to pick up 37.

The game gave Peterson a chance to see some of his untried players in action and to get a look at both his veteran quarterbacks in action. What he learned Saturday night may well determine game strategy when the Tribe takes on Kentucky this weekend.

FSU fans may take heart at the superb blocking the offensive line showed. This in turn made the running backs look very good. Though the backs were ever more impressive when in trouble.

Phil Sporer converted negligible gains, and near losses into good yardage by displaying second effort, twisting, and bouncing through the Aggie tacklers.

Larry Green and Wayne Giardino showed power and "eyes for daylight" when they appeared to be trapped and found their own running room.

Fred Biletsnikoff also displayed artistry as a broken field runner on his punt returns. He dodged, and jumped over Aggies in the second quarter for a 38 yard punt return that kept the Tribe in New Mexico territory.

Steve Tensi, though, was the most satisfying sight as the Seminoles' starting quarterback. Tensi mixed his plays well, threw well, and never had a drive stalled.

He showed poise usually associated with professionals like John Uninas of the Baltimore Colts. This was especially true in the second quarter on the play that knocked him out of the half.

He dropped back to pass, was rushed hard but did not panic. He pushed one man aside, threw a 37-yard touchdown pass to Don Floyd and then was hit hard by the Aggies. The "Magnificent Seven" kept their reputation in tact as they prevented the Aggies from scoring. This made FSU the only major college in the nation that has not been scored upon.

To preserve the record, Bill McDowell had to block his second field goal of the year. This one in the second quarter from the 17. Last weekend he blocked a TCU try.

The only real disappointment was quarterback Ed Pritchett. Except for one 37 yard burst late in the game, he was less than brilliant. His roll out runs netted losses, no gains, and a missed touchdown from the two.

Saturday against Kentucky the team will have to exceed their best effort of the season if they hope to match the Wildcats—the most "upsetting" team in the nation.

FSU Frosh Drop First Game To 'Hurricanes' In Orlando

While the varsity Seminoles were shellacking New Mexico State here Saturday night the '64 frosh were taking it on the chin.

Rainy skies in Orlando didn't hamper Miami's Baby Hurricanes as they hung one on the FSU Freshmen 16-0.

Instrumental in the Cane victory was Miami's Mira—Joe Mira that is, younger brother of All-American George. The teen-ager from Key West definitely had the Mira touch, tossing for one score and running for a second.

The score doesn't begin to tell the story. The Baby Hurricanes had two touchdowns called back on penalties plus they lost a fumble on the one yard line.

Miami's defenses looked tough as they limited the Seminoles to only five first downs on 25 yards rushing. The passing game looked a little better as the freshman from Tallahassee hit on a 6 for 10 and 91 yards.

With a slippery ball there was a total of nine fumbles during the contest with the Seminoles bobbling six times. One FSU fumble during a kick-off return gave Miami the ball.

Student Aid Becoming Harder To Acquire Says Dr. J. Carr

Although students may supplement their college fees with scholarships, loans, and jobs, Dr. James Carr, Director of Financial Aid states that it is becoming harder than ever to find monetary aid.

The Financial Aid office estimates that a Florida resident living in university housing and eating on the University Food plan will need at least $625 per trimester or $5,000, to get a bachelor's degree in eight trimesters.

Through Carr and the financial aid office many FSU students are finding various ways of meeting their expenses. Scholarship aid has already been allocated to approximately 500 students. Last year $148,000 was distributed for scholarship. This year the amount is expected to climb to $150,000.

But of the University's $138,600, in permanent scholarship funds some $75,000 must be administered according to the dictates of the particular scholarship in regard to such thing as chosen field of study, geographic residence, or similarly restrictive clauses.

This means the amount of money available to equally qualified students on the independent basis of merit and need is even less than expected.

The most popular type of financial assistance, according to Carr, are student loans. The most widely-used fund is that created by the National Defense Education Act.

Under the NDEA, local funds are raised for national matching funds, of which some $425,000 have been requested for the coming academic year.

Priorities established for NDEA loans include students enrolled in studies of the sciences, modern languages, and elementary and secondary education. A 2.5 academic average is required to continue the loan program. Loans must be repaid within ten years at three per cent interest.

The university loan fund also provides loans up to $300 per trimester, at four percent interest and service charge.

Approximately 1500 students also work part-time to supplement their income from other sources. Some 1000 student-held jobs on campus provide their holders $400,000 per year. About 500 other students are employed part-time in the city. Although most jobs for students are clerical, some variety is provided,

Hundreds of students will be busy during this week putting the finishing touches on decorations and planning details for this weekend's Homecoming.

Tickets for Homecoming activities are being sold at Westcott Ticket Office.

Tickets for the Chad Mitchell Trio show on Friday are $2 for FSU students and $3 for non-students.

Friday's homecoming dance is $3 per couple. The dance on Saturday is $2 per couple.

FSU students needing date game tickets for non-students may purchase them at half price with the presentation of their ID cards.

The program for Pow Wow (8:30 p.m. Friday night) is one which Chairman William W. Rogers, an assistant professor of history, says is packed with surprise features. He thinks students and the public alike will enjoy the hour-long free show in enlarged Campbell Stadium.

Rogers and the two student general chairman who are helping run this year's show, Judy O'Connell and Herb Bruce agree that a revival of the skits in the Pow Wow will add to this year's show.

"They are parody acts and are completely the work of students," said Rogers. "The sky's the limit—well, almost—on content. It can be politics, government, faculty members as seen by students, anything."

Rogers said another feature which should add to Pow Wow is a contest now going on among fraternities for the best original cheer. He added: "We're not ignoring the pep rally part of Pow Wow—Coach Peterson and the team will be there, along with the band, and we're expecting plenty of noise. There also will be a spectacular fireworks display."

Credits for planning the Pow Wow go to a hardworking Pow Wow Committee headed by Dr. Robert W. Vernon for the faculty and Durham and Susan Silvert for the students.

Rogers said at least 100 students are working on Homecoming with this and other subcommittees planning various phases of the program. "I have the impression students are more actively involved this year than ever before," said Rogers. "Hundreds of students are working on decorations, special activities, floats or other details," he commented.

It's all in honor of the returning graduates, including the honor class of 1914, oldest class to return for Homecoming.

Homecoming begins with a parade down College Avenue from the Westcott gates starting at 3:30 p.m. Friday.

Chad Mitchell Trio To Present Shows In Westcott Auditorium

As a highlight to homecoming on Saturday the Chad Mitchell Trio will present two shows in Westcott Auditorium.

Tickets went on sale in the Westcott ticket office Monday.

The fee for FSU students is $2 and the fee for the public is $3. There will be no reserved seats.

"Here's to a guy with a big Texas smile,

Who knows what it means to have real Texas style,

Here's to a feller who couldn't think small,

Here's to the biggest embezzler of all.

Billie Sol Estes, we're proud of you son,

You had to be Texas to do what you've done."

This is just one of the many songs on tap for a fun-filled evening. The Trio is noted for their songs of things pertaining to current affairs.

You may have heard the new graduation song for "Ole Miss": "My Girl was only seventeen, when she was chosen riot queen..."

The original Trio found it's start at Gonzaga University in Spokane, Wash. During their first year they sang for campus groups, clubs and parties in the Spokane area. With the help and guidance of Father Relhard Beaver they made their debut in Manhattan.

Since that time they have appeared on such shows as the Arthur Godfrey Daily Radio Show, New York's famous Blue Angel Supper Club, Bell Telephone Hour, the Ed Sullivan Show, "Hootenanny", the "Today" Show, the "Tonight" Show, and the Dinah Shore Show.

They have given concerts in many places including Carnegie Hall. They also went on a 15 week tour of Latin America under auspices of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentation.

Mike Pugh, one of the original group, quit to go back to school. He was replaced by Joe Frazier who combines with Mike Kohluk and Chad Mitchell to make the present Mercury recording group.

The Trio claims that they are not folk singers but singers of folk songs. They believe that true folk singers experience the things they sing about. They obtain their material from field recordings, and other folk singers.

SAE, what happened to our leaders?

During the last few weeks of the spring semester, everyone (especially SAE) was talking about the student leaders coming from SAE. An SAE was just finishing his tenure as Student Body Vice-President; one of his fraternity brothers had just been elected Student Body President; some had been elected to the Senate; and some had received appointments from the new President. SAE WAS ON THE MOVE.

This leadership continued at the New Mexico State game Saturday night. The SAE's showed the Student Body what their leadership was like.

SAE, where was your block seating assignment? It was in aisle 13, from row 4 to row 18.

SAE, where were you sitting? You were sitting in the block assigned to the Foundation Scholarship Organization. The FSO is a bunch of "damn Independents," I know but it was still their block. (Just for clarification the block was between aisles 13 and 14, rows 11-18, seats 1-20.)

This mighty fraternity wasn't satisfied with occupying six of the eight rows in the FSO block, however, FSO students were ordered to leave their seats and when they refused, they received a barrage of Insults from the SAE's.

They did not stop at insults, but resorted to physical intimidation. Of course, by this time, they had consumed enough "booze" that they were feeling very courageous.

A few of them were even so brave as to hit girls in the back of their knees and to "accidentally" spill whiskey on them. One boy was pushed so hard that he was knocked from his seat and into the boy ahead of him with enough force to knock him from his seat.

His attacker was very brave for he outweighed the boy by about 50 pounds. One SAE grabbed the tie of another FSO boy and pulled at it.

The SAE's had only one thing in their favor—there were about forty of them and about ten or twelve FSO boys.

I truly must salute the SAE's; their bravery astounds me. Again I ask: SAE, what happened to our leaders?

I must admit, though, your show of sportsmanship was really something to see (and hear). Your yelling and cheering continued the athletic game although action was rather slow at times. That part about it is that you were cheering for the Seminoles, sure everyone sitting anywhere you could hear the degrading remarks you yelled at some Negro.

State.

Sure there were a few laughs from your brothers and sisters, students whose seats you were occupying didn't think so. And I'm sure the majority of Student Body won't think so either.

It was the most disgraceful and disgusting show of ignorance I have witnessed this year. SAE's really lived up to your name.

During this great show at Alpha Epsilon, some members of their party distinguished themselves by getting completely poked. One "boy" had to be carried off after nearly starting a riot. Some of them had to be dragged away to prevent a fist fight, while most of these drunken exhibitionists contributed vulgar language was shown up well for SAE.

SAE, YOU HAVE DONE YOURSELF PROUD.

Chess Club Plans Meet Sat.

With Ga. Tech Yellow Jackets

The queen moves slowly ward... checkmate...

So it continues for the FSU chess club, a small but growing group of students who thrive on the royal

The club has regularly scheduled informal meetings every Sunday afternoon from 2:00 till 3:00 p.m. in the Trophy Room. These meetings are open to the public and are for the pure enjoyment of the game.

For the more advanced players, bi-weekly theoretical meetings are planned to discuss master games, openings and recent games for members.

During the past two weeks a qualifying tournament took place to fill the vacant seats on the team.

Parke Kuntz was the undefeated winner with five consecutive wins. Richard Sotter, a freshman, finished second losing only one game to Kuntz. William Garcia, John Huffman, and Jim Wilson shared third place with a 3-2 score.

Saturday, the team will play Georgia Tech at 10 a.m. in room 211 of the University Union. Last year Georgia defeated FSU by only one point. Tech is returning with the same team while FSU will bring in a new and stronger team.

According to Dr. R. L. Fromke, coach of the team, "We have the best team in the south and will prove it this weekend as we score our first victory against Georgia." Florida has in the past had the number one team in the South. This year's FSU team is significantly strengthened by the presence of two of Florida's highest rated players, Martin Delman and Robert Ludlow, Ludlow is the former senior men's champion of Florida.

No doubt, Florida State's unscathed-upon Seminoles will receive a few glances across the nation this week as they stand unique among the major college teams in the defensive department.

Saturday afternoon the Seminoles engage the University of Kentucky, the nation's seventh-ranked football team. An upset of the highly-touted Wildcats would surely thrust the Seminoles into the national eye as Kentucky's upsets over Mississippi and Auburn on successive weekends have spurred them into the nation's Top Ten for the first time in a little over a decade.

It will be Homecoming for FSU and it couldn't come at a better time. The Wildcats will probably be the toughest team FSU will face this season with the possible exception of the finale with Florida. There's no way getting around it—the Seminoles will have their work cut out for them when coach Charlie Bradshaw brings his young Wildcats on a little scalp-hunting mission of their own.

Everyone's heard about Bradshaw, the one-time Bear Bryant aide, who was lured into Blue Grass Country two years ago. His record since that time reads 6-11-3 which includes a 0-0 standoff with FSU in 1962. Charlie encountered some difficulty when he first tried saddling up the Wildcats in '62. But he solved the problem by simply putting a few of his friskies on to pasture and battled away at the tough Southeastern Conference schedule with hardly enough men to fill a single stall in any stable in the state.

In 1963, with a few more men that wanted to play his way, Bradshaw's Wildcats recorded a 3-6-1 slate and for an 11th place finish in the nation. Led by quarterback halfback-deluxe Roy Williams, the Seminoles completely outburned the Wildcats, 20-0 last week. Williams was ruck up 112 yards and returned a pass intercepted by Williams for a touchdown.

Newly Elected Take Oath

The freshman class officers and senators were sworn in during the Seventeenth Annual Senate's fourth session. The oath ceremony was administered by the Honorable Court of the Honor Court, and Senate President John McElroy presented certificates of office to the new officers. The new officers, including Ed Scott, presented their oaths with a personalized copy of the student body statutes and constitution.

President Kilian briefly greeted the new senators and outlined a few points of the new senators should and should not do. She said she had followed the campaigns of the freshmen senators and if their promises were kept, this year's senate would be exceptional.

Senators also had extensive discussion on a bill to compute overall scholastic averages from all institutions, exactly as earned, to determine eligibility of elected and appointed officers.

The bill was referred to the Judicial and Rules Committee.

Mrs. Johnson Here Tonight

Lady Bird Johnson, as the highlight of her campaign stop in Tallahassee, will make a major address at 7:30 p.m. tonight in the University Union.

The topic for the First Lady's speech will be higher education in the South. She is expected to pronounce the views she shares with her husband and the Democratic Party on the importance of education in Florida and the rest of the South.

Unlike most other stops on her campaign tour, Mrs. Johnson will leave her train behind and journey by motorcade to the campus.

Pres. Gordon W. Blackwell, along with other dignitaries, is scheduled to meet the Lady Bird Special on the railroad spur adjacent to the FSU football stadium.

Travelling with Mrs. Johnson will be her younger daughter Luci and the Brothers Four, one of the outstanding young singing groups in the nation. The Tallahassee stop is regarded by White House staffers as one of the highlights of the 1962 mile swing of the Lady Bird Special through eight Southern states.

Entertainment for the rally will be provided by the Brothers Four and prominent local groups. Included in the festivities are the 250 University girls who will greet the First Lady with songs and pass out campaign materials and literature to the audience.

These girls, all from FSU, and under the direction of Miss Lisa Smith, will be costumed in blue skirts, red sashes, and campaign hats.

After her crowd to the Tallahassee address of FSU students and local townspeople, Lady Bird will leave the Union and attend other receptions sponsored by Gov. Bryant and top Florida political figures.

Plans call for Mrs. Johnson and her daughter to spend the night back on the campaign train because of the early departure time of 5 a.m. When Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson became the nation's 32nd First Lady, she said that her role must "emerge in deeds not words."

Within the first six months of 1964, she had traveled 35,000 miles, all in the United States, to underline her husband's program and salute the work of local communities in improving their living conditions and their educational and cultural opportunities.

Luci Baines Johnson, who is accompanying her mother, is the first teen in the White House in more than half a century.

Helen Hayes

The Florida Youth for Goldwater-Miller will not be able to meet tonight in Longmire Lounge, as was stated yesterday's "Flambeau." The lounge is closed due to preparations for Homecoming.

The speaker for the occasion will be President Gordon W. Blackwell, who is leaving his post Feb. 1 to become president of his alma mater, Furman University.

It will be a homecoming for Howser, a graduate of the class of 1958 and a standout baseball player here. Twice as an undergraduate he was All-American.

The front office for the Cleveland Indians, who purchased Howser from Kansas City for $100,000, says "It's worth every penny we paid for him. He is a gentleman on the field, off the field a credit to our organization. Needless to say we are proud to have him."

Howser's just wound up his first full season with Cleveland, having been obtained May 25, 1963. He had played with Kansas City since 1961 and before that with St. Louis City and Winona.

Howser's wife will be here with him for the occasion, and they are expected to ride in the parade.

Dr. Daisy Parker, faculty chairman for the committee handling the Homecoming Banquet, said the ballroom, seating 1,000, will be appropriately decorated for the occasion, with a large FSU seal suspended from the ceiling.

Heen Hayes Be Banquet Guest

First lady of the stage, Helen Hayes, will be the special guest and Cleveland Indians infielder, Dick Howser, the toastmaster at a Homecoming Banquet tomorrow night, honoring old grads going back to the class of 1914.

Setting for the banquet will be the Big air-conditioned banquet hall in the University Union. The "banqueters" will be served beginning at 6 p.m.

After Gov. Farris Bryant has welcomed the guests, Dr. Doak S. Campbell, who was president of FSU from 1941 to 1957, will present Miss Hayes, who will be here for the two days of Homecoming, the second of which will be her 64th birthday.

She has begged off speaking, saying "I'm too frightened of speaking," but the famous actress may greet the guests.

Alumni Association, will extend greetings to returning alumni, which in addition to the class of 1914 will include hundreds of others.

The invocation will be by Dr. Robert A. Spivey, university chaplain. Music will be furnished by Rick Powell, Don Michel and Doug Greer.

The key and Garter Key, the service honoraries for men and women students, will tap honorary members and these will be presented by Ray Whitehead, president of the men's organization, and Pat Doornier, president of the women's group. Gold Key will present their yearly award to two outstanding men; one award to a faculty member who has helped the student body and promoted the university and one to a man from the state at large, who has also promoted FSU.

Miss Hayes is expected to arrive today and will be a guest of the executive mansion. She will attend the Homecoming Barbecue and football game Saturday.

At 2:30 p.m., tomorrow Miss Hayes will speak to a group of drama students in the University Union and afterward she will sit in the reviewing stand in front of the chapel and watch the parade.

The widow of the late Charles MacArthur, well-known playwright who died in 1956, Helen Hayes was on the American stage for more than half a century.

Born in Washington, D.C., she began her stage career at the age of six and by the time she was nine she was on the New York stage. In 1958 she received the Antoinette Perry Award for Best Actress for her role in "Time Remembered."

She has been awarded a gold statuette from the Motion Pictures Academy of Arts and Sciences as the outstanding actress of the previous Perry Award for awards to her in 1932 for her role in "The Sign of the Cross" and in 1934 for her role in "Victoria Regina" in 1935.

More recent roles have been "A Touch of the Poet" by Eugene O'Neill in 1959, "An Aldermere," also by O'Neill, produced over NBC, in the films "The Best of Enemies" and "My Son John."

New Tax Affects FSU

The Attorney General of Florida has passed a new ruling on sales tax affecting FSU and all other universities in the state.

A 3 per cent sales tax is now required on the lump sum amount which is allocated from student activities fees for all campus activities for which admission is charged.

This will include Homecoming activities taking place this weekend. Professor Harry P. Day, Dean of Students, has estimated that the tax will amount to 25 cents per student a trimester. The 25 cents will be collected today and tomorrow when students pick up their ID cards in the main entrance corridor of Tully Gym. Upon payment of the fee, the students will have their ID cards stamped. Students possessing un-stamped cards must also report to the Gym.

Beginning this week, all students will be required to show "stamped" ID cards in order to be admitted to football games and other campus presentations in order to qualify for reduced rates.

The ruling on sales tax is expected to continue until trimester III. The entire cost of the tax to be paid this year is $5,000. Next trimester, the sales tax will be collected at registration.

Block Seating Is Clarified

"Difficulties incurred at the New Mexico-FSU game, in connection with the block seating arrangements, have brought about the need for immediate action to see that problems are solved," said Attorney General Ed. Scott, in a recent interview. "Most of the trouble stemmed from organizations not roping off their designated areas prior to the game," Scott continued.

"Because of the general mixup, persons concerned with the direction of the block seating have been authorized to request police force to see that happenings of this type do not occur in the future."

The University General's office will work with the organizations and persons concerned with the problems of block seating in order to be fair with all concerned.

"We were lucky to get block seating in as good a location as we have it this year, and if the situation is not handled there is a chance that all rights to block seating will be revoked," Scott concluded.

TODAY

The examination in Defense of Dis-sertation of Miss Elba Theresa Mata will be held in Building 237 at 4 p.m.

The Math Teaching Club will meet at 7:30 p.m. in the Education Lecture Hall.

There will be a meeting of the Seminole Divers Club at 8 in the Library Lecture Hall.

R.K. Shelton will speak on "FSU Recent Developments in Nuclear Spectroscopy" at 4:30 p.m. in Room 124 Science.

HC Parking Plans Announced

Lt. Lewis, of the University Police, reports that adequate parking facilities should be available for Homecoming weekend.

While alumni registration, alumni breakfast and the Chad Mitchell Trio are being executed, parking will be available on the north lawn of Jemie Murphree hall as well as unreserved parking spaces.

Those attending the barbeque and the semi-formal dance at Tully Gym will find 541 parking spaces available at the gym parking lot.

For the Homecoming banquet and the informal dance being held at the University Union, parking will be found around the Union, on Palmetto Way, and in the north and south parking lots about the Geology Bldg. Campbell Stadium's parking lot will adequately hold the cars of those attending the Pow Wow, according to Lewis. The regulations for parking during the Homecoming Game are the same as those regulations for any other home game.

During the formation of the parade, spectators are requested to stay away from Campbell Stadium's parking lot.

Laundry Committee To Handle Complaints

A Laundry Service Committee has been formed to handle student complaints and suggestions about the laundry service.

The committee will evaluate and discuss the complaints and suggestions with the proper persons so that corrections can be made in the service.

Under-Secretary Debbie Little has explained that the committee needs eight people, one woman and one man from each class, to serve on the committee.

Anyone who uses the laundry facilities and is interested in serving on this committee may contact Miss Little at P.O. Box U-2630.

Announcements

The "Florida Flambeau" in conjunction with WFSU TV presents "Focus" premiering Monday at 8:30 p.m. on Channel 11.

The University Union will be the scene of a "Students Act For Peace" demonstration tomorrow from 12 until 1:30 p.m.

There will be a similar demonstration at the main Tallahassee post office beginning at 2 p.m.

The demonstration will be protesting U.S. war in Viet Nam. There will be simultaneous demonstrations in Gainesville and Miami.

Gymkana Team Masses Impressive Record During Past Fifteen Years

One of FSU's most impressive records is held by its outstanding gymnasts. In the past fifteen years they have won 350 individual titles and 55 team championships.

Gail Songierath, who last spring won the strenuous Olympic Trials, holds the honor of becoming the first woman in the FSU gymnasts Hall of Fame. A total of thirteen names appear on the prestigious list. One must hold an individual national championship or have been a member of an Olympic team to qualify as a Hall of Famer.

In 1960, gymnastics was dropped as an intercollegiate sport from FSU, yet the performers continue to come here to be a part of the Gymkana Club. Their reasons are many and varied but it is mainly because of their love for the sport.

Susan Long, Betty Haas, and Guy Atkinson, who help coach the team, feel gymnastics is a part of their very existence. Haas believes it takes time, work, and patience, but every effort is worthwhile. Atkinson and Long, '63 Georgia State AAU women's champion, hope to be physical education coaches.

Don Goddard does it as a hobby. Bob Gramling, Sammy Seminole to many people, believes it takes more than just brute strength. It takes a lot of body control and coordination to perform a feat well.

Carl Farrell says, "It's a feeling of having control of your entire body that is self-rewarding." John Van Nostrane feels that a person really needs a lot of concentration to excel.

Bill Bell says that gymnastics involves strength, flexibility, and coordination. Frank Semmes, Kip Winterburg have been in gymnastics since childhood. Semmes was a member of the national Tumbling Tots. Winterburg, age of 11 had his first fall when he suffered a broken neck and went to the apparatus, for it was his blood.

The team is now operating to the support of the student government. Perhaps one day the FSU will once again have an intercollegiate gymnastics team to compete in this fast growing sport.

Phoenix

We welcome and are honored to be host at this year's upcoming weekend to Mrs. Johnson and Miss Lucine Johnson, and to the alumni, especially the Class of 1914.

The changes which you of the Class of 1914 see are at a beginning; FSU is taking its first embryonic steps toward greatness.

The new dorms, research buildings, and classrooms are but the physical manifestation of a spirit which will lead this institution forward and upward. We are merely out to erect bigger and better buildings, however.

We are striving to make more attainable to more of the youth of Florida, and indeed, the youth of the nation and the world, that goal to which this country is dedicated in 1776: Freedom.

We are not speaking here of reckless freedom, but of freedom which recognizes its responsibilities and therefore can realize to its fullest, its privileges.

We are seeking at FSU to provide the physical and mental climate necessary for the growth of individuals.

Like the Phoenix of ancient Egypt which was consumed by its own fire every 500 years to be reborn in youthful vigor, so must we continue to tear down old buildings and shibboleths and rebuild them in vigorous new shapes.

It is with dismay that we note criticism of us for this attempt, for we can see no nobler aim for men than his own self-realization. When gubernatorial candidate Haydon Burns spoke of the existence of "pinks at Communists" at state universities, among faculty members, we cannot help but assume that he was misinformed.

The Executive Committee of the Florida Conference of the American Association of University Professors expressed our sentiments with its resolution:

"The national image of Florida resulting from previous examples of such irresponsibility continues to impair the recruitment of outstanding educators at public and private institutions of our state." University faculties are pledged to the guardianship of professional standards and academic freedom, and therefore request Mayor Haydon Burns to pledge himself if elected, to lead Florida in meeting its pressing educational needs in terms of both money and morale rather than to seek dubious political advantage by gratuitous attacks upon her leaders."

PROFESSION: BY DAVID MATTHEW ASP STUDENT

"AND NOW THAT WE'RE IN THE FIFTH WEEK OF THE TERM, ONE MIGHT SAY THAT WE—YOU AND I—HAVE ACHIEVED A CERTAIN 'RAPPORT.'"

A Cuban Native Speaks

To the Editor:

I found the article "Peace Marchers Aim for Cuba," which appeared in the "Flambeau," to be an excellent piece of misdirection. Fallacious statements were made in almost every paragraph.

The revolution in Cuba has been most chaotic and disorganized. No reference can be made to a "line" in the "line" of the revolution. In U.S. commercial interests are in the hands of the government, and not "in the hands of the people."

All Cubans must endure a continuous system of vigilance, which destroys civil liberties, which people, then, are "better off" than before.

The people, the very poor people, are still way behind; the hope of being "way ahead" some time in the future is what keeps them going.

The last, and saddest, fallacy in this printed interview was a reference to the "violence that is taking place in Cuba now, and will continue to take place as long as the totalitarian regime which preys upon the island lasts."

Peace Marchers Clapper and Rindland seem to have no interest in the welfare of foreign countries. If, say, they should join the Peace Corps in some other worthy, sincere program of this nature, since we as Cubans are concerned, they are in no help.

As a native of Cuba, I went through the revolution.

SG Senator Will Work

To the Editor:

As your off-campus senator, Dutch Powers will represent you by discussing action for:

1. Fairer apportionment of the off-campus district, giving you more Senate representation.
2. Student government action to off-campus housing policies concerning upkeep, housing during occupancy, and fair consideration of problems of both students and landlords in matters of housing, rent, rates, and upkeep.
3. Improved communication between off-campus students and campus as your senator, Dutch Powers, will have a qualified staff to assist in making sure that the Senate firmly reflects the concerns of off-campus students.

Article Sought On China's Atomic Threat

To the Editor:

It interests me that your paper has contained no mention in any form of the announcement last week by Mao Tse-tung that Red China is about to test explode its first nuclear weapon.

The most pressing problem facing the world today is what the Chinese Communists will do with this totally destructive power, once they achieve its working potential. If a greater danger faces all the peoples of this earth at present, I have failed to note it.

In fact, I feel it behooves our principal publication to indicate at least how the student body, as such, is aware of this potential threat so that we may all ponder its possible effects to the more desirable aspects of our way of life.

Thirteen years ago, Russian Foreign Minister Vishinsky first taunted the United States with the threat that the U.S. monopoly on atomic weapons was shattered. At this same time, Mao Tse-tung formally proclaimed the Communist People's Republic of China.

It is Russia, actively engaged in a bitter ideological war with China, who is being taunted now more than any other country, with the threat of China's nuclear might; but all the peoples of the world must lose heavily in terms of security, not just human life, should nuclear holocaust erupt between an Anglo-American nation.

More possession of this ability to explode an atomic device does not mean that Red China now threatens the world immediately with wholesale destruction, even though Mao has said more than once that destruction he would do so if he could.

Red China still lacks the technological know-how to build nuclear weapons capable of being transported any great distance, but reliable experts estimate that ability to be achieved in perhaps a year or two. And it might require enough time to educate enough persons in the right

Doubts Burns' Consistency

To the Editor:

Is there any doubt that Haydon Burns is the very person for Florida? With this in mind, I thought it might be interesting to jump some questions into his campaign for a step into the post of greatest public responsibility in our state. These questions, by the way, are posed to no other end.

Burns stated the "old communists in Florida" in the state universities will be renounced by the administration if he is elected.

Hasn't he ever stated that he believed in freedom, freedom and freedom? If so, he is not endorsing the same speech that the "freedom situation" whenever the day comes for the day of freedom, freedom and suggested that "no man should extend their freedom to speech in somebody else's yard."

The answer, dear friends, is in the name of the man who is running for the office of governor. His name is HAYDON BURNS. He is a FLORIDIAN. He is a FLORIDIAN. He is a FLORIDIAN.

Proclaims SAW Tenets

A specter is haunting the campus—the specter of SAW.

One bleak September night in a poorly lit garret in Tallahassee, the cream of the campus intelligentsia sat amid mountains of beer cans and liquor bottles discussing the Great Questions facing Mankind.

"Is there a solution to the unemployment problem?"

"Is there a way to end the cold war?"

"Is there a Communist hiding in the closet?"

"Is Barry going to carry Arizona?"

"Is there intelligent life on earth?"

"Is the package store still open?"

"No."

"This is the end of the world."

"Not a bad idea."

And so, the magnificent concept of Students Act for War (SAW) was born. It is high time that SAW should openly, in the face of the whole university, publish its aims and tenets.

SAW exists for the sole purpose of bringing about the end of the world by any possible means. The most effective tactics for accomplishing this end may well lie in those Great Questions listed above. Students Act for War believes:

There is no solution to the unemployment problem.

There is no way to end the cold war.

There are two Communists hiding in the closet.

Barry will not carry Arizona.

There is no intelligent life on earth.

The package store will never open again.

With basic tenets such as these, SAW cannot fail to its great objective.

A strict adherence to these principles will end the world in short order.

There are also some specific programs which SAW supports:

The establishment of an economic blockade around Asia, Europe, Africa, and South America.

The breaking of the test ban treaty.

The continuation of the draft.

The gift of nuclear weapons to our NATO allies, like Greece and Turkey.

The gift of nuclear weapons to friendly neutrals, like Egypt and Israel.

But SAW's special thanks go out to all those who advocate "Intercepting" supply lines in North Vietnam; to those dedicated Chinese nuclear scientists who have worked day and night to make this a more exciting world; and to those who are still convinced that the Red Chinese government doesn't exist.

This is the SAW program. Its chances of success are remarkably high. Let all students interested in bringing about the end of the world support this program! Let all tomorrow's leaders rally behind the mighty, awful banner of Students Act for War.

You have nothing to win at all! You have a world to lose! Students of FSU, unite!

Rogers Commends Committees

Dr. William W. Rogers, general chairman of the 1964 Homecoming, has commended the work of the various committees for this year's weekend.

Overall chairman of this year's Homecoming is Judy O'Connell and Herb Bruce. It is their job to oversee the individual committees. They work directly with the different committee chairmen, helping them with any problems that arise. Their primary duty is to coordinate and supervise the entire weekend's activities.

In charge of Homecoming publicity is David Colwell. His committee's responsibility is to provide information about the different events open to the student body.

Through use of the "Flambeau," the "Tallahassee Democrat" and other news media, all aspects of Homecoming have been publicly announced and explained. Articles have been published concerning the Pow Wow, the Friday banquet, and the special Homecoming entertainment.

Co-chairmen of the Tallahassee Decorations Committee were Jim Jones and Larry Gonzalez. Many of the downtown merchants and local banks consented to decorate their stores for homecoming weekend.

The large glass windows of these varied establishments are gayly decorated with football decorations. Ann Dribble is in charge of the Campus Decorations Committee.

The men and women's residence halls, the off-campus housing, and the non-resident student centers participate in a decoration contest. Judges of the decorations are Mr. Ralph Hurst, Mr. Richard Plunkett, and Mr. Lawrence B. Evans, Jr.

The theme for this year is "Victory and More in '64." The Parade and Float Committee, headed by Jane Franzino and John Noppenberg, organized the line-up and route of today's parade. Any organization may enter a float. In addition to the floats, the Homecoming Court, the Gymkana Court, the Village Vamps and other groups will be included in the parade.

The committee in charge of the Homecoming Banquet was supervised by Pat Doomard, Dr. Gordon Black and is expected to speak.

As a highlight of the dinner party, Garnet and Gold will tap honorary members.

Susan Silver is in charge of the Pow Wow. Bill Durham will be Master of Ceremonies. The Pow Wow Show will consist of several skits and cheers, presentation of the court, introduction of the coach and players, and will end with fireworks. The Game Ceremonies and Stadium Committee is responsible for coordinating the public address system and band with the half-time show. Barbara Walker is the chairman.

Marian Fahey, head of the Homecoming Queen Committee, is responsible for the beauty elections. Besides coordinating the Homecoming Queen elections, this committee handles all other problems concerning the queen and her court.

The various other student chairmen involved in making Homecoming a success are: for the Barbeque, Bruce Pelham; dance, Gene Stearns and Susie Peters; security, Dennis Berry; public relations, Walt Martindale.

Other chairmen are: alumni activities, Sarah Husley; service, Bill Flack; publications, Jeannie Williamson; and alumni lecture, Boyd Coarsely.

places to prevent further atomic wars?

There is always the danger that at some future date a dispute will break out between some lesser powers, one of which, or both, possess a nuclear weapon. Several nations in the Middle East and even Latin America are sooner or later most likely to develop the dread device.

It's getting easier and less expensive to produce, the knowledge and brains to do so are increasingly more numerous, and several of these countries have assigned top priority to just this project.

If you lived in a neighborhood full of toughs, wouldn't you at least consider keeping some sort of weapon handy for self-protection?

Some system of international authority must be functionally created to control this power we humans have discovered and already used with such terrible efficiency. How effective the nuclear test-ban treaty is going to be, only time will tell. It is at least a step in the right direction. Another step in that direction must be an alert and informed public to the potential horror this development holds for us all.

So, how about maybe an article or two in the future on this subject, so that we may reach enough thinking and doing people on this campus to perhaps contribute in some small way towards a more secure and lasting world peace?

One of the nice things about owning it is selling it.

A new Volkswagen doesn't depreciate wildly the minute you turn the key.

In a sense, the older it gets the more valuable it gets.

So that in 5 years, the same VW will be worth more than some 5-year-old cars that cost twice as much to begin with.

Old VWs are worth a lot because a lot of people want them.

One reason is that it takes a real car nut to tell a clean used one from a new one.

VWs always look like VWs.

Another reason is that they hold up.

A VW is put together so well, it's practically airtight. (It helps to open a window to close a door. Even on old ones.)

And, new VW or old, there's all that nice money you keep saving on gas, oil, fires, insurance, and repairs.

So you can get a nice price for it. If, for some strange reason, you'd want to sell it.

It's the kind of economy that people are willing to pay an arm and a leg for.

Floyd Named Distinguished Professor

by SARA ANN SLOAT

Each year the faculties of FSU single out one of their members to receive the title of Distinguished Professor of the Year.

This award of special commendation is granted to faculty members whose achievements have contributed markedly to FSU's endeavors for excellence.

The 1964 Award went to Carlisle Floyd, professor of the Music Dept. The Distinguished Professor is regarded by his colleagues as one of the most creative artists on the faculty.

Floyd joined the FSU faculty in 1947, shortly after his twenty-first birthday.

In 1957, he was named as one of the nation's Ten Outstanding Young Men by the National Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Floyd's publications include "Slow Dusk", a one-act opera; "Wuthering Heights", a three-act opera; "Death Came Knocking", a choral work for male voices; "The Sojourner and Mollie Sinclair"; and "The Mystery, in the Apocrypha."

This 105 minute, one-act opera made its premiere in 1955 here.

Floyd's most successful opera was "Susannah," recently selected by the newly formed Metropolitan National Opera Company as one of four operas to be presented in its inaugural season.

Susannah Polk, the leading character, is a Tennessee mountain girl, in 1957. In 1959, it was performed in a modern day version from the at the Brussel's World Fair.

Expanding Campus Brings Problems To Students

When you come back from Homecoming ten years from now, chances are you will have a difficult time recognizing FSU.

Even those the students staying out of school over the past summer spent a bewildering day re-orienting themselves and finding new shortcuts through our rapidly changing campus.

In order that you will not find yourself utterly lost on that day, following is a short review of what you might expect.

Ranking ninth in the U.S., Florida's population continues to grow, and universities are struggling to keep up with the demands made upon them.

At FSU, the Board of Control considers an increasing number of requests for new buildings, delegates them according to priority, and presents them to the Florida Legislature for appropriation of funds. According to Dr. John Champion, vice president for administration, land acquisition is a first on this list of priority. Bounded on all sides by expensive privately owned residential and business districts, FSU crowds over 12,000 students in its 315 acres.

The University plans to have related departments grouped together on different sections of the campus.

An example of this is the plans for the new Science Center to be located on the western section of the campus. The Molecular Biophysics Building, Nuclear Research Building, Geology Building, and Meteorology Building are several of the completed beginnings of the Center.

will be added to the Center. At its completion, $40,000,000 will have been spent on the Center. It is expected to draw great minds all over the country, according to Champion. A $2,500,000 fine arts building will be next to go up on campus. The building will become the hub of the art world on campus and will house the University Art Museum, theaters, and classrooms.

The present infirmary will be used for faculty offices and classrooms. A new 80-bed infirmary will be built on a new site.

West of the library, a Social Science building will go up. It will house the Economics, Geography, Sociology, Anthropology, Government, and History Departments, the School of Social Welfare, the Institute of Social Research, and the Institute of Governmental Research.

A new women's dorm will be constructed near Dorman Hall. It is estimated to house 600 students. An apartment building consisting of 96 efficiency apartments for married students is also in the future plans.

Goeds will no longer live in "manland." Nathaniel Salley is expected to house only men students.

The Maintenance Bldg. will be moved to the west of the campus near the stadium, freeing valuable land for other purposes.

The Green House and gardens will be moved to the University Farm.

Band To Do Review

"FSU in Review" will be the theme of this year's half-time show presented by the Marching Chiefs.

The show will begin with a fanfare followed by a welcome to all FSU's alumni and friends.

The band will execute formations depicting campus life such as a school penant featuring the major events twirling to the old favorite "School Days" and an IBM machine accompanied by "Rites of Spring."

A triangle representing the tri-master and the continuous activities of the four students who work night and day will feature solo bandists Ginkie Winstenper twirling to "Night and Day."

A girl's figure will be the formation as the band plays "I Can't Give You Anything But Love." While the band flirts a dollars sign, Bookie Reynolds and Jerry Williams will twirl a duet to "Pennies from Heaven," as a salute to Fanfare will precede the introduction of the queen and her court. The FSU fight song and the Alma Mater will climax another show by the Marching Chiefs under the direction of Robert Braunagel, associate director Clifford Madsen, and Arranger Charles Carter.

Pow Wow Tonight At Stadium

At 8:30 p.m., FSU's students, faculty, alumni, and guests will gather at Campbell Stadium for an hour-long Pow Wow with skits, cheers, and fireworks.

For the first time in Pow Wow history parodies will be presented by eleven FSU organizations that have been chosen by a board of judges as presenting the most captivating and colorful pantomimes.

These short skits will be interspersed with the many other activities at the Pow Wow, and the winning parody will be announced during the half-time at Saturday's game.

The parodies which were chosen for representation are by Alpha Tau Omega and Alpha Chi Omega together, Kappa Delta, Kappa Alpha Theta, Alpha Delta Pi, Delta Gamma, Chi Omega, Sigma Chi, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Alpha Gamma Delta, Kappa Kappa Gamma, and Jemille Murphree. "Anything is fair game for subject matter," says Pow Wow chairman Dr. Robert Wolverton. Spectators can expect comic and satire on anything from politics to FSU life.

This year's Pow Wow will be full of surprises beginning with the Gold Key Tap in which two FSU men will be tapped for membership into this honorary fraternity.

Coach Peterson will then introduce the senior members of the 1964 Fighting Seminoles football team.

The highlight of the evening will follow when the Homecoming Queen is crowned with the traditional white feather headdress. Only last year's queen, Clyda Stokes, will know who this is as she presents one dozen roses to each member of the court.

This year's court includes Jan Brantley, Sheila Clarke, Dottie Kohlman, Sue Mauger, and Sally Sparks. People eight miles away will know something's going on as the last but not least feature of this year's Pow Wow takes place. An unusual and colorful fireworks display will include a wildcat chased by a Seminole.

As the display ends, the FSU seal will light up on the field while the band plays the "Alma Mater."

HC Mums To Be Sold

Gold Homecoming mums will be sold today and tomorrow for $1.50 by the Women's Physical Education Association on behalf of the Katherine Montgomery Scholarship Fund.

Miss Montgomery served as head of the Women's Physical Education Dept. from the time of its inception until her death in 1957.

On the twenty-fifth anniversary of her tenure, the alumna created a scholarship fund in her name to be increased by further contributions and the annual sale of Homecoming mums.

'Focus' Begins Monday

A new demision in pre-meditated viewpoint is a weekly television program premiering Monday evenings at 8:30 over Channel 10 TV.

"Focus" consists of interviews with students and faculty, guest speakers and lecturers concerning campus, local, state, national and international news topics," stated Wayne Cowart and John Perkins, co-producers and co-hosts of the new.

"Focus" will attempt to present interesting information on vital topics presented from the viewpoint of the campus.

"Focus" personal will have some part in producing the show and through the combined efforts of the "Flambeau" and WFSU TV "Focus" becomes "unique in the annals of college publications," commented Cowart.

The original idea of Focus was presented by Marshall LaComb, "Flambeau" production manager, to Duane Francheschi, program director of WFSU TV, who initiated work on the program series.

Tom Welsh of the WFSU TV staff will be directing the program. Assistants to the producers with the "Flambeau" staff are Linda Swindall, Kathy Kneutson and Sandi Mills.

FSU Dorm Decorations Will Be Judged Today

Each year during Homecoming weekend all residence halls on or off-campus have an opportunity to deck themselves in their best with colorful and unusual decorations.

Most dorms are following the university theme, "Victory and More in '64." Degraff has a scene depicting Seminole's presenting a wildcat to the homecoming Queen before new Campbell Stadium. A burning wildcat with celebrating Seminoles dancing around it will be Florida Hall's decoration.

Other dorms have followed through with variations of the main theme like Broward hall, "Expecting More in '64," showing a Seminole receiving the victory from a stork. "Col. Seminole and Ky. Fried Wildcats" are presented by Landis and Olchrisht.

Jennie Murphree goes even further with "FSU Reaching Growing, Going Strong" showing a big octopus holding the aims of FSU: defeated wildcats, gators, a new union and other buildings, and the ultimate diploma. Agnelia asks for "Victory and More in '64" adding that we must "Keep it Alive in '65."

Two dorms have gone all out with moving parts to their decorations. Both Smith and Dorman have moving figures.

Campus decorations will be judged today by Ralph Hurst, art education; Richard Puckett, director of the LeMoynne Art Foundation; and Lawrence Evans, Tallahassee architect. Awards will be given for best-all-around house decoration, best men's dorm, best women's dorm, best off-campus student residence, and best off-campus student center.

Winners will be announced at the Homecoming game tomorrow.

Physis Bldg. Already Filled

FSU students have long been aware of their rapidly expanding campus.

One of the latest developments is the new $1.7 million Physics Research Building located near Smith Hall.

Dr. Swartz, chairman of the Physics Building committee, explained that the building is the first of two phases. It will be a research building for faculty, staff, and graduate students, with facilities for doctorate study. A second building to provide the needed classroom space for the undergraduates is planned for the future.

Swartz said, "We count on the legislature appropriating funds so that we can do as good a job for our undergraduates as we are now doing for our graduate students."

The building now under construction should be completed next trimester. It will have eight stories with research laboratories, machine shops, offices, seminar rooms, and a modern Physics library. An extra large basement will allow space to house a helium liquefying machine.

The building will be air-conditioned and none of the windows will open to the outside. Bronze glass windows with concrete sun blinders will also aid in keeping the building cool. "For the first time in my memory," said Schwartz, "most of the members of the physics department will have their offices in one building. Up until now the faculty has had offices in seven different buildings on campus."

"When we planned the building," Schwartz continued, "we hoped we would have space until 1975, but actually when we move in next trimester, the building will be almost full."

ing and design from Florida State University, studying with Edmund Lewandowski, Karl Zerbe and Florence Kawa.

He is a native of Marianna, Fla., and attended Alabama Polytechnic Institute and Corcoran School of Art in Washington, D.C., prior to entering Florida State University. He served with the U.S. Air Force and the U.S. Strategic Bombing Survey in Washington, D.C., during W. II.

Milton has numerous one man exhibitions to his credit and has been represented in group exhibitions throughout the Southeast.

Galleries and shows exhibiting Milton's works include Forum Gallery in New York City, the Southeastern Annual in Atlanta, Four Arts in Palm Beach, National Gallery in Havana, Cuba, the John and Mable Ringling Museum of Art in Sarasota, Painting of the Year Exhibition in Atlanta, Art USA in Madison Square Garden, New York City, the Brooks Gallery in Memphis, and many other galleries and traveling exhibitions.

Milton said he has made conscious effort not to be influenced by other painters, and endeavors to express his own personal feelings. Contemporaries whom Milton most admires include Karl Zerbe, Willem de Kooning, Ben Shahn, Hans Hoffman and Picasso.

I.D. Cards Issued

The Registrar's Office will not issue I.D. cards at the Football game as was previously announced. They will issue I.D.'s tomorrow from 9 a.m. until noon in 102A Westcott.

The first art class sponsored by the fledgling LeMoyné Art Foundation in Tallahassee had an opportunity to absorb some of Milton's philosophy of art and his techniques this past summer. LeMoyné, a non-profit organization created to propel the art movement in the Southeast, opened in March with more than 25 artists displaying works.

"A painting may have as many interpretations as there are individuals," Milton noted.

Offering a metaphorical explanation to summarize the philosophy which he has endeavored to inject into his paintings, Milton observed that there are as many different "worlds" as there are individuals.

We, as people, are many small worlds inhabiting a larger one, Milton explained. Each small world's senses are keyed differently, but worlds that revolve in similar orbits have greater opportunity for common understanding.

"In order to interpret something of my own personal world I use Anthropology...."

Born in Kansas City, Mo., Guemple did his field work among the inhabitants of the Belcher Islands, Hudson Bay, Canada. The study, done under a Research Fellowship from the National Museum of Canada, in 1962-63, involved the relationship between ecology and Eskimo social organization, especially Eskimo family groupings.

The result of this study was a monograph entitled "Eskimo Wide Exchange," which was published by the U. of Chicago.

Guemple would someday like to go to the Philippine Islands (Leyte group), to investigate community organization.

painting as a means of communication from my world to others. Of course, the greater one's control over his medium of expression, the better he is able to communicate," he said.

Since the arts are among the greatest means of communication, the more fields of art cultivated within an individual's world, the better will be his understanding of others and the better he is able to make himself understood, Milton pointed out. "In my world there is beauty in everything, but it exists in greater or lesser amounts, according to the source of stimulation," the artist said.

Anthropology Dept. Gains Three

The FSU Dept. of Anthropology and Archaeology, in an almost complete turnover of faculty, has gained three new members: Dr. David S. Phelps, Richard H. Furlow, and Ronald L. Guemple.

Dr. Phelps was an undergraduate at the School of Architecture, North Carolina State College, from 1953-57. When he decided to become an anthropologist, Phelps transferred to the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, where he received his A.B. in Anthropology in 1960. While working as a graduate research assistant in the Research Laboratories of Anthropology at Chapel Hill, from 1960-62, Phelps also did graduate study in Anthropology. In 1962, Phelps went to Tulane University in New Orleans, where, in 1964, he received his Ph.D. in Anthropology.

Dr. Phelps was the first graduate student to receive a Ph.D. from the Tulane Dept. of Anthropology. Phelps was born in Gatesville, N.C. His interest in anthropology and archaeology was first aroused when, as a boy, he found Indian pottery fragments (pot-shards) and other Indian cultural artifacts on his farm near Gatesville.

Phelps was selected for the position of Art Editor for the "Handbook of Middle American Indians." In 1962, and is continuing to serve in this capacity for the Tulane U. publication.

Meso-American Indian culture contacts with the southeastern Indians of the U.S. are among Phelps' interests. "The problem of determining the extent and manner in which the various Meso and North American pre-Columbian cultures interacted is an absorbing one," Phelps commented.

Africa also interests Phelps. He would like to look into the matter of the fabled "iron cities" of Africa, and plans one day to investigate that area. "Africa is the back-

RONALD LEE GUEMPLE door to the Egyptian Sudan," Phelps said, "research in this area could help clarify many of the mysteries of Egyptian antiquity."

Besides his two years research in paleontology (the bio-dating of ancient bones), Phelps spent half a year on the skeletal analysis of Soutkan Indian population of N. Carolina.

Phelps also spent 13 months excavating the Twin Creek Indian Mound, Mt. Gilead, N.C., and was in charge of the preliminary archaeological survey of the Cape Fear Reservoir, Roanoke River, N.C.

From 1959-62, Phelps worked on a miscellaneous survey of archaeological sites throughout the state of North Carolina, and in 1963 he did a test excavation at White's Mound, Ga.

His publications include: "A Possible Case of Cannibalism in the Early Woodland Period of Eastern Georgia," published in "American Antiquity," Oct., 1964.

Richard Furlow, a graduate of Indiana University, is presently working on his Ph.D. He took his B.A. in Government from I.U., became interested in anthropology and archaeology, and has recently focused his attention in the field of Ethnology.

Furlow taught for two and a half years at I.U., and was a Social Science Researcher for the National Institute of Mental Health for one year. Under the directorship of Dr. Melvin Ember, Furlow studied the extension of the incest taboo and the evolution of the family.

Born in Indianapolis, Ind., Furlow did his field work at Evansville, Ind., at the Angel mounds site. He also spent two summers excavating a Late Woodland Indian site.

Furlow is interested in Ethnology, and would like to go to a fairly unacculturated area. He wants to study social control, legal and non-legal mores of various peoples, and the relationship between law and values in a culture.

Ronald Guemple attended the U. of Chicago, where he received his B.A. in Social Science. He also received his M.A. in Anthropology from the U. of Chicago, and is at present working on his Ph.D. from that institution.

FSU'S Milton To Open Exhibit In Louisiana

ARTIST....

"Paintings--'64", a showing of the recent canvases of FSU artist George Milton, will go on exhibition Sunday at the Art Gallery of the Louisiana State Art Association, Baton Rouge, La. The exhibition will run through Nov. 15.

Achieving an over-all impression without detail involvement, artist Milton has captured the flavor of a people situation in his most recent paintings offered for showing.

Persons, their places and possessions are projected through color, space relationship and texture.

"I feel detail can distract from the message impact," Milton explained.

In many of the undetailed works the spacing of groups--the occupation of such a small part of the canvas by the figures--represents a detached involvement of the artist from the action of the figures. He's experiencing vicariously the drama of the figure situation as a non-participant, an on-looker.

"In painting 'places' and 'things', I strive first to relate them to a place or the arrangement in the still life," Milton said. "If I may coin a style, I feel these works are ethno-impressionism."

Milton, curator of the University Museum, has won outstanding recognition for his oils and collages, and has been ranked by critics as among the top artists in the Southeast. During 1963 Milton toured Europe and the Near East. The works in "Painting--'64" reveal newly discovered aspects of things others before have painted. His paintings don't "record" his experiences abroad. Milton created in his work what for him survived from a multitude of impressions. His critics saw an increase in depth and variety.

"To Milton there is beauty in all things; in each work he has revealed for us privately discovered aesthetic quality," said an art educator in introducing Milton's 1964 showing.

Fitness Program Limited By Rules But Thinclads Workout Strenuous

At this time of the year when the basketball team works hard in the gym, a group of boys are preparing for the coming season in their sport. Head coach Bud Kennedy has worked out a system of getting the boys in shape which is equaled only by a few other major college basketball teams.

People often wonder what goes into a good basketball program. They also complain about the mistakes a ball club will always make during the first few games, blaming this on the coach's inability to give the boys enough practice.

First of all, there is a rule made by the NCAA which limits a team to so many practice days before the first game. Second, no team can go into its first game and not make mistakes. Areal live game is the only way to iron out some types of mistakes. (Only under pressure can a real ball player be made.)

The rule does not, however, say a player cannot get into shape; it only states that no official basketball coaching with a basketball, can take place before a certain date. In about the second week of school, giving one week of grace to recover from registration, the team begins its "fitness program".

The team fitness program lasts about two and one half hours. The team begins by running from the gym to the track. Here they run a lap and walk a half lap for about twelve laps. If the team doesn't run fast enough they are given another lap to run.

They now run to the stadium for the meaty part of the day. Picking the highest section of seats the coach sends the men up and down them about six times. Up and down counts as one.

Now back to the gym for push ups, sit ups, and rope jumping.

Kentucky Not Indestructible

By RICK HALTON
Flambeau Sports Writer

Those nasty Wildcats from Lexington have been making sportswriters from Seattle to Savannah munch on their pre-season predictions.

After finishing next to last in the Southeastern Conference last year U. K. is starting off the football season the way the Cardinals finished up their National League baseball schedule. Starting slow the Cats just got by little known Detroit 13-6 in the opener.

Next week in Jackson however, came the worst day the Rebels have seen since Gettysburg. The score was 27-21 and if your haven't heard by now, Ole Miss, picked to finish at the top, was on the wrong end. Statistics released this week portray an impressive Seminoles offense and defense. In three games FSU has rolled up 1028 yards and scored a total of 60 points against their opponents.

The Tribe defense has shut down all opposition scoring threats and has distinguished FSU as the only major college team in the nation that is unscored upon.

The passing of Steve Tensi, Ed Fritchett, and Tony Gero has racked up 560 yards and four touchdowns with a phenomenal 41 interceptions on 63 tosses and only two interceptions.

The place kicking of Les Murdoch added another 12 points on two field goals and six for eight extra point tries.

Strangely enough Kentucky has also accumulated a total of 60 points in three games.

Kentucky offense is certainly potent.

There is the passing and running of Junior Quarterback Rick Norton, one of the most sought after high school stars in the country. He can throw long, short, hard, and on target with unerring accuracy.

Add all the around talents of half-back Roger Bird who finished up his sophomore year in a losing season with a 4.5 yard average per carry. Bird does everything but catch his own passes. Runs hard, throws hard, the halfback position and last week ran back an intercepted Auburn pass over 90 yards for a U. K. score.

Critics insist that Florida State has been winning against comparatively weaker teams than Kentucky. Well, Miami isn't having their greatest year in history but they more than matched the Seminoles in size. Texas Christian is no pushover simply because there is no such thing in the rugged Southwestern Conference. New Mexico State's Coach has a record of winning more football games than any other currently practicing head mentor.

U. K. has been "up" mentally and physically for two weeks and it has paid off in wins over two of the biggest pre-season favorites. To be equally "up" a third week in a row will be no small task for the Kentuckians.

It is homecoming for FSU coupled with the pride of being unscored against and the Seminoles know this is their week to live up to all the press clippings. They have been working hard in practice since Monday and from those closed gate sessions will come a dearth of new offensive maneuvers unseen this season.

Taking all the many variables into consideration, and since our Three Million Dollar RCA Computer is on the blink this week, it looks from here, and not to take the coward's way out, a toss-up...with a slight edge to the Seminoles.

More than 34,000 shocked fans left Campbell Stadium Saturday afternoon in disbelief, after witnessing the Seminoles' 48-6 massacre of the fifth ranked Kentucky Wildcats.

Up to the last 30 seconds the usually explosive Wildcats were held to no points by the Tribe's "Magificent Seven." Kentucky redeemed a part of their honor on a freak fumbled punt that gave them the ball on the one yard line, with 40 seconds left in the game.

Two plays later Frank Antonini took the ball in the end zone and broke the Tribes unscored upon record at three games, 59 minutes, and 31 seconds. Earlier, in the second quarter, the Wildcats had been as far as the FSU two, where Bill McDowell threw the ball loose from Rodger Bird, and Avery Hunter recovered for the Tribe.

Angel Flight Registration Set For 8-5 p.m. Today, Tomorrow

Women interested in Angel Flight must register for an interview today at the FSU campus from 8-5 p.m. at the front of the History Building, and the University Union. Interviews will be held Wednesday through Friday, and Saturday, October 14. The interview board will meet the requirements for membership. Angel Flight requires a minimum grade average of 2.0 for junior status, and 2.5 for senior status. The interviewing board will be composed of the executive director of Angel Flight sponsor, a representative from the Dean of Women, and Arnold Air Society members.

Angel Flight, the national honorary service organization sponsored by the Arnold Air Society furthers the course of the United States Air Force by promoting the interest of the college men in the Air Force ROTC program.

In accomplishing this the Angel Flights actively supports the Air Force ROTC, the Arnold Air Society, and their respective colleges and universities.

Over one hundred flights, with a membership of approximately 3,000 serve as hostesses for many functions conducted on campuses across the country.

This past year the FSU "Angels" were named one of the three most outstanding units in the Rex Parade at Mardi Gras and were also guests at Tyndall Air Force Base.

Flambeau Focus Begins Tonight

Dean of Students Harry P. Day said today the students responsible for vulgarity in the Homecoming Pow Wow skits could "expect disciplinary action."

Many of the Homecoming crowd who attended the Pow Wow called university officials Saturday, to protest the content of some of the skits put on by students.

Dean Day said, "The guests of Florida State are due an apology."

Dean Day explained that a faculty committee reviewed the skits twice and deleted parts which it deemed improper.

At the final performance, however, Dean Day said "Changes had been made in many of the skits that were not contained in either of the rehearsals."

Day's complete statement on the matter read: "During Friday night's performance of the Pow Wow, several skits produced by Student groups were in such poor taste that we feel the guests of Florida State are due an apology."

"Progress Calls as Wildcat Falls" sponsored by Delta Gamma and Pi Kappa Phi was announced as best-all-around float at Friday's Pow Wow.

"Whip'em" portrayed by a mixing bowl and recipe gave Delta Delta Delta and Phi Delta Theta the award as the most original float.

The most humorous float, "FSU Rides Victories' Tides," was sponsored by Zeta Tau Alpha and Kappa Sigma.

Given the title most beautiful was "The Garnet and Golden Age" by Phi Mu and Sigma Nu. "Victory in Tow" by Delta Tau Delta and Pi Beta Phi was the most appropriate to the Homecoming theme.

"Victory Stew" won a double award for Smith Hall in the house decorations contest. The Seminole stirring a pot of wildcats and guitars named best men's dorm and best-all-around.

Taking the award as best women's dorm was De Graff Hall with "Victory and More in '64."

"It is impossible for us to believe that the material presented was acceptable on any level for the audience present. With talent and ability possessed by members of the Student Body at this University, there is every reason to expect that a sophisticated variety program, characterized by wit rather vulgarity, could be mounted in the hallmarks of Florida State Pow Wows. We do not feel our students should accept less."

"We are fully aware of the difficulties encountered by the faculty general chairman for the Homecoming program, Dr. William W. Rogers. Along with the Faculty Pow Wow chairman as well as faculty and student judges, Dr. Rogers saw two previews of the Pow Wow skits. Parts which seemed improper were noted and deleted.

At the final performance in Campbell Stadium, however, changes had been made by the students in many of the skits that were not contained in either of the rehearsals. As a result of these circumstances, the student groups involved may expect disciplinary action."

"We do not feel that any part of the Homecoming festivities should be less than the best. Fortunately, every other aspect of the weekend including our magnificent football victory appears to have met that standard."

Ticket Apology Given

"We want to apologize to the students for the awful lines for date tickets to Saturday's game," stated Ronald Melton, athletic business manager.

"We just didn't expect so many," he explained. "We will be prepared next time."

According to Melton, there will be over 12,000 seats available for students and their dates at the FSU-Florida football game. Date tickets may have to be limited.

Watch the "Flambeau" for further information.

Thinking Better Than Acceptance

Perhaps at one time or another we all rationally question the existence of God and/or our belief in a holy spirit.

We are told by some that God is nonexistent, merely a creation of mankind owing its origin to our insecurity and inability to understand ourselves. Consequently, logical arguments lead us to believe that we have manufactured an omniscient being to balance our muddled philosophical views.

Others, confidentially critical (stigmata are socially damaging of mass worship, insist that religious services are forms of self-administered punishment. We violate our consciences and then seek atonement for our sins.

The mention of sin implies a moral, rather than a religious question. What is right or wrong? Our formative years, we were given moral instruction and our consciences, in turn, became an outgrowth of our parents'.

This would seem to indicate that Individuals are so highly opinionated that, although there may be general agreement between them, there will be specific points of view in which they differ. An assembly of people who have similar beliefs are inactive, though sometimes minute, disagreement with other exclusive groups. A large number of contrasting groups form a composite picture which is generally regarded as right or wrong.

In religion, there is a definite linkage between parental influence, our consciences, morals, and in some cases, fear. As independent, free-thinking individuals, we are asked to conform unquestionably to the common idea of goodness and what is right.

We are told that we are sinful and should repent to save ourselves from hell and damnation. Is this concept inspirational? Does fear of a negative after-life influence our conduct? I doubt seriously whether fear can literally "inspire" us to lead idealistic lives. Fear—even when tangible—is no greater than our belief in its cause. Individuals who were indoctrinated from early youth to believe in hell, instinctively fear this type of climatic end to a pleasurable life. Accordingly, they sacrifice themselves to an imposed set of restrictive and live their lives along narrow channels.

In the examination of our beliefs, it is essential to be open-minded. Unfounded conditions lead only to bigotry and dissension. Given the ability to reason and decide for ourselves, wouldn't it be more sensible to substitute careful thought for blind acceptance of what we are told? The question of God will, quite obviously, never be settled. But we owe it to ourselves to have a mental tug of war between the organized and modern logic.

For in the final analysis, intelligent reasoning is the key to world progress and international understanding, and the world is nothing more or less than our awareness of it.

To the Editor:

"Conservatism is not archaic." So reads the headline of your Friday guest columnist Governor Earl Fannin of Arizona. If this little blurb by Fannin is to be taken as some kind of typical example of conservative thinking then I can only reply by saying it may not be archaic but it is incredibly fatuous.

"Conservatism," Fannin says, "is adherence to ideas and policies based on experiences rather than theory." Now it is apparent that Fannin considers Goldwater as "one of the world's best thinkers" who epitomizes this reliance on "experience" and avoidance of "theory" whatever this cherished cliché of the intellectually underprivileged may mean.

Gives Thanks

To The Editor:

As you probably realize, campaigning for an office on the campus of FSU takes a large amount of time both on the part of the candidate and his supporters. And if a candidate does not have this support from others, it is almost impossible for her or he to run.

With this knowledge in mind, I would sincerely like to express my thanks to those people who supported me in my endeavor and who were willing to give their time and energy to my campaign.

Although I would like to list each of you individually in this letter, I'm not able to do so. There are, however, those to whom I would like to give special thanks:

Sandy Sassenet, my campaign manager, my dorm chairman, Barbara Baker, Barbara Harris, and Ed Bonnetre, and those sororities and fraternities who showed that, even though I was an independent, I could count on their help.

I would also like to express my congratulations and offer my support to my opponent, John Maynard, whom I'm sure, will do his utmost to see that our freshman class is duly represented.

I would also like to say that this campaign was a very enjoyable experience and even though I was not elected, I'm fortunate for the opportunity of being able to participate in such an event.

FLAMBEAU FORUM

Fannin's Appraisal Is Fatuous

At this point I have one question.

If relying upon "experience" designates the use of cognitive services as a means of establishing the validity of propositions then we can find, outside of obvious common writing, a political economist treatise any farther removed from "experience" than the "wisdom" of a Conservative.

Most of the stuff that is boldly alleged derived from the knowledge of human nature." Now I realize it is as strange that I know a biologist scientist that I know a biologist bears any resemblance to Goldwater's discoveries.

"Experience," perhaps, means something else. Some, perhaps, have the intuitions that we people have while in some kind of intuitive trance.

But, as Bertrand Russell said, there is no logical connection between the "revelation" of a man who eats too many beans and God (or human nature) and a man who drinks too much and sees stars.

Now Goldwater is a very human man. In the past, at least he seemed to have the saving grace of being much nicer to his opponents than they were to him. But his over-the-top ghost-written ideology, the real "world's best thinking" is ludicrous, and tells one more about the appraisal than the man who is praised.

Questions Posed By Goldwater's Extremism Speech

Barry Goldwater's selection as the 1964 Republican nominee has created more controversy than any national election campaign in the recent past, both within his own party and within the nation.

One of the most controversial statements made by the Arizona Senator is whether "extremism in the defense of liberty is no vice." This statement made many loyal Republicans and loyal Americans wonder whether Goldwater was whitewashing the activities of the John Birch Society and other radical right organizations.

Certainly, anyone who watched the Republican Convention on TV or who is familiar with the Goldwater organization here in Tallahassee and certain other sections of Florida knows that much of Goldwater's most fanatical support comes from such quarters.

Two questions are posed for the voter by Goldwater's acceptance speech comment on extremism.

First, does the Republican candidate believe the John Birch Society and other elements of the radical right are extremist groups, and, secondly, does he accept the active support of these right wing forces in his quest for the highest office in the land?

Actually, the answer to the first question answers the second. Mr. Goldwater does not view the John Birch Society and other super-patriotic organizations as extremist groups and therefore accepts their aid.

This contention is supported by the Senator's statements both prior to, and after the convention.

In March of 1964, Goldwater stated to a New York Times reporter that Birch Society members "believe in the Constitution, they believe in God, and they believe in freedom" and on April 16, 1964, Goldwater commented that "I don't consider the Birch Society as a group to be extremist."

At the Republican unity conference in Hershey in mid-July, while Goldwater repudiated "extremist groups" of character assassins, he still failed to include the Birchers and other ultra-right groups in this category because "they are not on the subversive list."

Is Mr. Goldwater right, then, in regarding the Birch Society and other organs of the radical right as non-extreme? According to Dr. Arthur Larsen, Chairman of the newly formed Council for Civil Responsibility, "spying, nocturnal phone calls, economic and social pressures, stonings, and even bombings" are some of the methods used by these groups.

Dr. Larsen, former director of the U.S.I.A., also charges that rightist organizations spend nearly twenty million dollars a year on propaganda which is "quite literally undermining American democracy."

We are told by this propaganda that as to the Executive, four successive Presidents were traitors; as to the judiciary, most of the judges in the highest court should be impeached; as to the legislative, most of the major legislation by Congress is either unconstitutional or socialist, or both.

Will the position taken by the Republican nominee toward these groups tend to lend respectability to the Far Right and enhance its position within the Republican Party? At least a part of the frontlines in this campaign resulted from Republican voters who fear just that possibility. Many of these voters feel as Governor Nelson Rockefeller expressed himself the day after the Republican Convention:

"To extol extremism in defense of liberty or in pursuit of justice is dangerous, irresponsible, and frightening. I shall continue to fight extremism within the Republican Party. It has no place in the party. It has no place in America."

Biletznikoff was instrumental in FSU's win of the Wildcats, catching two TD tosses and setting two others. He was the leading pass receiver with over 100 yards at halftime. He was double and sometimes triple teamed.

Tribe Tops UK

The Tribe completely dominated the University of Kentucky Wildcats at Campbell Stadium Saturday, belting them around to the tune of 48-6.

FSU revealed its usual strong defense and a surprisingly balanced offense. Key men for the Seminoles were flanker Fred Biletznikoff, quarterback Steve Tensi, and backs Phil Spooner, Larry Green, and Wayne Giardino.

These photos by Flambeau staff photographer Jim Vastine show some of the hard action that enabled the Tribe to upset fifth ranked Kentucky, and burst the Wildcat bubble that had been built up after successive wins over Ole Miss and Auburn.

TOUGH DEFENSIVE PLAY

Tribe Demolishes Kentucky, 48-6

With 13:42 in the first quarter Steve Tensi and the Tribe first unit hit the field to prove that the first three games of the year were no accidents perpetrated on under-matched teams.

Tensi moved the Indians 48 yards in eleven plays for the afternoon's first touchdown. Tensi once again showed pro-like poise as he mixed his plays well to dispell the FSU image as a team that chokes on the big ones.

Tensi sent Larry Green and Lee Narramore through the strong Seminole left side and passed to end Don Floyd to put the Tribe to work at the Wildcat 4.

Four plays later Tensi hit Narramore in the end zone for the tally. Les Murdock converted and the score board read 7-0 with 9:15 left.

Kentucky stalled on the 33 four plays after the kick off and had to punt to the FSU 36. A 15 yard penalty moved the Tribe into Wildcat territory at the 47.

On the first play from scrimmage Tensi and Fred Biletnikoff teamed on the bomb for a 47 yard touchdown pass play. On the play Biletnikoff had to out maneuver two defenders to grab the ball on the seven and then trot into the end zone.

Two touchdowns in the first quarter seemed almost too much to hope for but Tensi and crew went one better and got 21 points when Phil Spooner went over from the two with 1:13 left.

The TD was set up when Bird called for a fair catch of Pritchett's 64 yard punt but missed it and George D'Allesandro recovered the loose ball on the 12.

Officials ruled that Bird had touched the ball making it a free ball — free for anybody who grabbed it. Nine plays and two minutes passed and FSU had its third score.

Kentucky seemed to recover from its first quarter shock at the beginning of the second stanza. Bird and quarterback Rich Norton moved the Cats from their own 18 to the FSU 18.

With fourth and nine on the 18 Norton passed to halfback Tom Becherer in the end zone but the ball bounced out of his hands.

Minutes later the Wildcats had their second chance to score when J. D. Smith intercepted a deflected Tensi pass on the 39. Smith ran it back to the FSU 21. Runs by Bird and two big penalties had Kentucky set up for what looked like a sure TD on the two.

Minutes later Sumner erased that hope though by forcing Bird to fumble. After an exchange of punts FSU again got moving from the Tribe 34. Brilliant running behind strong blocking took the Seminoles to the Kentucky 31.

From here the Seminoles appeared unable to make a serious mistake. Spooner rambled for 24 but fumbled on the seven. Biletnikoff turned this into plus yardage as he recovered at the one.

Spooner dove in from the one to put the surprising Seminoles ahead 27-0 at the half. Scoring slowed down in the third quarter as Kentucky tightened up its running defense and forced the Tribe to punt several times.

Tensi did engineer one scoring drive from the Kentucky 47. Using key passes to Biletnikoff and Floyd and a 12 yard draw play by Narramore the team moved to the eight.

Tensi then threaded a perfect pass to Biletnikoff in the end zone for six more points. As usual he had to elude three defenders to make the catch.

After Murdock's kick the score was 34-0 with 6:18 left in the third quarter.

Head Coach Bill Peterson gave his first stringers a rest in the fourth quarter and used both defensive and offensive second units.

With Bird out because of an injury the Wildcats had to depend on Larry Temple to do the punting. At the end of the third quarter he squatted a short punt from the two to the 26.

From here Pritchett, Tanker Elton, Revell, and back Wayne Giardino took the Seminoles down field for

Nine minutes later Pritchett added the last FSU TD of the afternoon, scoring from the six on a drive that started on the Kentucky 38.

Once again Biletnikoff made a key catch on the six from the 38. The Wildcats saved their face scoring six points with 29 seconds left after Pat Conway fumbled a punt on the one.

Insight Links Writer And Reader

A writer and his reader are irreparably linked by a common experience—life.

A writer differs from other men only in degree, not in kind.

He shares with them the common problems of humanity, but unlike others he finds a communion in the people, ideals, and experiences which compose his sphere of experience.

While others react to a situation, it is the writer who interacts. He perceives and understands, and relates an experience to all its interrelated parts.

An automobile accident would be a gruesome spectacle for anyone passing by, but other than telling his friends and family, the average person will soon turn to other thoughts. A writer, however, will see the situation in its entirety. He will understand the anguish of the victims, the remorse of the reckless driver, and the reasons behind the occurrence.

He will remember and relate, until this experience has meshed with other thoughts and ideas that are within him.

Letters Policy

Readers are reminded that all "Flambeau" letters to the editor must include both the writer's name and student number.

All letters to the editor will be checked against the current registrar's list. Names will be withheld in certain circumstances, upon the request of the writer and the approval of the "Flambeau" editor after mutual consultation.

Unsigned, libelous, or other letter in violation had taste will be considered.

Suggests Program For Vietnam

That there is a war in Vietnam is now common knowledge. That American troops are in fact involved in combat there has penetrated even the most unperceptive minds. Over two hundred have died there, and just last week five more American soldiers were killed.

Many groups have spoken out against intervention in South Vietnam. Still more people are expressing concern over the possible extension of the war in North Vietnam. Interpretive accounts are riddled by very specific statements by military men indicate that the U.S. is seriously considering sabotage and bombing of industrial sites in North Vietnam. As the war grows larger, the prospect of containing it diminishes, and the possibility of its escalating into nuclear war increases every day.

The United States now supplies rapra to the South Vietnamese—the "fluid petrol"—jelly that explodes in contact, throwing the burning liquid over wide areas. According to an Al dispatch, the phosphorus "drums" in a white cloud burning through everything it touches.

"With explosive news is these," the AP report continued, "civilians are being hurt." The moral dilemma we face is what we faced in Korea and every other war we fought in. One American officer said, "We don't want to see civilians killed as they are killed because that is a horrible by-product of war."

On March 4, 1964, Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon spoke out in the U.S. Senate: "Those troops should be brought home. They should never have been sent there in the first place. American unilateral participation in the war of South Vietnam cannot be justified in American his-

It is the writer's job to see these things and to express them. Yet this is where the peculiar bond between writer and reader is established. The writer can do only so much. His reader must have the seeds of experience within him, or the writer is powerless to touch him. They must have a common identity. The writer does not simplify life or reduce it to a set of rules. He must present a specific experience and hope that his reader has "lived" enough to appreciate it.

The true writer has more than a faculty for words. He will write because there is something within him that compels him to write. He is set apart from other men, yet linked to them just as surely; for people are a writer's world.

The seeds of a good writer or a good reader do not lie in the classroom or in a grammar book. Both parties must somehow learn to perceive and understand. They must relate a life to themselves and to others.

Only then do books and life have meaning.

Campus Telephone System Anemic

I was very depressed a couple of nights ago. I had to call a code at Salley dormitory. Now, believe me, it was not this charming young lady that sent me reeling into a state of melancholia—it was the d—n FSU phone system.

At first, I was really optimistic, however, my great expectations were shattered in the first twenty minutes. Then, when I discovered that I had had that distressing black receiver coked by my ear for forty-five minutes, I realized that my high hopes were completely unwarranted and unreasonable.

FSU, the apex of progress in the Florida educational system, sorely lacks an adequate communications system—there just aren't enough minutes. Our beloved campus has a total of only one hundred telephone lines, all of which are not in working order.

These phones are supposedly adequate to fill the needs of the faculty, staff and students. Exactly how many people these three bodies comprise, I really cannot say, as this figure is not for publication until it is approved by the Board of Control.

Do facts and figures deviate while traveling through the hallowed offices of the "Great" BOG?

To graphically illustrate the anemic phone system at FSU, I need only direct your attention to the library, where a plethora of phones line the walls. Only one telephone is provided for student use in this heavily frequented edifice.

It is true that a pay station is also located in the library, and if you care to wait three hours for that melodious, rhythmic, syncopated dial-tone to come blurring into your ear, be my guest.

The nauseating fact is that, in terms of communications, FSU is as pro-

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Young Democrats and the Young Citizens for Johnson, I would like to thank the students of Tallahassee for their fine work before and during Mrs. Johnson's visit to Florida State University.

Because of the large number of people who worked together preparing for the Lady Bird Special, it is next to impossible to list each one in this letter.

However, I would like to give special thanks to Lyle Smith, Mary Bunyan for their wonderful work with the Johnsonettes, who would also like to thank those who were understanding and smiling through ten days of hours and absences.

The three husbands hope the professors might do the same. In closing, I would like to extend an invitation to all students and faculty members to come to the Young Democrats meeting this Wednesday at 7:30 in room 101 of the History Bldg.

Mrs. Johnson and the Johnsonettes will not be there at 7:30. We have plenty of chairs and food. James L. Smith

Congress Should Start Automation Committee

Robert Taft, Jr., (R. Ohio), Congressman-at-Large, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, and was educated at Yale University Law School. Congressman Robert Taft, Jr. is the son of the late Senator Robert Taft, probably one of the greatest statesmen of this century. He (Taft, Jr.) is a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, as well as the Committee on Education and Labor Committee.

As proposed by Congressman Frank Bow and many others, the Congress should set up a select committee on automation, bipartisan in nature and directed toward coming up with answers as to how automation can help to create jobs as well as eliminate them. Realistically here, we have to admit that we must not block progress, but by sales engineering and imagination, we should be able to make progress. Another area for concern in regard to future employment developments is the whole area of balance of international payments, our tax laws and various other features have encouraged a flight of capital from the United States in recent years, and this has definitely resulted in the creation of jobs abroad and the loss of jobs that might have been created through expansion of American industry here.

After these foreign plans are set up, they are then used to compete with industry here at home, and this has a further disastrous effect upon our economy and job creation.

No discussion of this area could omit a consideration of restrictive labor-management policies and practices such as restrictive union membership, excessive security provisions, and wages and benefits, which because of their transferability, have freed workers in particular areas of particular employment.

Then, too, we must be realistic enough to admit that our compensation laws, the cost of health care, and the cost of welfare programs, have had the effect of slowing down the rate of employment.

Finally, we must recognize that the "structural unemployment" is a serious and increasing problem, which must be completely solved. It has been pointed out in a report by Mr. Myrdal, and has been emphasized by others, that automation has developed beyond the demand in the labor field.

Obviously this is true because we have some 4 million unemployed and some 10 million people working underutilized, seeking work.

We're Number Ten; Going All The Way

By BOB CORNET
Flambeau Sports Editor

Two days after the deed and it's still a little unbelievable—FSU not only upset, but demolished the powerful Kentucky Wildcats 48-6. The Associated Press made it official though, ranking the Seminoles number ten in the nation.

The only person that this really doesn't surprise is coach Bill Peterson. Peterson has said from the beginning of the season that this will be the best team he has coached and will coach in ten years.

After Saturday, no one can afford to dismiss this as the usual after-dinner speech taken with warm coffee and cold pie. The Tribe is definitely a powerful football team, with many talented individuals.

Most reviewers conceded the talent of Fred Biletnikoff, but few credited any other players with more than average ability. Saturday proved them wrong.

Heading the list of surprise talents is Steve Tensi. He is usually labeled the "talented quarterback in the country." That may have to be changed to the "best."

Tensi did not get shook when rushed, passes hand and accurately, and keeps the defense off balance with his mixed plays.

For the first time in many years the Seminoles can legitimately claim a balanced attack. The running of Phil Spooner, Larry Green, Lee Narramore, and Wayne Gardino has been astounding considering the normal Tribe ground game.

"All four have speed, drive, and intangible ability to lead daylight into a broken field."

These men, along with Biletnikoff and ends Don Floyd and Ed Dwyer, comprise what was supposed to be the sputtery Tribe offense. So far they managed to "lick out" 100 points in four games.

Defensively FSU has been no less than brilliant. The "Magnificent Seven" have held opponents to lucky points and negated the Tribe's defensive backfield—who, by begging to call themselves the "Fogotten Four"—proved themselves Saturday.

They held one of Kentucky's lead passers to 10 out of 20 completions and came through with two interceptions.

The Seminoles' dramatic call demonstrated Saturday that they are more than "that promising young independent." After a season of undefeated season seen that is rather than impossible.

WINFRED BAILEY

Wigelius, White Outline Program

Plans for the University-Student Political Education Committee were of primary concern to members in Wednesday afternoon's cabinet meeting.
Secretary of State Mike Wigelius and Under-Secretary of State John White outlined the program's progress.
Wigelius said more students interested in working with legislators from their home areas were needed to help promote the program and that interested students would come by Student Government offices, 210 Longmire for more information.
The overall aspects of the committee will include participation from the other universities in Florida, according to Wigelius.
"Interest has been shown by the other universities and we hope to make many of the needs of higher education known to our legislators, through the work of the committee," Wigelius reported.
"Through the Political Education Committee we hope to promote the aims of the University," White added.
According to Wigelius, the program will provide state legislators with a general outline of the goals and desired legislation of the university students.
"Much research will go into our presentations to these state officials," he said.
The beginning of active work on campus will be at FSU's annual Legislative Day.

Student Government President Releases Pow-Wow Statement

Student Body President John Merting issued this statement today: The current topic of discussion raging everywhere on the campus, and even in Tallahassee is, as anyone could quickly tell, Friday's Pow Wow.

I feel the question now facing the University committee is whether this activity is for students to build school spirit, or whether it is to be a theatrical production effecting the glories of our University and its administration, glossing over its infirmities and foibles.

Admittedly certain parts of the presentation may have been relative to a children's audience. However, to a sophisticated gathering of college students, the deletion of some of the more objectionable material should have sufficed.

It is my personal opinion that the Pow Wow, through the skit presentations, should serve as a valuable medium for the expression of student disagreements with all University policies and the general campus situation.

This past Pow Wow was the first opportunity for students to express their views openly since the skits were discontinued some years ago. For the benefit of those who think that the few students involved "a-posed" the "privilege" by speaking out so "abusively," I would say that possible the situation might indicate a basically, unhealthy condition. Whenever college students have been continually suppressed, at the first opportunity they are granted to express themselves they may exceed the prescribed "limits".

I definitely feel the Pow Wow should be for Students primarily, and by students, exclusively. As for the reported grossness, one need only attend the shows presented by any of the national folk-singing groups to find an equal or lower level.

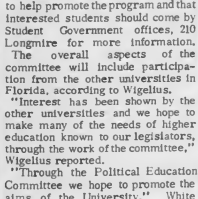

If there must be a scapegoat to assuage the ire of the hypocritical political pressmen, I and many students will be proud to shoulder the burden of guilt and release the faculty members of the Homecoming Committee from any criticism.

I would like to personally assume any blame which may have been laid on the shoulders of Fr. William Rogers or Dr. Robert Wolverton. They, in as far as was humanly possible, reviewed the skits and requested several changes which were subsequently not made.

For this no one could conceivably hold anyone of the faculty members of the committee responsible. I would encourage each and every student to review this situation and express his opinion to the proper administrative officials.

NEW CLUB ON CAMPUS

... was organized Monday night when this sign appeared on the Campus Gate Entrance to Jefferson St.
Students, under the title of the Social Action committee of the FSU Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Students, struck back at the administration by hosting five deans effigies on the Jefferson St. entrance gate.
The figures, Mickey Mice in space suits, were each provided with the sign "Hi, I'm (the Dean's first name)."
(Deans Harry Day, Katherine Warren, Sarah Robinson, Donald Loucks and Hugh Adams were the targets of the students involved.

Burton Chosen New Chairman

The National Council of Teachers of English announced today that Dr. Dwight L. Burton, head of the Department of English Education at FSU, has been selected chairman of a new national organization, the Conference on English Education.

The new organization enrolls educators especially concerned with the preparation of teachers of English for the public schools. The group will have a meeting in March at the University of Kentucky.

At the same time, the English Council announced that Dr. Burton has been appointed chairman of its Committee on Research. He will coordinate research activities.

"Man For All Seasons" Opens Wednesday: Said Great Drama

By LIANNE MUNYER

Flambeau Staff Writer
"A Man For All Seasons," which will open on campus next Wednesday, enjoyed a highly successful two-season run on Broadway.

Critics acclaimed the play as one of the greatest contemporary dramas, and marked Robert Bolt, the author, one of the most promising new playwrights.

The FSU presentation, directed by Mr. Robert G. Fallon, is an experiment in staging and production. In order to justly portray the deep meaning behind the action in the chaotic time of sixteenth-century England, devices made famous by playwright Bertolt Brecht are being employed.

Props lowered from the top of the stage, a "Common Man" who speaks to the audience, and fake-looking scenery make Brechtian staging a very theatrical style. However, there is a significant reason for its use.

"If you can draw the audience away from the play by making them realize it is, after all, a play, then perhaps the theme will stand out," says Fallon.

The very essence of Bolt's play is its theme. It centers around Sir Thomas More, an influential advisor to King Henry VIII, who is caught in the midst of the chaotic changes taking place when Henry VIII forces a break with the Catholic Church. At this time in history, two violently opposing social forces compelled men to make a choice. The king and the faction that favored the break demanded More's verbal support.

Due to unshakable principles More was unwilling and unable to yield to this demand. Neither would he publicly support the opposing faction and thereby receive their protection. He was eventually executed.

"As the protagonist, More is an interesting variation," says Fallon. "Antigone, for example, felt she must act willfully. Like her, More suffers because he refuses to capitulate."

... Condemns

A group of high-spirited collegians on the eve of their big Homecoming Game would certainly be in the mood for a few good laughs at some sophisticated sex which would not endanger either the reputation of the school or of the participants.

HOWEVER, that badly produced, badly acted, mistakes galore (as were parts of it) could hardly be labeled as in good taste regardless of the time or place.

Surprised me even more that some sororities were "in the act" with most of it. These fine, highly cultured young "LADIES" surely presented themselves as they never did before—at least in the open. I wonder how the reputation of those not involved in the activities will be affected as a result of the general overall misconduct.

For those girls who prefer the Gator Boys—may I suggest the Greyhound Bus Line.

The REAL young ladies of FSU are more than welcome to stay.

FSU Included In New List Of PAPPI Undergraduate Program

Florida State is one of 12 schools included in a new undergraduate scholarship program announced today by the Pan American Petroleum Foundation, Inc.

The Foundation is supported by Pan American Petroleum Corporation, North American oil production subsidiary of Standard Oil Company (Indiana).

Sixteen scholarships will be supported by the Foundation beginning in the 1965-66 academic year in the fields of geology, engineering, and geophysics.

Each scholarship will carry a stipend of up to $1,000 per year for the winner, and annual grant of $300 to the university department in which the winner enrolls, and a one-time grant of $200 to each winner's high school. The latter is for the purchase of scientific equipment.

Selection of the scholarship winners and administration of the awards will be handled by the respective universities. Application for the scholarships are directed to the institutions.

At FSU the scholarship which will be awarded in geophysics carries a stipend of $400 for the freshman year, $500 for the sophomore year, and $1,000 for the junior and senior years.

Students may apply for the scholarships if they have at least a 3.0 high school grade point average on a scale of 4.0 equals A. Winners will retain the scholarship throughout their undergraduate career if they continue to maintain a 3.0 or better grade average.

Scholarship winners will be offered summer employment with Pan American Petroleum Corporation at the conclusion of each academic year. Provided they have reached the age of 18 and have qualified for continuation of their scholarships.

Mr. Geo. W. Clarke, vice president of the foundation, said the new program was motivated by concern over an increasing shortage of students in the areas of scientific education important to the petroleum producing industry.

"For the past several years enrollments in petroleum engineering, geology, and geophysics have declined steadily to the point where there is genuine concern about whether the oil-producing industry will have adequate numbers of capable, well-trained professional people to meet its requirements," he noted.

... Aroused

FSU will be influenced by the acts presented by our student girls, whose fine spirit of wholesome fun, decency and common courtesy displayed amid the level of their deportment and social graces. The ladies outdid themselves, and we wish Lady Bird and her family could have witnessed their skills and could view for themselves the kind of people who represent a special elite class on campus.

All of us are assured that the campus spirit is in commenting on the unusual activity as we watch our Greeks find new levels of achievement and meritorious conduct based on principled standards emblematic of the fine men and women who associate themselves with these social organizations.

Our apologies to SAA, for Pow Wow showed that this new spirit must be sweeping our Greek friends to exhibit to the public the type of people they want the public to associate with. We are all so very proud of the impressions people are carrying back to their homes, and of the article in the Tallahassee Democrat regarding Pow Wow.

Greeks, you really surprised us. Robert L. Green Men of Falcon House

And one of the press are a party to the crime. Last year the movie Hardcore in our newspaper got so salacious and suggestive that the advertising manager and I decided to throw out the worst and set up some standards. We thought that due to our unique there might be some interruption in advertising some shows. But no. Within a couple of hours the exhibitors were down with much milder ads. How was this miracle accomplished?

Well, it seems that the exhibitors are supplied with several different bids for each movie. If the publishers are dumb enough to accept the most suggestive ones those are what they get. But if publishers squawk and send the ones down, isn't it time we all squawked?

THE AGE OF FAKERY IN ART

Having neglected disciplines in education it was quite logical that we should re-study disciplines in art. The great painters and sculptors of the past studied anatomy so diligently that they often indulged in their own body-snatching. And today, after many centuries, we stare at the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel or at the walls of the Reichsmuseum and marvel at their works.

But this self-discipline is of little concern to the modern non-objective painter. All he needs is pigment and press agent. He can throw colors at a canvas and the art world will discover him. He can stick bits of glass, old tags and quids of used chewing tobacco on a board and he is a social critic. He can drive a car back and forth in pools of paint and the magazine will write him up.

Talent is for squares. What you need is vast errantry. If you undertake to paint a cow it must look something like a cow. That takes at least a sign-painter's ability. But you can claim to paint a picture of your psyche and no matter what the result who is to say what your psyche looks like? So our museums are filled with daubs being stared at by confused citizens who haven't the guts to admit they are confused.

But the Age-of-Fakey in art is a mild cross that American civilization beats. Much more serious is our collapse of moral standards and the blunting of our capacity for righteous indignation.

THE MORAL FACE OF AMERICA CHANGES

Our Puritan ancestors were preoccupied with sin. They were so preoccupied with it that they were haggard and gut-ridden and their lives were a repressed and neurotic society. But they had horsepower. They wrested livings from rocky land, built our earliest colleges, started our literature, caused our industrial revolution, and found time in between to fight the Indians, the French and the British, to bawl for abolition, women suffrage and prison reform, and to experiment with graham crackers and balloons. They were a tremendous people.

And for all their exaggerated attention to sin, their philosophy rested on a great granite rock. Man was the master of his soul. You didn't have to be bad. You could and should be better. And if you wanted to escape the eternal fires you'd damned well better be.

In recent years all this has changed in America. We have decided that sin is largely imaginary. We have become enamored with "behavioristic psychology." This holds that a man is a product of his heredity and his environment, and his behavior to a large degree is foreordained.

How many of these "realistic" Americans do you know?

Two months ago an American touring company, sponsored by the State Department and paid for by your tax dollars, presented one of Tennessee Williams' more depraved offerings to an audience in Rio de Janeiro. The audience booed in disgust and walked out. And whether it walks to? Right across the street where a Russian ballet company was putting on a beautiful performance for the glory of Russia! How dumb can we get?

I think it's time we quit giving page 1 play to the extra-marital unkeits of crooners. I think it is time we stopped treating as glamorous and exciting the brazen shack-ups of screen tramps. I think it is time we asked our Broadway and Hollywood columnists if they can't find something decent and inspiring going on along their beats.

And the stage They raided Minsky's so Minsky's has spread all over town. Bawdiness has put on a dinner jacket, and seats in the orchestra that used to go for sixbits at the Old Howard and Nichols' Gayety are now scaled at $8.80. Oh, yes. And we have lots of "realism," vicious Americans. Perverted Americans. Degenerate Americans. Murderous Americans.

In this hour of fear, confusion and self-doubt let this be the story of America. Unless I misread the signs a great number of our people are ready. Let there be a fresh breeze, a breeze of new honesty, new idealism, new integrity.

And there, gentlemen, is where you come in. You have typewriters, presses and a huge audience.

How about raising hell?

Want Additional Copies? For Information on Securing Additional Copies In Pamphlet Form . . . Write P. O. Box, 1571, Tallahassee, Fla.

It is time we hit the sawdust trail. It is time we revived the idea that there is such a thing as sin—just plain and well known. It is time we brought self-discipline back into style. And who has a greater responsibility at this hour than we, the gentlemen of the press?

So I suggest:

Let's look to our educational institutions at the local level, and if Johnny can't read by the time he's ready to get married let's find out why.

Let's look at the distribution of public largesse and if, far from alleviating human misery, it is producing the sloth and irresponsibility that intensifies it. Let's get it fixed.

Let's quit being bulldozed and bedazzled by self-appointed long hair. Let's have the guts to say that a book is dirt if that's what we think. Let's have the guts to say that a painting may well be a dab if you can't figure out what it's about. Let's have the guts to say that a novel is a dud if it's not the way we want to read it. And if some beatnik welds together a combination of rusty cogwheels and old corset stays and claims it's a greater sculpture than Michelangelo's "David," let's have the courage to say that it's a sculpture like junk and probably is.

Let's blow the whistle on plays that would bring blushes to an American Legion stag party. Let's not be awed by movie characters with upward morals even if some of them have been photographed climbing aboard the Presidential yacht. Let us pay more attention in our news columns to the decent people everywhere who are trying to do something for the good of others.

In short, gentlemen, let's cover up the cesspool and start planting some flowers.

Well, that's the jeremiad. I never thought I'd deliver one of these never dreamed I'd go around sounding like an advance man for the Watch-and-Ward Society. I used to consider myself quite a liberal young man. I still think that on some people bikinis look fine.

But I am fed up to here with the educationists and pseudo-scientists who have underlined for potential art people. I am fed up to here with the medicine men who try to pass off pretense for art and ignorance for literature. I am tired of seeing America debased and lowered in the eyes of foreigners. And I am genuinely disturbed that to idealists in the South in many countries the fraud of Communism appears synonymous with morality, while we the chief repository of real freedom are regarded as being in the last stages of decay.

We can learn a lesson from history. Twice before our British cousins appeared heading into a collapse of principle, and twice they drew themselves back. The British court reached an advanced stage of corruption under the Stuarts. But the people rebelled. And in the advanced stage of George IV and William IV it looked as though Britain were rotting under again. But the people banged through the reform laws, and under Victoria went on to the peak of their power.

Sock Makers Wringing Hands, FSU Men Now Going Casual

BY CATHY KNUTSON

Sock makers of America are pacing floors and wringing their hands. American malehood—college age variety—has staged a rebellion to the "fired and true" tradition of wearing socks. FSU is no exception to this sockless surge. For the most part, socks are worn unless the occasion is informal. But that is almost always at FSU. With curiosity as a motive, a poll was made of men on campus to see what their reasons were for wearing or not wearing socks. Varied were the answers. Sherman Henderson feels that guys who don't go sockless are "definitely out-to-lunch" as far as being "cool" is concerned.

Lee Hunt states that he is "just too lazy" to wear socks. "I just do what I want to, when I want to."

Tom Duncan, Bill Ward, Marty Sobol, and Alan King don't wear socks because they feel its more comfortable without them.

Steve Rice doesn't wear socks because it draws attention to the feet. "That's not where the attention should be directed."

On the other side of the fence is Bobby Carnally and Andy Woods. They both agree that wearing socks shows good manners. "It's like wearing a suit without a tie not to wear socks," said Carnally.

Tom La Santa wears socks because that's how he was brought up. "I've always worn socks since I was a little boy. They're part of one's attire. Not wearing them is trying to be a non-conformist."

Lo Scott feels that "to be properly dressed, socks would make the attire complete."

However, in informal settings, it seems proper to be without socks. If you so choose.

John Merting doesn't feel "anyone should dictate how others dress."

One girl, Sheila Feldermayer, objected to boys who went sockless. "Next they'll be shaving their legs!"

FSU Dedicates Sally Dormitory

An eight-story dormitory which emphasizes an abundance of study space and privacy for its 576 occupants, was dedicated by FSU Friday as Sally Hall.

R. A. Gray, retired secretary of state, was the speaker at the dedication ceremonies in the residence hall at which the hall was formally named for the late Nathaniel Moss Salley, a former dean of the School of Education at Florida State College for Women.

Gray, who was a student of Salley's at two summer sessions for teachers at FSCW, was the principal speaker.

The late Nathaniel Moss Salley was at FSCW for 30 years. He died in 1951. His son, G. Lawrence Salley of Tallahassee, spoke after Gray. Thomas D. Bailey, state superintendent of education, presented the building, which was accepted by Dr. Wayne C. McCall, Board of Control member from Ocala, and Dr. Gordon Blackwell, FSU president. Dr. Blackwell also presided at the dedication. The Rev. Jeffery Alfriend gave the invocation and benediction. A reception and tour of student suites followed the ceremonies.

Two Seminoles Tops In Offense

Three reasons for the 4-0 record of the Seminoles this year are Steve Tensi (left), Fred Bilenkoff (right) and the "Magnificent Seven" (below). Tensi and Bilenkoff are the state's leaders in passing and pass reception. Tensi has hit his receivers in 56 plays for 522 yards and seven touchdowns.

Bilenkoff is leading the state in pass receiving with 19 completions for 349 yards and five tallies. With mid-year records like these, the two are considered prime all star candidates.

The "Magnificent Seven" led this week by "Savage" Avery Sumner, have held opponents to only six points in four games. This is a record unmatched by any other major college in the nation.

"We've Been Working For National Recognition"—Peterson

By DAVE ROSS
Flambeau Sports Writer

"National recognition, other than last year, is what we've been working for," said Head Football Coach Bill Peterson today.

"Now that FSU has attained this recognition we will have to work that much harder to stay there."

Staying there will mean a decisive victory against the Georgia Bulldogs in Athens next Saturday afternoon. For the first time the tables will be turned as a Southeastern Conference member will try to knock out nationally ranked FSU.

When asked how a victory in Athens would affect the Seminoles national ratings Peterson said, "It would certainly stabilize us. There are 13 undefeated teams in the nation, we would have to wait and see how they do."

The Seminoles defeated the Bulldogs the last two times the teams met. However, Peterson was impressed by films of last week's game when the Bulldogs defeated Clemson.

Peterson described Georgia as a good all-around team with an especially good defense. With the Seminoles being nationally ranked and Georgia a natural rival, Peterson predicted a "tough game."

When asked about the possibility of the Seminoles being issued a bowl bid Peterson replied, "We play them one at a time and right now it's the Bulldogs of Georgia."

Peterson had praise for the student body during the scalping of the Wildcats.

He said, "The entire team felt the student body behind them. We appreciated the standing ovation given to both our offensive and defensive units."

Delores Lord, last year's Gymkana Queen, prepares to hoist the 1964 Gymkana Show poster.

Gymkana Heads On 'Safari'

The annual Gymkana Show heads on a "Safari" Wednesday through Saturday, with props, costumes and musical accompaniment designed to lend an exotic atmosphere to the 1964 Safari theme.

Director of Gymkana, Dr. Hartley Price, and Assistant Director Guy Atkinson are responsible for the Gymkana Home Show arrangements and acts.

Delores Lord, last year's Gymkana Queen, and the newly elected Gymkana Court have been assisting Price and Atkinson.

In addition to the long hours spent in practice by the Gymkana team, many sororities are lending a hand in the preparation of the show. The sorority which puts in the greatest total hours of work will be awarded the Gymkana Trophy of Appreciation. The trophy will be presented Saturday night, when the 1964 Gymkana Queen is announced.

Gymkana is a nationally known organization, and the FSU troupe has received national recognition for their gymnastic and acrobatic feats. The 1964 Gymkana Safari will be the largest Home Show in FSU's Gymkana history, and provisions are being made for a record-breaking attendance.

The Queen will be chosen from the Gymkana Court.

GERSON YESSIN

Yessin Featured Tomorrow

Flant's Gerson Yessin will be featured in the FSU Symphony Orchestra's first concert of the season tomorrow at 8:15 p.m. in Westcott Auditorium.

The University Symphony, made up of some 60 musicians, presents a series of concerts each season as part of the public service programs of the FSU School of Music. The Symphony is conducted by Robert Sedore.

The two-part program will open with Rossini's "The Barber of Seville Overture." The young concert pianist will be featured in the next number, Mozart's "Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, in C minor."

Yessin, associate professor and chairman of the music division of the College of Music and Fine Arts at Jacksonville University, has been hailed as a brilliant young pianist. A student of Edward Kilenyi at FSU, Yessin is the first pianist to receive two Olga Samaroff Grants and he was also co-recipients of the One Thousand Dollar Award made by the International Recording Festival.

Following a brilliant debut at the age of 17 with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra, he has been heard as soloist with many of the major orchestras. A candidate for the doctoral degree at FSU, his previous degrees are from the Juillard School of Music.

At the last part of the program, the orchestra will play Tchaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet Overture Fantasy," "The Enchanted Lake," an impressionistic piece by Anatole Liadov, and "Two Romanian Dances, Op. 8" by Bela Bartok.

SG Sets Retreat

Raduga Dancers Will Perform Monday

By ELEANORA BAKER

There will be a "rainbow over the lakes" Monday at 8:30 p.m. in Westcott Auditorium will be the theme of a stirring performance by

DR. FRANCIS TOWNSEND

Townsend to Speak

Francis G. Townsend, whose interest in the Victorian era has selected the most Victorian poems, "Locksley Hall" and "The Enchanted Lake," as the subject for the Coffee Hour of the fall semester.

One of the weekly social hours in Westminister Hall, 4 p.m. tomorrow, Dr. Townsend will read the poem with incidental music. This poem because it is a Victorian one and one which was the Victorians themselves, and it is one of the most of it is scooped at by most critics as loaded with stupid sentiments. Nevertheless, it has never lost its popularity. Tennyson was ahead of us and that they confused the poem with the folly of the Raduga Dancers, a troupe of touring Russians.

This name, pronounced RAH-du-ga, means "rainbow" in the Russian language; it was thought that this would best describe their colorful program of song, music, and dance.

Raduga's dazzling spectrum of talents include classical ballet dancers drawn from the top Russian dance companies including the Bolshoi International Company in Moscow. Folk dancing stars will perform vibrant peasant dances.

A young Tartar named Shamyl Yagudin is a star attraction of the Bolshoi Ballet in Moscow and is noted for the fire and dash of his performance in ballets by Kharchanurian and Prokofiev, as well as in the more classical repertoire.

Ballerina Lydia Ustinova is not only a top-ranking classical ballerina at the Bolshoi Theatre, but has appeared as a soloist with the Molsievsky Dance Company throughout Europe and Russia.

Vsevolod Nemolayev, also a Bolshoi star, has been acclaimed by his government for his remarkable folk-dance creations.

Bernara Kareeva is a prima ballerina in the Naval Theatre of Opera and Ballet in exotic Tashkent, Uzbekistan, and dances often with major Moscow companies. Velta Vitsyn is a young ballerina from the Latvian Opera and Ballet Theatre who has gained fame in many new Soviet works.

Eleanor Vlasova comes from Moscow's famous Stanislavsky Theatre

The announcement was made by Barbara Walker, chairman of the rally bureau, who added, "If it's raining, the rally will be cancelled."

Student Body President John Mering said "The rally this week will give the students a chance to show their appreciation for the excellent job the football team is doing and to show their support for the team."

"We would like to break all past records of student participation in activities of this type and show everyone the student spirit FSU is capable of having," Mering said. "It takes the team effort of both players and the audience to make school spirit. Let's really back the team that is going to win eleven games this year, the last one in the Orange Bowl," Mering concluded.

TODAY

Collegians Want Composition For 1965 Spring Concert, Tour

FSU's Collegians, the men's glee club, has announced a contest for the selection of an original composition to be performed at their 1965 spring concert and tour. There will be approximately eight performances.

The purposes of the contest are to encourage the composition of music for men's voices, to provide a functional outlet for FSU composers, and to provide an opportunity to become acquainted with techniques peculiar to men's voices.

The contest is open to any undergraduate or graduate student at FSU. The composition must be turned over to the judges before midnight Jan. 1, 1965.

Compositions should be three to six minute choral works based on a sacred or secular text. The work may be unaccompanied or accompanied by piano, organ, or a small instrumental ensemble. In the latter case, a piano reduction must be supplied.

Any composition will be disqualified if copyright clearance of text has not been obtained where applicable.

The Collegians will pay for the reproduction of the winning composition.

The composer's name must not appear on the manuscript. Please place name in sealed envelope, bearing on its face a suitable pseudonym. Omar Allen was last year's winner of the contest. His composition, "Behold Thou Art Fair, My Love," with text taken from "Song of Solomon" was for three-part men's voices and piano.

Judges of this year's competition will be Dr. Ramon Meyer, director of the 42-member choral group, Dr. Lewis Pankaskie, and Dr. Wiley Housewright.

Organized in 1947, when the university became a co-educational institution, the Collegians draw their membership from all colleges and divisions of the university.

Concerts include three on the FSU campus, one each trimester, an annual appearance on the FSU School of Music television series, Music Hall, produced and distributed by the University Broadcasting Services and an annual football concert each fall with the University of Florida's men's Glee Club.

Theater Party Set

A Theater Party will precede the University production "A Man For All Seasons" from 6:15 to 7:45 p.m. Tuesday at the Faculty Club.

DON PORTERFIELD

... is the University of Georgia's second leading ground gainer with 95 yards in 15 carries for a 6.3 average. He will be instrumental in the Bulldog attack this Saturday in Athens against FSU.

Scout Report

Bulldogs Want To Upset FSU

FSU will meet its first test as a nationally ranked football power Saturday as the Seminoles travel to Athens to play the University of Georgia Bulldogs.

The Bulldogs will be trying to pull off the same kind of upset that the Tribe used against Kentucky.

A victory over FSU would give them the national recognition that's been missing this year since the graduation of outstanding quarterback Larry Rakestraw.

To beat the Seminoles the Bulldogs will have to play much better than their 2-1-1 record would indicate. This, of course, is not impossible. The Georgians will have a slight psychological edge over the Tribe. They will have the incentive of beating a nationally ranked team, and a team that has shut them out in the last two meetings.

Along with this, the Georgians will be hoping that FSU will have trouble getting mentally set for this game. It's almost impossible to get "up" for Georgia following the major upset of Kentucky.

This slight edge in spirit may not be enough to stop the Tribe. The Bulldogs will still have to depend on two halfbacks, Bob Taylor and Don Porterfield for their offensive attack.

Advance Sell-Out Predicted For USSR Raduga Dancers Program

An advance sell-out is predicted when a host of leading Russian theatrical stars perform Monday night in Westcott Auditorium at 8:30 p.m.

The Raduga Dancers, who appeared on the Ed Sullivan Show Oct. 4, is made up of the headline performers of various Russian classical and folk dancing companies, including the famous Bolshoi Ballet and the World-renowned Stanislavsky Theatre of Moscow.

Shamil Yagudin, one of the star performers of the Bolshoi Ballet in Moscow, attracted much attention from New York critics for his seeming defiance of gravity. During his dance performance he jumps seven feet into the air from an erect standing position, all with ease and grace.

The versatile program scheduled in Westcott Auditorium includes Georgian and Tartar Folk dances, classical ballet, and folk tunes from the favorite Russian instruments, the balalaika and the bayan (accordion).

Twenty-two soloists, one representing each month of the year. The girls are chosen on the basis of beauty, poise and charm.

Featured this year in the 17 by 17 Inch calendar are: Sandra Riley (ZTA), Rita Coolidge (AGD), Janet Dunn (DGD), Jo Ella Lawrence (DZ), Deanna Weber (DZ), Joanne Elliott (PF), Mary Jo Terrell (AXO), Missy Herman (KQ), Cookie Winchester (PM), Sheila Clarke (KAT), Carol Sue Mah (SSS), and Pamela Koch (XO).

Tickets are expected to be sold out in advance, according to Mrs. Kathryn Vernon of the FSU Special Events Office.

"Students are urged to pick up their tickets today as any remaining tickets will be placed on sale to the general public," said Mrs. Vernon.

In order to obtain tickets, students must have a permanent Florida I.D. card of a temporary I.D. card and the yellow certificate of registration for the current semester stamped to indicate that the $.25 sales tax has been paid.

According to Col. Jack Arnold, assistant dean of students, students presenting "unstamped" I.D. cards on Monday night will be refused tickets to the performance.

There is no charge to students for Artist Series tickets, but a reserved seat ticket must be obtained in advance of the performance. Tickets go on sale to the general public today at the main ticket office in Westcott if any are left after tickets have been distributed to students. Public tickets are $3.50.

Mrs. Vernon advised persons who have sent checks for tickets by mail to pick up tickets at the ticket office. Because of the time element, she said, tickets will not be mailed. Dress for all Artist Series events is semi-formal. Curtain time is 8:30 p.m.

Rally Set For Team

There will be an informal rally at the Tallahassee Airport to greet the FSU football team when they return from Georgia Saturday. The rally will begin at 7:30.

Ten Year Reign Ends For Nikita Khrushchev

(AP)—The era of Nikita Khrushchev has ended in the Soviet Union with an official announcement that he has been released from his jobs as Premier and Communist Party Secretary. The Tass announcement said Khrushchev requested retirement because of failing health and his age. He is 70. He is also leaving the Communist Party Presidency.

The two top jobs Khrushchev held are being divided among two lieutenants he has trusted, Leonid Brezhnev is taking the key post of Communist Party Secretary, and Alexei Kosygin is becoming Premier. The Tass announcement said Khrushchev's "release" — that was the word Tass used — was granted three weeks ago.

The average Soviet citizen figured something was in the wind when Khrushchev failed to follow his normal custom of telephoning returning cosmonauts to congratulate them. This week's orbiting of three men was a spectacular Soviet space achievement. But Khrushchev remained silent after the landing. Red China's official news agency has reported without comment the resignation of Khrushchev as head of the Soviet government and Communist Party. Khrushchev has been the major target of the Chinese Communists, who have described him as the "greatest splitter" of the International Communist Movement.

Soviet heroes of world war two have expressed the opinion in New York that Russia's peaceful co-existence policy will be continued despite the resignation of Premier Khrushchev. The four Soviet heroes were on a television show being taped for Sunday evening broadcast ("Open End") when the first news came from Moscow indicating Khrushchev had resigned.

The New York Stock Market was jolted severely by first unofficial word from Russia that Premier Khrushchev was out. The reports brought the sharpest break in stock prices since President Kennedy was assassinated on Nov. 22, 1963. After nosediving around midday, the market recovered much of its loss by the close.

The two men who are taking over the leadership of the Kremlin from Nikita Khrushchev both have been one step away from the top for the past few years.

Fifty-seven year old Leonid Brezhnev — a Communist Party

Dean of Students Harry P. Day issued a statement today concerning the latest actions taken on the Fow controversy.

"We have received the report of a committee which conducted an investigation with members of student groups responsible for the Fow work shops," stated Dr. Day.

"After consideration of all factors, we find that a few groups bear responsibility for setting the general tone of vulgarity."

The remaining groups will receive appropriate disciplinary action as a result of their involvement," concluded Day.

member of 33 years — has been regarded as Premier Khrushchev's heir-apparent for at least the past three years. And 60-year-old Alexei Nikolaevich Kosygin became a First Deputy Premier of the Soviet Union in 1960.

Brezhnev's most recent step toward the top came last July, when he relinquished his figurehead role as President of the Soviet Union to devote his full time to work within the Communist Party.

Brezhnev was graduated from an agricultural institute in 1927 and joined the ranks of the main political body. He has been known as a post-Bolshevik, post-revolution Communist who believes technological knowledge more important than revolutionary fervor.

tallurgist became a party functionary in the Ukraine. Khrushchev's home base — and since 1938, Brezhnev's career has been associated with that of the Soviet Premier.

Brezhnev joined the army during the second world war, rose to the rank of Major General and directed the work of Political Commissars who checked up on regular army officers.

After the war ended, Brezhnev was sent back to the Ukraine where he continued moving up in the party. In 1952, at the 19th Soviet Party Congress in Moscow, he became an alternate member of the enlarged Politburo — known from then on as the Presidium — which was the power of the whole Soviet structure.

Following the death of Stalin in 1953, Brezhnev was in and out of power, finally turning up as First Deputy Minister of the main political body in the Ministry of Defense — Political Commissar of the Armed Forces.

As Khrushchev rose to power, he leaned heavily on Brezhnev who returned to the ruling party Presidium. In 1956, first as a candidate member, later as a full member.

Several years later Brezhnev took over as President of the Soviet Union. But he did not limit his job to ceremonial duties as his predecessors had done. Brezhnev visited many countries as a sort of traveling salesman for his country.

Dean Day Speaks

Dean of Students Harry P. Day issued a statement today concerning the latest actions taken on the Fow controversy.

"We have received the report of a committee which conducted an investigation with members of student groups responsible for the Fow work shops," stated Dr. Day.

"After consideration of all factors, we find that a few groups bear responsibility for setting the general tone of vulgarity."

The remaining groups will receive appropriate disciplinary action as a result of their involvement," concluded Day.

Bulldogs Want To Upset FSU

FSU will meet its first test as a nationally ranked football power Saturday as the Seminoles travel to Athens to play the University of Georgia Bulldogs.

The Bulldogs will be trying to pull off the same kind of upset that the Tribe used against Kentucky.

A victory over FSU would give them the national recognition that's been missing this year since the graduation of outstanding quarterback Larry Rakestraw.

To beat the Seminoles the Bulldogs will have to play much better than their 2-1-1 record would indicate. This, of course, is not impossible. The Georgians will have a slight psychological edge over the Tribe. They will have the incentive of beating a nationally ranked team, and a team that has shut them out in the last two meetings.

Along with this, the Georgians will be hoping that FSU will have trouble getting mentally set for this game. It's almost impossible to get "up" for Georgia following the major upset of Kentucky.

This slight edge in spirit may not be enough to stop the Tribe. The Bulldogs will still have to depend on two halfbacks, Bob Taylor and Don Porterfield for their offensive attack.

Disagrees With Mering

To the Editor:

I read with some interest the statement by Student Body President John Mering, which appeared in the October 14 copy of the "Florida Flambeau."

Unless I have misread Mr. Mering's remarks and as a consequence do injustice to his position regarding the Pow Wow, it would seem that he makes four points:

(1) Some action by the University committee is necessary to clarify the purpose of the Pow Wow; (2) those who did not appreciate the skits are not sophisticated; (3) students at FSU have, in the past lacked adequate means for expression; consequently, once the pressure was removed, we could expect such conduct as was displayed this past Friday evening; (4) national folkloric groups perform on an "equal or lower level," as a result, it is reasonable that FSU students should follow in their footsteps without fear of criticism.

I have no quarrel with the first of these points, however, those remaining can and should be disposed of quickly.

First, with regard to sophistication: it is my view that many of the skits presented at the Pow Wow reflected sophistication only in the narrow sense that they were devoid of genuineness or naturalness. Certainly they did not lack simplicity nor did they suggest a worldly attitude. Perhaps it would have

Pow Wow Solution Beyond Reprimand

To the Editor:

After reading and hearing from the students about the distasteful incident that occurred at the Pow Wow Friday night I feel like I would like to offer my opinion and suggest a solution.

I am a mature student, but have been involved in what goes on in relation to the University, since I love young people and realize that they look to us who are older to form opinions that will help them in meeting the issues of life.

From what I have learned from the students, the reviewing committee, which assumed leadership for the presentations that are made on the field of the stadium, gave the student preparing the skits, permission to go ahead with the skits as the limit.

It seems that they were told that whatever they wanted to do was all right.

struck closer to the truth if Mr. Mering had suggested that much of the show appealed to the base, not to the sophisticated.

Second, since transferring to Tallahassee from the University of Wisconsin at the beginning of this school year, I have failed to note any lack of adequate means for students to express disagreement. However, if Mr. Mering would insist that this indeed is the situation, I suggest both that he review these columns more often, and that he review the policies of our student government to ascertain how they might be changed so as to render the system capable of speaking for the students. Finally, though the point is so hardly a commonplace nature as to hardly be worth repeating, perhaps each one should remind Mr. Mering that two wrongs do not make a right. Following Mr. Mering's logic to its reasonable conclusion would lead to either to moral anarchy or to a campus of sheep or to both. Indeed it seems to me that skits such as those which represent the Governor of this state as well as members of the University administration and substantial blocks of students either as effeminate or bumbling incompetents, fail to convey any sort of worldly-wide outlook, fail to demonstrate a recognizable disapproval of University policy, and fail to present to the general public a favorable image of the Seminoles.

Joe Wickel

If this is true, then the students are not entirely to blame for what was presented in bad taste. It seems to me that the solution should be beyond the reprimand of the students, and that the reviewing committee should be reviewed, searched, re-examined and those members replaced who are so deliriously indifferent to the quality of leadership they are providing the college students.

Someone we expect those who teach and learn in universities with a higher standard than the average person. Such a marvelous responsibility and opportunity for developing the minds and clean body is the rare privilege of those who lead our youth.

I am sincere in writing this letter and I hope that whoever is responsible for making changes will take this letter under advisement.

To the Editor:

This is in reply to an editorial in Monday's "Flambeau" entitled "Thinking Better Than Acceptance," and also refers to the famous parodies of this past weekend.

Being a new student here, I am astonished to find so many people with the audacity to assail my beliefs in God, and religious ideals. Where do they get their interidity?

These unbelievers seem to think that they have power in intellectual reasoning and a growing number of followers. This must be indicative of "the new morality," where some people think they are changing man's social laws and especially his attitudes and laws regarding sex. I think the significance of the parodies in Friday's pow wow is that they reflect the attitudes and thoughts of a good many students. If the students represented possess so called "puritanical" attitudes toward sex and have respect for anything, the so called "parodies" would have been completely different.

But so many had the same theme in their treatment of sex, and so many undermined a list of subjects from the governor to our band which is unquestionably sacred.

Does these parodies, and the challenges against religion one encounters at the University reflect the changing morality? Is America going the course of all other great civilizations, or are we different? If we have to be different, only a moral revolution will change an otherwise evolution life.

If individuals and professors have the right to assail my beliefs, it is only just that those of us with religious beliefs have equal time to express our viewpoints.

Just as the science and nature are based upon laws which do not change, there are laws that God has given to man to live by which do not change. The Law of God—God's laws for man to live by—does not change and has the right to assail my beliefs. It is only just that those of us with religious beliefs have equal time to express our viewpoints.

How many faculty members who found the parody of the Pow Wow disgusting have read Steinbeck? You see the truth is always harsh and as usual the ones who were stupid by the most dissented the loudest.

The only thing the Greeks should be so critical for is the fact that they went ahead and did something they were cautioned against. They have done nothing more than I'm sure of us who has judged at one time. I am sure we will be asking a laugh, but like you want only a strong and respectable FSU.

Roy Ellis

been clearly defined. I say that disbelief in a supernatural being who call God is contrary to man's ability of valid reasoning.

Those who claim to be agnostic or atheist stunted their minds and aren't facing up to reality, really they may be living lives that offend God and aren't for his greater glory.

I say that God is all loving and all just, and America may define as a civilization, but Divine Law will not change.

Those who love Him keep His commandments and manifest his glory. Those who love themselves and not the Creator who has given them life, live by their own rules.

One of the spiritual works of mercy is "to admonish the sinner" and here I state the sixth commandment which Protestants, Catholics, and Jews all believe in: "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Sexual intercourse outside of the marriage bond is a serious offense against God and even an offense to intelligent reasoning.

The real issue is that some people pretend to disbelieve, rather than face up to moral values. All religions have reason to rejoice and glad. The right way is really the hard way and incomprehensibly rewarding. God is a God of love and mercy, almighty and all just.

You Americans! Have our forefathers fought in vain to establish a civilization and have our forefathers ideals of freedom and equality? Are we going to decline like Rome, Greece, China, and all other great civilizations have declined or will a moral revolution save us from this so obvious fate? The time is now for taking action.

Agrees With SG Pres.

To the Editor:

As I read the mass of "band wagon" criticisms of the Pow Wow I became increasingly distressed, I think President Mering put it all very well when he said, "I should say that possibly the situation might indicate a basically unhealthy situation."

To me, this unhealthy situation to which he referred is the complete lack of depth, and the ability to tolerate any situation which seems to go against the grain of any individual.

The Pow Wow is a student function, primarily for students. Anyone who thinks such an event must be prepared to raise/lower their level, which ever is appropriate, in order to fully appreciate what is taken for granted here at FSU and at all colleges and universities.

The majority of us are not saints; we do have gross thoughts from time to time. At some time in our life I believe that we should be grown enough to look at, appreciate, and decipher what we see—to decide for ourselves which path of life we will choose. If we are continually shielded from adverse elements even through college, when will we be able to grow up?

Obviously many of the skits were in poor taste, if you feel that every action you hear, see or read about is taken at face value, we all know that the band practices last hours, and the majority of the student body appreciates their effort. However, this does not take away the right of any student to make critical remarks or poke fun at a band or any organization or person on this campus. Nothing at all hurts everyone. Each individual must be free to express himself as he deems necessary and proper in this campus. Nothing at all constitutes a danger to society at large.

We are not a totalitarian state. We are a people who have risen to national prominence because of free expression of our diverse ideas.

Intolerance permeates every aspect of American life, whether it be in campus, in California, or in the world. It is the complete intolerance which often accompanies youth adults as they seek to find their places in life, only to be continually rebuffed by over-protective parents who know that "standards never change."

We must not ostracize the student who are willing to stand up and speak their mind. We must respect them for they are the ones who make America truly great.

Extremism In Defense of School Spirit Is Not A Virtue

To the Editor:

In could be to the recent furor over the Pow-wow record, FSU has an exceptional academic record and a top-top football team. We have reason to be proud and right to express it. But, there are limits beyond which the mainstream of society, I'm sure liberals and conservatives alike feel as an extreme, even in the defense of school spirit, is not way build a school. Such a reaction is a

Pow Wow Underlined Need For A Campus Satire Forum

To the Editor:

The Pow Wow has served at least one purpose: it has pointed out the need of students for a no-holds-barred forum where they can satirize and criticize the follies we all see from time to time.

Nevertheless, a publicly supported institution such as ours must preserve our "public image." The two are being simultaneously met by closing down the Pow Wow to a rule such as "adults over 25 must be accompanied by a student."

We need not censor the performances, if the faculty has succeeded in instilling good taste in the students at large, that reaction is obviously bad taste, such as putting the Team at a pep rally, "fish cake," will be soundly condoned by the students. Such a reaction will far more salutary than a disciplinary action by an administrative which is in support with the student body.

Authorities Are Monastic

The Editor:
The position the University is taking on the skits held at this year's Homecoming Pow Wow has been amazing. Never before have the students of this University been treated with such lack of understanding.
Should the ones involved be put on some sort of probation or even sent to jail? The University would only represent the same again. There will be no skits because no one will dare go against the monastic attitude of the University; no one will build up for fear of upsetting the "Gods of the Towers" of Westcott, and no one will attend any dances or shows sponsored by the University as a source of contempt.
The dean didn't know what horny ears. Another thought it was vulgar to see a girl half because censored on campus just don't do those things. In short the deans decided to let in on the facts of what is going on.
I think that some of the things said at the Pow Wow were in poor taste but they are done at 90% of all college campuses in the United States and no one has ever said anything about them. Actually the skits were quite clever and brought out a satire of many irritating aspects of college life.

Girls regulations, library check outs, and "Sweetest" and "True we are not the University of Florida and that's fine; true we are not Yale or Harvard; true we are not UCLA, but we are a major college and we have a right to express ourselves.
Those skits were for the benefit of the students at the University as most functions on this campus should be. Children wouldn't understand them and adults with any sense would not go to it at least gotten up and left quietly.

I have talked to several senior members who saw the Pow Wow and they agreed that if that is what goes on then it should be brought out and they went on to say that they enjoyed it and thought that much of it was quite clever.
So, I suggest that the Deans of this University think again before they give the editors of city newspapers the right to top and trash all over their front pages.

Administration Doesn't Understand New FSU

To the Editor:
The feature article on the front page of the Flambeau yesterday concerned the "vulgarity" of the Pow Wow skits. It mentioned that the participating organizations could expect "disciplinary action."
The administration should realize that this is a coeducational institution open to all students, not just boys and not just girls. When some organizations put on their skits Friday night, they were going along with the "new reality." They put on what the greatest number wanted to see and hear.
True, there were many children present and numerous adults in the audience, and it is our responsibility as the present student body to show them all a "nice time." But we all have to be hypocrites! Do we have to alter our behavior so much and "behave like nice little girls and boys," just to get alumni good?

gross? No. The stadium there is packed each year with an audience that knows what to expect.
Is Oak Campbell Stadium ever filled up for a Pow Wow?
It really gets my goat when I go home or to another college and somebody comes out with, "FSU, the girls are girls, and the boys are too." I suppose it is my male ego that is insulted, but this wouldn't happen if the administration would wake up to the reality that this isn't a girl's school any longer.
The days are gone when the front gate was locked every night and there was a "blacklist" up for many of the U of F Romans.
If steps are taken against the organizations participating in the Pow Wow, it would only be another pansy move to make FSU a women's college again. Although my organization did not take part in the Pow Wow, I am sure that our skit would have gone along with the others in demonstrating the type of humor college students want and display today.
The skits were well exemplified John Stuart Mill's philosophy of Utilitarianism or the Greatest Happiness Principle, which states that the right act is the act which will produce the greatest amount of pleasure for the greatest number of people.
Robert W. Burnett

FLAMBEAU FORUM

Statement Was Funny Sound Meant Nothing

To the Editor:
Mr. Fleming's statement in Wednesday's Flambeau on the subject of the Pow Wow was a "tale told by a politician, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing."
It was my impression that the Pow Wow was a pep rally, the purpose of which was to build up enthusiasm for the Homecoming game on the following day. It was not my impression that the Pow Wow was an important part of the Homecoming weekend presented both for the students and the alumni.
But, Mr. Fleming states that it is an opportunity for students to express their views openly, views that might indicate an unhealthy condition here at the University. If this had been known prior to the Pow Wow, perhaps other students (a more representative sample of students) besides the few Greek malcontents that made their debut could have voiced their views as to the basically unhealthy condition here at the University.
I, personally, would have like to say a few words concerning the "fence" of the Student Government plays in our University.
I imagine that a sophisticated gathering of college students could sit and "laugh" at much worse material than was presented at the Pow Wow Friday night—if they were forced to, for one, would prefer not to.
Had I not been with a nice girl (fortunately I wasn't with one of our "cute" sorority girls) and had I been imbibing as were the performers in our "sophisticated" skits, I too must have more fully appreciated the subtle, risque comments aimed at every organization here on campus.

I understand that at other Universities the function of the Student Government is to present the views of the students on that campus, especially when they have been "continually suppressed," to the proper administrative offices. Had our Student Government been up on its duties and responsibilities, perhaps, these basically unhealthy conditions that now exist in our University would never have come about.
I agree with Mr. Merting—you should accept the responsibility that goes with such a "student council." Mr. Merting, you suggested that each of us review the situation and express our opinion, so here it is mine. If you are to take the place of the student body, I suggest that you pick a time when the students are in the right—those "few" students who expressed their views Friday night were not only in the wrong, but they picked an inappropriate occasion to express their views.
W. Doyle Gentry

To the Editor:
In Tallahassee, there is established a coed university so-called, Florida State, or has been admitted by much recent publicity as Florida State College for Women. It is ironic, that in the space and atomic age of the 20th Century, the "gender" skits of FSU are still firmly fastened to the Victorian ideals of over a century ago when the women wore high buttoned shoes and men were barefooted. There are those who have apologized for and attested to the effects of a suppressed student body's interpretations of 20th Century mores and modes at the Homecoming Pow Wow in which both members of Greek organizations and non-members participated.
The liberal presentation of ideas left some members of the audience aghast either because they were appalled at the reality of the situations and trends ubiquitous on college campuses, or else their minds were so attuned to construe only the vulgar connotations from the context of the skits performed.
In actuality, the student body of FSU has been subjected for years to pressures restricting free flow of ideas as well as free flow of actions. And, the result of this suppression was demonstrated in the first unbridled opportunity born on campus for college students to portray themselves as college students not masquerading sophists.
Of course, to promote an atmosphere of learning, regulations are essential—but not to the point where psychological damage is incurred by students. For real social and emotional evidence of the adverse affects, one might be interested in the number of students seeking help through psychological clinics due to feelings of abnormality because they are constantly in conflict with the set values of FSU.
At no other state institution in Florida are students exposed to a whole new set of behavioral patterns to be instilled, and nowhere else must a student unconsciously himself to homogeneous ideas.

The idea inferred by a particular set of those in attendance at the Pow Wow, is that FSU advocates immoral and ribald behavior. But, as the Administrators have clearly stated, practically nationwide to the press, the skits were produced, directed and performed by students and not to be charged to the credit of the Administration.
However, the challenge imposed upon the students has been whether or not we are promoting promiscuity and other activities. The fact is to the contrary, the participants in the skits were not advocates nor propagandists of this kind of conduct. They were merely, historically enacting a parody or "take-off" on life at FSU or for that matter any other university.
This situation has provided real "meat" for the cannibals who are constantly seeking college students as prey to their appetites of exploitation and implements of publicity. The accusations and insinuations made against the students at FSU are unjust and false incriminations. Semantics have also placed a widening gap between our generation and the one in power and have further intensified the problem.
Too many accomplishments which deserve much more credit and attention are scoffed over without any recognition. The situation at hand has been distorted completely out of proportion.
So, have a potential college material, FSU offers a liberal education in the trivium of rhetoric, logic and grammar. The covered spirals deceive through the hallowed halls the ghosts of FSU loom. If you're not afraid to be a student, you're not a coward. Fear-FSU is like a Mother, dear!

"Elite" Made Pow Wow Skits Abundantly Clear

To the Editor:
See Campbell Stadium alight. Tonight is the big Pow Wow. Look at the enormous crowd. The people are very excited.
Hear the team representatives speak. Hear the cheerleaders. Tomorrow they will prove where they speak. Listen to the cheers as they walk from the field.
And now the skits, presented by selected fraternities and sororities. These are fine, honorable organizations. "Their purpose is to raise the moral, educational, and social standards of their members." From their ranks come the leadership of our student body. They are the elite.
Oh, see the funny skits. So much profanity, obscenity, debauchery, and eviates. What, the children the uninitiated do not understand certain terms? Ah, the actors make them abundantly clear. Doubt is dispelled.

Fortunately, everyone is included—faculty, Marching Chiefs, cheerleaders, the football team, the governor, Greeks and Independents alike. Here one must feel neglected. The great idea the human is how full of symbolism! How clean, cute, and good natured! And so apropos to the occasion, the words, "I am so afraid-FSU is like a Mother, dear!"
The audience is very amused. Ha Ha, ha! Look, see our honored guests. See the local townspeople. Here they are very interested. What high ideals its students possess! They are very proud to be associated with it. They brought their families out tonight!
We, too, are very proud. We thank the participants for their respective performances. They have reflected great credit upon the University, its hopes, its aspirations of leadership and deserved recognition have been furthered considerably.
We look ahead to another. Strange—our faces are very red. We must have been laughing too hard. Or perhaps it is merely the brisk weather.

International Students Attend University From 43 Countries

by DEBBIE CONLEY

Foreign students are a familiar sight on most American campuses today and FSU is no exception with 164 students from 43 nations, according to Dr. John Gunmer, FSU director of international students.

The majority of international students are from Eastern countries while European countries have a large number of students enrolled, and other students are from various English-speaking countries.

Graduate status is assigned to 129 students, 30 are undergraduates, and five are special students. Math and science fields interest the majority, while English, social work, home economics and other fields follow.

Various reasons are given by students as to why they chose FSU. Michelle Harte, from Ireland, came because there are no graduate facilities in social work in her country.

Laszlo Gutay came to FSU from England after leaving his native Hungary to escape death from the Communists. Granted a special visa, he came to FSU to work. His wife, Pamela, originally from the West Indies, came from Oxford to the United States.

Ryan Henry, from Canada, was sent by his professor to work under Albert Collier, director of Oceanographic Institute. He is here under a scholarship.

Fabiola Bustamante, from Chile, applied for a scholarship in her native country and received scholarships from the American Home Economics Association and FSU.

In comparing FSU with their native educational systems, the students noted many differences in courses, student interest, and system of study.

"In Chile, a student goes directly to his major from high school, usually takes five years to get a degree and a person must take all the listed subjects instead of choosing," said Fabiola.

Michelle noted that Ireland has a semester system and FSU is more accelerated. "The student is assigned reading materials at the beginning of the term, attending the lectures and reading the assignments is left to the student entirely. Only one exam is given—the final—at the end of the year in June."

Bryan noticed the difference between FSU and Canadian student interest in off-campus activities. "We have different speakers of different viewpoints—Communists, etc.—and speak to the students."

"There are funny courses, such as Baking Science, which sound ridiculous to someone from Europe. In high school, the students take such courses and have a liberal education when they are graduated. If they want to learn to be a baker, they go to baker's school, not to the university," said Laszlo.

Many international students have an idea of what Homecoming at FSU is like, Ireland has no home coming at FSU. In Canada, it is similar to FSU. At Oxford, it has nothing to do with the undergraduates. Held in the spring or summer, Homecoming is a dinner in each college honoring the present students.

In Chile, the honored sport is basketball. A queen is elected and the celebration is for new students. The faculty and students present a show about life in the university.

CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE

Dr. Dwight L. Burton, head of the English Education Dept., spoke on "Moods in Contemporary Literature" in the first of a series of four lectures to be delivered if they were the last lectures the speakers would be giving.

'Ironic Mode Prevails' Says Dr. Burton

By KAY DELANEY
Flambeau Staff Writer

"The prevailing mode of contemporary literature is the ironic mode," Dr. Dwight L. Burton pointed out Wednesday night during the Mortar Board Last Lecture Series. Burton, head of the English Education Dept., spoke on "Moods in Contemporary Literature" in the first of a series of four lectures to be delivered if they were the last lectures the speakers would be giving.

Burton explained that "mood and form are very much related in literature today" but that more experimentation is being done in technique than in form.

Said Burton, "most people sense in our national literature of today a mood of unhappiness and anxiety. This anxiety takes many forms of expression, such as irony, melancholy, anguish, and bitterness.

"Perhaps the greatest force in contemporary literature is existentialism," Dr. Burton commented. "Its primary tenet is that existence precedes essence."

From existentialism, Burton pointed out, comes the assumption that "chance and absurdity rule human action, but there exists a definite concern for values as exemplified by works of Thomas Hardy and Nathaniel West."

Another observation made by Burton is that "There are no accepted norms of feeling or conduct," but only "complete rule of the individual." Burton defined Salinger's character, Holden Caulfield from "The Catcher in the Rye," as an example of this individualism.

From existentialism, Burton said, come the "changed concept of the hero" as seen in the works of Arthur Miller and James Baldwin.

Other developments include "an allegiance to love as a standard," interest in "personal private existence," an awareness of ugliness in the world, a lack of humor, and "a mood of romanticism."

Burton concluded that contemporary literature includes an active body of work.

Monk Speaks Monday Night

By SARA ANN SLOAT

Thubten Jigme Norbu, brother of the Dalai Lama, will speak in Ballroom C of the University Union Monday night at 7 p.m.

He will lecture on the culture and customs of Tibet. He will also present a film showing the actual escape of the Dalai Lama from Tibet.

Admission will be $5.50 for students, $1 for faculty and staff, and $1.25 for non-university. Tickets are available at the central ticket office in Westcott, and at the door the night of the performance.

As the brother of the Supreme Spiritual and Temporal Leader of Tibet, Norbu gives the first family account ever rendered in America of the solemn ceremonies and innermost sanctuaries of Tibet, including life in the Dalai Lama's palace.

He describes the Dalai Lama's dramatic escape from the Red Chinese; and gives a gripping account of his own earlier flight.

At the age of eight, after childhood years passed in shepherd life in a remote Tibetan mountain area, Norbu was recognized as the reincarnation of the far-famed Tagster and was destined to become a high-ranking monk.

He was led to the great monastery of Kumbum, where he and his family were treated with honor and endowed with a sizable inheritance. Then followed years of intensive study and training.
